A. In the same territory—no; I will have to amend that. I think that 800 per cent. increase extends farther, takes in more territory; it takes in the territory down to Texas. But that increase has been all within the decade. The increase in the number of farms of from 500 to 1,000 acres each has been about 700 per cent. in the same period. We are unfortunately situated in regard to the terminology adopted by the officials of our Census Bureau in setting forth the results of their inquiries upon this subject. They class the farms, under the head of farms, from 500 to 1,000 acres, and farms "1,000 acres and over;" but, as you will understand from what I have said, this last classification of "1,000 acres and over" includes some farms of hundreds of thousands, and even millions, of acres.

Q. That is the point that I wish to call attention to specially, the size of these enormous farms, which practically introduce the factory system into agriculture.

A. Yes, that is what they do; and my observation is that they are becoming generally prevalent; they cover very large portions of the country, I think the major portion of the country that has gone into occupation within the last fifteen years.

By Mr. GEORGE:

Q. Where do these farms of a million acres exist?

A. It might require, perhaps, some little searching to point out the particular ones.

Q. I am curious to know where, in this country, farms of a million acres can be found. Can you name the State or Territory where any such farms exist?

A. If you will give me time, I will give you the exact data hereafter. In the mean time, with your permission, I will pass to other subjects.

Q. All right. If you want time you can take it. But that is a very prominent and striking fact if it exists.

A. It is a very prominent and almost a startling fact. I can name now one very large holding in one of the Southern States by one man, a holding of some 4,000,000 of acres.

Q. Which Southern State is that in?

A. Florida. The holder is the most noted saw-maker in the United States; he lives in Philadelphia, his name is Hiram Disston, I think; he holds 4,000,000 in Florida. There is another large holding of some 3,500,000 acres in the Pan Handle of Texas. It belongs to a corporation. The corporators are individuals living in Chicago. Allow me to read from the current literature of the day, from the Chicago Tribune, a statement on this subject:

"The Northwest Texas Cattle-Raisers' Association has been in session for three days at Fort Worth. The organization has a membership of two hundred and twenty-three, who own from 1,000 to 60,000 head of cattle, and represent a grand total of 1,400,000 cattle. There are several who can boast of the ownership of from 40,000 to 60,000 head, and fourteen who lay claim to over 20,000. Among the first from the North to embark in the ranching business in Texas were the Harold Brothers, who went from Bloomington, Ill., in the fall of 1875. The aggregate of their worldly possessions amounted to $48,000, the sum they invested in cattle. To-day they are the owners of 60,000 head, and are reputed to be worth at least $1,500,000. During the season of 1883 they sold 10,000 head. The largest ranch in the State is that of Charles Goodnight, at the head of the Red River. He began buying land four years ago, securing 270,000 acres, at 35 cents per acre. In the mean time the prices advanced to $1 and $2 per acre, but he is still buying, and now controls 700,000 acres. To inclose his landed possessions 250 miles of fencing is required. The Matador Company's ranch is situated on the Pease River, and comprises 100,000 acres of land recently sold to a company of Scotch capitalists for $1,250,000."

He spoke of the way this increase of ownership is going on in the State of Texas, which is to a very great extent. Their public lands of course are not under our control, and if Texas is suffering from the increase of this evil she is only suffering in the same way that the country is at large. However, I suppose that it is superfluous to read this sort of matter to the Senate, and yet there will a time come when the Senate of the United States and the people of the United States will be dealing with this difficulty in the same way that they seek to protect themselves against the effusion of blood, and it will be well to give heed to this thing in season. This discussion and this debate will be pertinent in a century from this time, and it will attract the attentention of the American Senate after we shall have perhaps passed away, and possibly very much sooner.

The other day I sent to the desk and there was read a newspaper statement, but one which I have never seen contradicted and which I suppose to be substantially correct. It is at all events in accordance with the teachings of history in other parts of the world as well as in our own country, and I shall recall the attention of the Senate to it. This alleged evil is located in the State of Illinois and in a single county, the county of Logan. The gentleman who makes this statement is a Mr. Reynders. He says:

I spent a long time with the Scully tenants, or "renters," as they are called, in the summer of 1882. It was in Logan County, Illinois, that Scully laid the foundations of his present fortune. Immediately after the Mexican war he began buying up soldiers' homestead warrants. For these he paid extremely little, as he went to work very quietly and systematically, buying from men who either remained in the Army or returned to occupations in the large cities, which indicated their indisposition to become pioneer farmers in what was then a wild region of country. In more than one instance, it is said, he secured a 160-acre tract for $5 or $10. He has never sold an acre of all the land thus acquired. On the contrary, it has been made the means of wringing from the hard hands of a large peasant tenantry by any indirection all that their daily toil might produce above a wretched subsistence year in and year out. He is virtually as much master of about a thousand of these human toilers as the pharaohs were of the Egyptian slaves whose lives were sacrificed in building the pyramids, and their condition is little better than that of the wretched fellaheen of to-day, who are compelled to labor unceasingly through a miserable existence to provide for the extravagance of successive khédives.

Scully's rents are adjusted according to the quality of the land, but in no case are they low enough to leave the cultivators more than enough to keep body and soul together. These are mostly men with families, and without capital, who rent the land in the vain hope of being able to save enough in a few years to enable them to become purchasers of other land and establish comfortable homes. Instead of this they usually find themselves worse off at the end of five or six years than they were at the beginning, with their labor mortgaged to pay arrears of rent. Besides the rental the tenant is obliged to pay all taxes and other charges on the land, and to make his own improvements, no indemnity being allowed. In the city of Lincoln Scully has several agents to watch and report on crop prospects, secure prompt payment of rents, and see to the exact observance of the iron-clad leases. His agents make much of the assertion that Scully's rents are reduced when the crops fail. This, however, is only partially true. For every such "reduction" the tenant is charged with the deficiency and obliged to make it up in the next good season. The astute landlord does not try to extract blood from a stone.

Having been bought up in small parcels here and there, Scully's lands often adjoin farms owned by those who live on them, and the contrast is striking.

I will ask the attention of the Senate to this fact because here is the operation of this system of landlordism in direct competition with that of small ownerships, which is the system we are trying to secure to those who are to come after us by this amendment to the bill.

A squatter's shanty in Harlem is a palace compared to the squalid huts of the renters. On the other hand, the dwellings of the owners of adjoining farms are, as a rule, well-built, tasteful, and comfortable houses, that indicate the prosperous industry of the American farmer.

* * * * * * *

From his lands in Logan County alone he derives an annual rental of nearly $150,000. The pitiable condition of the people under this system is likely soon to result in decided action. While I was in the neighborhood there was no little talk of bringing forward a measure in the Legislature to forfeit the lands to the State, paying Scully a fair indemnification and allowing his tenants to become proprietors by a system of small payments extending over ten years. This is somewhat on the plan of Gladstone's land bill for Ireland, and much trouble might be avoided by adopting some such scheme before it is too late.

Some such scheme in the distant future when our population becomes dense, unless there be precautionary measures taken, will be indispensable, and particularly with reference to those lands which can only be reclaimed by irrigation, and which are so sure to fall immediately into vast ownerships if we are not attentive to our duties now.

I hope that the benefits of this amendment, which is simply an application of the principles we have already adopted in reference to the initiatory sale, may extend to the time when it will be of importance that small holdings shall be reserved in such a way that the masses of the people can have lands and homes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] as modified.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment to the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 4 and 5 of the proposed amendment strike out the words "said lands shall ever" and insert the words "the public lands of the United States shall hereafter;" so as to read:

Provided further, That none of the public lands of the United States shall hereafter be sold or held in larger bodies than 640 acres in a single ownership within the same county, unless the title thereto be derived by inheritance, which, as an express condition, shall be inserted in the original patent thereof; and breach of the condition shall render the lands liable to forfeiture to the United States; proceedings for which forfeiture shall be waived unless commenced within ten years after the act of forfeiture is committed. But if the act of forfeiture shall occur within the jurisdiction of a State, such proceedings shall be within the exclusive jurisdiction of such State.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I am not in favor of the amendment to the amendment. I was not in committee in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, and upon reflection I am convinced that it would be unwise to saddle any such amendment upon the bill.

There are certain things which all are agreed ought to be done. One of those is the repeal of the pre-emption law; another is the repeal of the timber-culture act. Then there are certain amendments of the land laws which are very much needed to simplify the practice in the General Land Office. These matters ought not to be embarrassed by new and experimental questions. I shall therefore vote against the amendment to the amendment and against the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to ask him a question on this point for information? If he is going to make some remarks I wish he would inform the Senate whether there is really any special danger that the desert lands may be acquired in large quantities. I wish to know whether the character of the lands and the character of the improvement which is to be made upon them afford any indication as to whether without the adoption of some such amendment they would or would not be likely to fall into hands where single persons or single corporations would hold large quantities of them. The Senator is familiar with those Western lands, and we who reside in the Eastern part of the country are not.

Mr. DOLPH. I am not so familiar with the workings of the desert-land law as some other members of the Committee on Public Lands and some other Senators. There are some desert lands in Eastern Oregon and Eastern Washington, but the amount is comparatively small compared to the amount in California, Arizona, Wyoming, Utah, and Idaho, and probably in Colorado. But my judgment is that the bill as it now stands, so far as desert lands are concerned, will, if it becomes a law, prevent their purchase and reclamation to any considerable extent. Such lands can not be reclaimed except by the expenditure of large sums of money. Their reclamation will require an aggregation of capital by an association of the settlers or some other association of individuals. I have an impression that if these desert lands are ever reclaimed it will be under some more liberal law than the desert-land act will be if amended as proposed by the Committee on Public Lands.

My own opinion is that the law as it now is should be permitted to stand, or that if it is amended at all it should be amended liberally with a view to the reclamation of those lands. But I am willing to save whatever can be saved of the law. I am willing to preserve it if I can, even with the amendments which have been proposed by the committee in the bill now before the Senate for consideration.

I do not believe that there is any great danger of the desert lands being accumulated in the hands of large holders. They are not the character of lands which are sought for by corporations. Corporations and persons who desire to acquire large amounts of land seek a different character of land from the desert lands. The first bill reported by the Senate Committee on Public Lands was reported——

Mr. LOGAN. Before the Senator proceeds further I should like to have him explain one point. I do not think the Senator from New Hampshire made it very clear, and I beg his pardon for making that statement. Under the desert-land act can an individual now acquire more than 640 acres by locating?

Mr. DOLPH. As I understand the law he can not. The original desert-land act which was approved March 3, 1877, contains the following proviso:

Provided, That no person shall be permitted to enter more than one tract of land, and not to exceed 640 acres, which shall be in compact form.

It has been contended that the entry was what we have termed in the bill under consideration a declaration; but the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, as I have understood, have construed that proviso in such a manner as to prevent the patenting of more than one desert-land claim to one claimant.

Mr. LOGAN. That is my understanding of the law. Then the accumulation of more than 640 acres of land in the ownership of one individual, to which the Senator from New Hampshire objected so seriously, and perhaps his objection is well founded, can only be acquired by avoiding the law, as I understand it, by purchasing and buying up from people who have taken their claim, as they call it, under the desert-land act. Is not that true?

Mr. DOLPH. It can not be acquired at all. I understand that the officers of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior have always held that under the desert-land act each claimant was restricted to one entry.

Mr. LOGAN. That is my understanding.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senators will permit me, right at that point is where the misunderstanding occurs. Both the present law, and this bill, if it becomes a law without the amendment which I have offered, will prohibit the acquiring in the original title as it comes from the United States more than 640 acres; but the present law and the bill without the amendment will permit the man as soon as he has perfected his title to sell it, and the same purchaser may buy all the titles in the whole country, and therefore the accumulation will occur. My amendment applies to the future.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand it perfectly. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator from New Hampshire. The way that any one individual acquires more than 640 acres of desert land under the law now is by purchase from those persons who have located the land and acquired title. That is the only way, is it not?

Mr. BLAIR. Unless by some fraud.

Mr. LOGAN. I am speaking of acquiring land properly. Then, when you provide in your amendment that no person shall own more than 640 acres of land, is it not very easy for an individual to have a dozen persons connected with him in an organization and each one acquire 640 acres of land, and in that way get the land in the hands of a corporation just as easily as they can to-day? Would your amendment prevent that?

Mr. BLAIR. Unless it is fraudulently evaded, it would.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg pardon, I speak of no fraud under your amendment. There is a provision in your amendment that no one person shall own more than 640 acres of land, but you do not provide that he shall not be associated with anybody else. An association of fifty men may locate, each individual, under your amendment, 640 acres of land, and make a company in that way, holding the land, not in the corporation, but each individual holding the land, and then after the title is acquired each individual may lease it to the corporation for a hundred years. Your amendment does not amount to a row of pins so far as prohibiting that thing is concerned. It does not amount to anything. It only amounts to a declaration against individuals purchasing land and against men owning land. It is only an entering-wedge to a declaration of a different character, for it does not inhibit or prohibit except on its face, because there are many ways by which men could acquire land under it.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator if he would approve of a provision against leasing also?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; I assure the Senator I would not.

Mr. BLAIR. Then why does the Senator object to doing something? He is not willing to do anything; yet the objection is under the guise of friendship for the measure itself.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator had better take that back. There is no guise of friendship. I do not act in that way, sir. I was only suggesting that your amendment amounted to nothing except a declaration against individuals owning property, because under that amendment I could myself take twenty men and have each one locate 640 acres of land, and when they got it and acquired their title I could lease every acre of the land from them for ninety-nine years and hold it. I was only suggesting that to show that this thing of being so anxious to do something to satisfy people and to get up a hue and cry against individuals, unless a man has genius enough to mold a proposition that conforms to his ideas he had better let it alone.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator may be quite right——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] has the floor.

Mr. DOLPH. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator permit me to go on for a moment?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Illinois may be quite right that no one should make any effort to prevent an evil. That may be all true. The Senator is apart from the fact if he imagines that this difficulty in regard to leases was first suggested to the Senator from New Hampshire by his honorable and distinguished and very intelligent self. It is a difficulty that I have thought of.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. BLAIR. And I have thought that even what has been attempted here would not be obtained, and it was not worth while to trouble very much more in the effort to perfect the amendment in that direction. The Senator would have heard, if he had been present a few moments ago, the suggestion that these difficulties were to be developed in the future; that undoubtedly this provision, if it should be adopted, could be in many ways evaded, but that under the operation of the law itself, if the bill shall become a law, there could be no acquisition of title in less than three years, and meanwhile observation and thought might perfect the law or result in the enactment of new provisions which should anticipate every possible evasion. If in a general provision declaratory of the sense of Congress, that these lands should be held and occupied in smaller holdings, an indorsement of that principle could be obtained by a declaration of this sort in this measure, it would not be very difficult hereafter to perfect a measure which should carry out the real intent of Congress.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I sympathize with the object sought to be accomplished by the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, but undoubtedly the same reason would hold good for limiting the future ownership of the agricultural public lands that exists for limiting the future ownership of these desert lands. I think that the whole subject of the limitation of ownership, if it is to be acted upon at all by Congress, ought to receive more consideration than we have given or can give to the subject now; and I am myself opposed to putting any amendment of the kind upon the present bill.

As I said before, we are all agreed upon certain things which ought to be done, among which is the repeal of the pre-emption law and the timber-culture act, and these should not be embarrassed by this amendment.

The original bill for the repeal of the pre-emption and the timber-culture acts was reported on the 1st day of February, 1886. It was Senate bill 1296. After that bill was reported numerous suggestions were received by the committee and by members of the committee from various sources, among others from persons familiar with the land laws in the Western States.

Among other communications I received on the 13th of March a letter from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting a copy of Senate bill 1296, which was the original bill reported by the committee, with several proposed amendments to the bill marked upon a copy of it in red ink. I also received a communication of the same date from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting a copy of Senate bill 1415, a bill which I had not previously seen, which was introduced by the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], with a similar letter suggesting various amendments. As I design to have the letters of the Secretary of the Interior in regard to both bills read for information, I will ask to have Senate bill 1415 printed in the RECORD in this connection. I shall not ask to have it read at this time, as I suppose it has been read.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the bill?

Mr. DOLPH. It is a bill to amend the desert-land act.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us hear it read then.

Mr. DOLPH. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

A bill (S. 1415) to promote the reclamation of the desert lands of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for any citizen of the United States, or any person of requisite age who may be entitled to become a citizen and who has filed his declaration of intention to become such, and on payment in advance of 25 cents per acre, to file a declaration, under oath, with the register and the receiver of the land district in which any desert land is situated and over which the public surveys have been extended, that he intends to reclaim a tract of such desert land, not exceeding one section, by conducting water upon said land, and so as to thoroughly irrigate and reclaim the same within a period of three years thereafter, and in the manner and within the times hereinafter provided:

Provided, however, That the right to the use of water by the person so conducting the same on or to any tract of desert land of 640 acres or less shall depend on bona fide prior appropriation; and such right shall not exceed the amount of water actually appropriated and necessarily used for the purpose of irrigation and reclamation as herein provided; and all surplus water over and above such actual appropriation and use, together with the waters of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water-supply upon the public lands and not navigable, shall be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes, subject to existing rights. Said declaration shall describe particularly said section of land, or legal subdivision thereof, according to the lines of United States surveys. At the time of filing the declaration the party shall also file a map of said land, which shall exhibit a plan showing the mode of contemplated irrigation, and which plan shall be sufficient to thoroughly irrigate and reclaim said land and prepare it to raise ordinary agricultural crops in every part thereof, and shall also show the source of the water to be used for irrigation and reclamation; and said declaration shall show that said applicant has a ditch or water right or privilege, or an interest therein, sufficient to irrigate and reclaim said land as herein provided; and any person otherwise qualified may make entry for a tract of desert land, not exceeding a section, who owns such water-ditch, water-right, or privilege, or an interest therein sufficient to thoroughly irrigate the same. Persons taking up separate sections or fractional parts of sections of desert lands may associate together in the construction of canals and ditches for irrigating and reclaiming all of said tracts, and may file a joint map or maps showing their plan of intended improvements.

SEC. 2. That no land shall be patented to any person under this act unless he or his assignors shall have expended in the necessary irrigation and reclamation thereof, by means of main canals and branch ditches, at least $3 per acre of the whole tract reclaimed and patented, in the manner following:

Within one year after making application for such tract of desert land, and filing his map as aforesaid, the party so applying shall expend not less than $1 per acre in the necessary irrigation and reclamation of said tract, in the construction of main or branch ditches to or upon the same; and he shall in like manner expend the sum of $1 per acre during the second and also during the third year thereafter, until the full sum of $3 per acre is expended in the construction of canals and ditches to irrigate and reclaim said tract of desert land. Said party shall file, during each year, with the register and receiver, a map or plan showing the progress of said improvements, and shall prove each year, by the affidavits of two or more credible witnesses, that the full sum of $1 per acre has been expended in such necessary improvements during such year and during each year since filing the application therefor. If any party who has made such application shall fail during any year to file the plan and testimony aforesaid, it shall be the duty of the register and receiver to cancel his application; and such lands shall revert to the Government of the United States, and the 25 cents advance payment shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 3. That in all cases where desert lands have heretofore been taken up under the law for the sale of desert land, and the entries thereof have not been canceled or abandoned, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall give notice to each locator thereof to file within ninety days thereafter, with the register and the receiver of the local land office, a map or plan of any improvements commenced or projected for the necessary irrigation and reclamation of the land so taken up, the progress made in such irrigation, the source of water-supply, and other particulars herein required in case of an original application, the same to be substantiated by the affidavits of at least two credible witnesses. If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, from the showing thus made in any case, that the party thus taking up said desert land is not in good faith proceeding to irrigate and reclaim the same, or that he has no ditch or water right or privilege, or interest therein, sufficient to irrigate it, or has not expended in the necessary works to irrigate it at least $1 per year for any part of three years elapsing since the date of his entry, he shall order the cancellation of said entry, and restore said land to the public domain. In case any desert land shall have been suspended, such suspension shall be removed, and notice shall be sent as in other cases, and proof shall be required that the parties claiming the same were diligently engaged in necessary works of reclamation at the date of suspension; and if the suspension was made after the lapse of a year after entry, proof shall be made that at least $1 per year per acre had been expended before a suspension, and on such proof being made the time of suspension shall not be included in estimating time for any of the purposes of this act: Provided, That expenditures made during the period of suspension shall be applied in satisfaction of the annual expenditure required by this act. The annual proofs required by this act in cases of new entries shall be made by parties claiming under former entries: Provided, That the proof made under the notices aforesaid shall suffice for the year in which such proofs are made. In case of failure to make such proofs annually thereafter, the entries of all persons defaulting therein shall be canceled. Any witness in making any proof, or any applicant making any affidavit or oath required by this act, who swears falsely to any material matter contained therein, the said false swearing being willful and corrupt, shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall be punished by imprisonment of not more than five years nor less than one year, and by a fine of not more than $1,000.

SEC. 4. That at any time after filing the declaration, and within the period of three years thereafter, upon making satisfactory proof to the register and the receiver of the reclamation of said land to the extent and cost and in the manner aforesaid, and substantially in accordance with the plans herein provided for, and upon payment to the receiver of the additional sum of $1 per acre for said land, a patent shall issue therefor to the applicant or his assigns.

SEC. 5. That all lands, exclusive of timber lands, and mineral lands which will not without irrigation produce some agricultural crop, shall be deemed desert lands within the meaning of this act, which fact shall be ascertained by the proof of two or more credible witnesses under oath, whose affidavits shall be filed in the land office of the district in which said tract of land may be situated.

SEC. 6. That this act shall only apply to and take effect in the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, New Mexico, and Dakota; and the determination of what may be considered desert land shall be subject to the decision and regulation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. DOLPH. I now ask to have a communication read which relates to the bill which has just been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The communication will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, March 13, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the copy of Senate bill 1415, submitted to me for examination and comment.

I have caused the copy to be modified by certain erasures and interlineations, with a view to making it consistent with other public land laws and long-standing practice under them, its several parts consistent with each other, and the whole unambiguous and complete, without, however, interfering with what seems to be the policy of the bill. The majority of these changes will, I think, commend themselves to your judgment without discussion; and as to the remainder, the following are my reasons for suggesting the modifications indicated.

Section 1 (page 1, line 14): The existing desert-land law does not in terms provide for an "entry," and therefore the Land Department has been compelled, in administering it, to treat the "filing" as an entry. It is better that an entry should be expressly provided for. The copy of the bill has been corrected throughout so as to conform to this provision, and at the same time so as to refer to filings under existing law (mentioned in section 3 of the bill) as "claims" or "applications."

Section 4 (page 6, line 8): Existing law does not in terms provide for "contests" against desert-land claims, and therefore the Land Department has been compelled to allow them on general principles. I think it better that they should be expressly provided for. The method of contest provided in the homestead law is excellent, well understood, and well adapted to this or any other class of public land claims.

As to the policy of the bill as drawn, I must express my approval of the provisions requiring plans and proof of reclamation from time to time, which appear to have been intended to and doubtless will remove one of the chief defects in the existing law, namely, the want of adequate provision for enforcing the work of reclamation. I think, also, that the provision limiting entry to surveyed lands is an improvement on the present law.

But, in my judgment, other provisions in this bill are impolitic, and still others might be added by way of improving its policy. These I will indicate in their order.

1. The bill as drawn permits more than one claim or entry by the same person, thus departing from the existing law. I think that, as the area of the public domain decreases, the policy of limiting the right of entry, heretofore and for years deemed advisable in nearly all the land laws, should be all the more carefully maintained.

2. The right of entry is limited (section 1, lines 35 to 38) to those who already have "a ditch or water right or privilege, or an interest therein." I am at a loss to understand the necessity or propriety of this provision, which seems to be repeated in lines 38 to 42. It would appear to have a tendency to throw the chief control of the desert lands of the country into the hands of wealthy ditch and canal owners, to the detriment of the interests of the poorer classes of our people.

3. The same policy of favoring these rich corporations appears again in sections 2 and 4, which by implication authorize unlimited assignments prior to final proof and entry and the concentration of large bodies of land in their hands. Under the first desert-land act, which did not limit an individual to one entry, a tract of 150,000 acres in California thus passed into the hands of one person or company. Such a policy favors speculation in the public domain, induces these companies to hire persons to file claims with a view to transfer to them, and enables them to hold the lands at speculative prices. Hence I think it a bad policy, and suggest that the law should forbid all contract or sale of the land before final entry, except for such public purposes as are indicated in section 2288, Revised Statutes, and as indicated below. If assignment prior to final entry is to be authorized, however, it should be done by express words, and judicious safeguards should be thrown around it.

4. I think that a provision should be inserted in the bill limiting final entry to citizens of the United States, as is the requirement of the homestead law.

5. I think that a provision should be added requiring proof of actual cultivation and the raising of crops prior to final entry, and that to that end the time within which final entry may be made should be extended from three to five years. Under this bill, as under existing law (as construed by the Land Department), the claimant may prepare all the means of reclamation, without actually reclaiming the land, and thereby defeat the primary purpose of the law.

6. I think that it would be good policy to add a provision allowing the right of entry upon 640 acres of desert land under section 2289 of the homestead law, upon complying with all the requirements of said law, except that residence might be required after one year, and also with those of the desert-land law, except payment for the land. Such a provision appears in section 3 of Senate bill 1296, though more elaborately than would be required here, to which, as amended by my direction, I give my approval.

7. I think that a provision might well be inserted allowing claimants to pledge their lands to ditch and canal owners as an inducement to and security for them to build canals and ditches and to sell water or water rights, and yet without impairing the title of the United States in any tract or claim which may be subsequently forfeited under the law. This would induce our poorer citizens to take up lands, tend to remove the desire of canal companies to own the land, and promote the earlier reclamation of large tracts of our domain where there are no natural supplies of water, and which must depend on some great canal for reclamation.

8. I think that it is advisable to add a provision limiting the right of entry to persons who have not filed claims under some other law of the United States, and to require an oath to said effect to be made at date of application and of final entry. As our public domain decreases, it would seem to be good policy to distribute the benefits of the land system to the greatest number. Under existing laws a person may make claim after claim of the various kinds allowed, and thus settlement or entry for merely speculative purposes is encouraged, and the settler who has not had the benefit of either law is often excluded from the bounty which was intended for him.

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

Hon. JOSEPH N. DOLPH,
Public Lands Committee, United States Senate.

Mr. DOLPH. In this connection I wish to read, and shall ask afterward to have the whole communication read, an extract from the other letter of the Secretary of the Interior to which I referred, a letter of the same date relating to Senate bill 1296, the first bill reported by the committee. On page 5 of the letter I find the following:

I am very doubtful of the expediency of the provision of section 3—

That is section 3 of the bill first reported by the committee—which limits the disposal of desert lands to homestead settlers, and in quantities not exceeding 320 acres. On the contrary, I have approved Senate bill 1415, with certain amendments, in a communication of even date herewith addressed to you. While I think that the homestead law may very properly be applied to desert lands, with the reclamation of the entire tract, however, as suggested in said communication, I nevertheless believe that the existing system of disposal by sale, as proposed to be amended by Senate bill 1415, should be retained.

Mr. WALTHALL. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. WALTHALL. I think it would be as well if the entire communication from which the extract has just been read should be itself read.

Mr. DOLPH. I am going to have it read.

Mr. WALTHALL. It should be read in order that the Senate may understand the position of the Secretary of the Interior as he defines it himself. I ask the Senator to have the entire communication read.

Mr. DOLPH. I stated to the Senate that I intended to have the entire communication read, but I desire now to state while upon the question of the desert-land act that the Senate committee upon receiving the communications to which I referred and other suggestions reconsidered the whole question, and took up these two bills, the bill which had been previously reported by the committee and the desert land bill introduced by the Senator from Nevada, with the amendments which had been suggested by the Secretary of the Interior, and went through them both. Some of the amendments were adopted. Others were not. Among the suggestions which were not adopted by the committee were several of those concerning the provisions of the bill which relate to the management of the General Land Office, but the objections made to the bill to amend the desert-land act were in the main obviated by the committee.

The first objection was that the bill as introduced permitted more than one claim or entry by the same person. If that has not been obviated already it will be done by an amendment which I am authorized by the committee to offer at the proper time. Objection was also made that the bill limited the right of entry to those who already had a ditch or water right or privilege, or an interest therein. That provision was stricken out of the bill. A provision recommended by the Secretary, and which was contained in the original bill reported by the committee, that final entry should be limited to citizens of the United States, was also adopted, and the bill was amended in that particular. The suggestion that cultivation of the land should be required was in part adopted, and it was provided in the bill reported by the committee that at least one-eighth of the land should be under cultivation before patent was obtained. The suggestion that the claimants should be allowed to pledge their lands to ditch companies was not adopted. I may say that in the main the suggestions of the Secretary and the amendments of the desert-land act proposed by him were adopted. Yesterday the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] read a communication to himself from the Commissioner of the General Land Office——

Mr. WALTHALL. Would it not be in proper order now to read the communication from the Secretary of the Interior from which the Senator from Oregon just read an extract?

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to designate the order in which my remarks shall be presented, but still I have no objection; the communication may be read at this time.

Mr. WALTHALL. I think, as the communication has been commented on, that the communication itself should be read.

Mr. DOLPH. I am not commenting on it any further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon desire to have the communication read?

Mr. DOLPH. Yes; let it be read as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, March 13, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of Senate bill 1296, referred to me for examination and comment.

I have caused said copy to be modified by certain erasures and interlineations, to the end that, without change of what appears to be its policy, it may be consistent, complete, unambiguous, and comformed to other public-land laws and to the well-established practice under them. I think that the majority of these amendments will commend themselves to you without an explanation, and as to the remainder the following are my reasons in brief:

Section 1, page 1: This amendment causes the section to apply only to the pre-emption law, section 2299, which is part of the homestead law, being included in the general clause interlined at line 5, and section 2301, also a part of the homestead law, being repealed in section 11 of the bill. Section 2275 is inserted, because it is amended by section 4 of the bill.

Section 1, page 2: Application of the provision in lines 16 to 22 should not be limited to claims already filed, because this act extends the right of pre-emption to June 30, 1886. The "date of application for the confirmation," &c., is inserted in order to make the provision more definite. The words "after final entry" are added, because it is presumed, from the recognition of the prohibition against sale before entry in section 6 of the bill and from the use of the words "innocent purchasers," that it was not the intention to condone a fraudulent sale of the land.

Section 2, page 3: Section 2317, Revised Statutes, though treated by the Department as impliedly repealed by the timber-culture act of 1878, I think should be repealed in terms.

Section 3, pages 4 and 5: As this section purports to grant homestead rights in desert lands, it has been amended so as to conform to the homestead law. The right of contest is provided for, which I regard as a highly important provision. At the end of line 44 is inserted a clause providing a presumption of residence, &c., for the reason that residence, &c., for five years after entry must be proved (line 32), and yet need not be begun (line 38) for a year after entry. These provisions in the bill are modeled on the homestead law (sections 2291 and 2297, Revised Statutes), and this inconsistency between them has been a source of trouble in applying the law to a variety of cases.

Section 7, pages 7 and 8: As this section purports to grant homestead rights in mountainous land, the amendments are made for the purpose of adapting it to the provisions of the homestead law and the settled practice thereunder.

Section 8, pages 9 and 10: The words "ninety days" in line 4 are changed to "two years," because the latter is the period mentioned in line 25, and I think it altogether better than said shorter period. In line 16 the words "after final entry" are inserted, because the law (recognized in section 6 of the bill) forbids sale prior to final entry, and hence the vendee before such entry can not be "a bona fide purchaser."

To the policy of the bill I take no exception, saving those hereinafter indicated.

1. I can not approve of the provision in section 1, lines 22 to 27. It has always been a matter of grave doubt whether Congress intended to allow a pre-emptor to take a homestead, or a homestead claimant to acquire a pre-emption. The Land Department has, however, interpreted existing statutes as not forbidding these double entries; and the result has been the encouragement of speculative settlements, and a perfunctory compliance or fraudulent non-compliance with the law. For these reasons, and because its expediency has always been questioned, and because the area of our public domain is fast decreasing, and the time has certainly come when it is good policy to extend the benefits of the public land laws to the largest number of persons, I think the double entry herein provided for is injudicious. Further, as the provision stands, it applies only to homesteaders heretofore claiming, and I see no sound reason for discriminating against those who may claim hereafter.

2. For reasons just above stated I favor the insertion of a provision in this bill prohibiting a person who has acquired title under either the donation, pre-emption, homestead, timber-culture, timber-and-stone-land, desert-land, or mountainous-land law, or under any foreign grant, from filing a claim or acquiring title under any other of the said laws. Under existing statutes a person may go the rounds of all these laws, filing claim after claim, with an eye single to speculation, and often to the exclusion of settlements by other persons who have acquired title under none of them.

3. I am very doubtful of the expediency of the provision of section 3, which limits the disposal of desert lands to homestead settlers, and in quantities not exceeding 320 acres. On the contrary, I have approved Senate bill 1415, with certain amendments, in a communication of even date herewith addressed to you. While I think that the homestead law may very properly be applied to desert lands, with the reclamation of the entire tract, however, as suggested in said communication, I nevertheless believe that the existing system of disposal by sale, as proposed to be amended by Senate bill 1415, should be retained.

4. Section 7 of the bill provides for entry "as a homestead" of a new class of lands denominated "mountainous." I approve of the application of the homestead system to such lands, if it be feasible. But I may suggest that, as mountainous land is described as "so mountainous and rough that it can not be plowed and cultivated," such land would appear to be rather unsuitable for permanent residence and for a home. The greater part of said lands are probably timbered, and the timber-and-stone-land act of June 3, 1878, has provided for their sale at $2.50 per acre.

5. I do not perceive any good reason for amending the homestead law, as in section 5, so as to make women, not heads of families, eligible for entry at the age of eighteen years. This is a departure from the policy of all prior land laws, and is not demanded by public sentiment or desirable for any cause, so far as I am aware.

6. Section 8 provides a two years' limitation for contests against or inquiries into the validity of final pre-emption and homestead entries. I think that this provision might with propriety be extended to all final entries or locations under the public land laws.

7. The provision in section 8, lines 17 to 22, requiring judicial proceedings to cancel a final entry, I totally disapprove of for the following reasons: First, it is a radical departure from the letter and the spirit of all former land laws; second, it assumes that title passes out of the United States by an entry or location, whereas both the Department and the courts have almost invariably held to the contrary; third, it divests the Land Department of a jurisdiction over entries which it has always exercised, which does and of right ought to belong to it until the issue of patent, and for the exercise of which adequate quasi-judicial machinery has been or may be devised; fourth, it will provoke a multiplicity of suits, since it contemplates a complete trial in the Land Department and another in the courts, with the result of an increase of expense both to the claimant and to the Government; fifth, it will prolong controversies over the issue raised, often for several years, whereas the preliminary trial, with the appeals, must also usually consume one or more years, and it will thus tie up the land for an unnecessarily long period in the hands of persons adjudged by the Department to have entered by fraud, and to the great and often irreparable damage of other and bona fide adverse claimants; sixth, it will result in flooding the courts with the already great quantity of contested entries, whose number will be vastly augmented by the resistence of those fraudulent entrymen who now never take an appeal when their wrongdoings have been exposed; seventh, it will discourage the institution of contests, for it will create delays and finally take the conduct of the cases away from the contestants, who are under existing laws the best safeguards against fraudulent entries, which are so readily made by reason of the ex parte proceedings at final proof; eighth, it is opposed to sound policy, for the reason that the surest guarantee of bona fide settlement and entry is facility of contest, followed by a swift, sure trial, and a summary cancellation upon proof of the fraud.

I am of opinion that this provision, which would be an incentive to and a protector of fraud, should be eliminated, and that instead thereof the following provision should be inserted: "The Commissioner shall suspend the issue of patent, and hold the entry or location for cancellation, with right of appeal to the Secretary of the Interior; and if appeal be not taken as prescribed by the regulations, or if the Secretary should affirm the decision of the Commissioner, the entry shall be canceled, and the land and all moneys paid therefor shall be forfeited to the United States."

8. I decidedly disapprove of the provision in section 11 repealing the act of March 3, 1879 (20 Statutes, 472). Said act, by providing for public notice of intention to make final proof and entry, is almost the only check upon the consummation of secret and fraudulent claims. Its enactment was the result of long experience, and I believe it to be in every sense effective, while it is not ordinarily detrimental to the interests of persons who are acting in good faith.

9. I also disapprove of the provision in section 1, lines 16 to 22, confirming all pre-emption entries heretofore made on proof of sale and in the absence of adverse claims.

It condones all such fraudulent claims in the past, even those where the question has been adjudicated and the entries legally canceled, and it invites new frauds in the future by providing such a precedent. It does not limit the sales to those made prior to that act, but invites every fraudulent pre-emptor to make a swift conveyance of his claim, pretended or otherwise, and evade the penalty of the law. Its evident purpose is, however, not so much the relief of entrymen as of their assignees, of whom, it is notorious, there is a large number who have got into their hands great tracts of lands by means of the grossest frauds and perjuries, which they have aided and abetted. If the provision is made to apply to sales made before final entry, it would be a condonation of another class of frauds in both vendor and vendee. If the cases to be affected by it were few in number, or of unexpected hardship, there might be some excuse for such a provision; but in fact they are numerous, and the hardship rests deservedly and almost wholly on the speculators, who have evaded the law by inducing ignorant men or their own servants to settle on lands under a pretense, to swear falsely to their bona fides at date of entry, and theretofore or thereafter to convey to them. Such a provision is, in my judgment, wholly indefensible.

Very respectfully,

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

Hon. JOSEPH N. DOLPH,
Public Lands Committee, United States Senate.

Mr. WALTHALL. Now, with the permission of the Senator from Oregon, I ask that Senate bill 1296, which I understand to be the bill referred to in that communication, shall be printed in the RECORD with the communication.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the bill referred to will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill is as follows:

A bill (S. 1296) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That section 2299 and section 2301, and chapter 4 of title 32, excepting sections 2276, 2283, 2286, and 2288, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, are hereby repealed: Provided, however, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the 1st day of July, 1886, may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed; that all entries heretofore made under the pre-emption laws, on which final proof and payment have been made, and to which there are no adverse claims, and which have been sold to innocent purchasers, shall be confirmed and patented upon presentation of satisfactory proof to the proper department officer of such sale: And provided further, That any person who has not heretofore had the benefit of the pre-emption law, and who has failed, from any cause, to perfect title to a tract of land heretofore entered by him under the homestead law, may make a second homestead entry in lieu of the pre-emption privilege hereby repealed; but this provision shall not apply to persons who shall perfect title to lands under the pre-emption or homestead laws under proceedings already initiated: And provided further, That all outstanding certificates of deposit on account of surveys heretofore issued under the provisions of sections 2401, 2402, and 2403 of the Revised Statutes, and acts supplemental thereto, shall be receivable as cash (except for fees and commissions), in the disposal of public lands, at the land offices at which such certificates are now receivable in commutation of homestead and pre-emption rights: And provided further, That all certificates heretofore issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office of soldiers, or the widows of such, or their minor children, under section 2306 of the Revised Statutes, may be located by the original beneficiaries, their heirs, legal representatives, or assigns, and upon such location patents shall issue in the name of the locator.

SEC. 2. That an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to encourage the growth of timber on the Western prairies,'" approved June 14, 1878, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the 1st day of July, 1886, may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 3. That an act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, approved March 3, 1877, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1. That it shall be lawful for any citizen of the United States, or any person of requisite age who may be entitled to become a citizen, and who has filed his declaration to become such, to file a declaration, under oath, with the register and the receiver of the land district in which any desert land is situated, that he intends to reclaim a tract of desert land not exceeding one half-section, by conducting water upon the same, within the period of five years thereafter: Provided, however, That the right to the use of water by the person so conducting the same on or to any tract of desert land of 320 acres shall depend upon bona fide prior appropriation; and such right shall not exceed the amount of water actually appropriated and necessarily used for the purpose of irrigation and reclamation; and all surplus water over and above such actual appropriation and use, together with the water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply upon the public lands, and not navigable, shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes, subject to existing rights. Said declaration shall describe particularly said half-section of land, if surveyed, and if unsurveyed shall describe the same as nearly as possible without a survey. At or after the expiration of the period of five years after filing said declaration, upon making satisfactory proof to the register and the receiver of the reclamation of not less than one-half of said tract of land in the manner aforesaid and that he or she is a citizen of the United States, and has for such period of five years resided upon and cultivated said tract, and that no portion of the same has been alienated except as in section 2288 of the Revised Statutes, a patent for the same shall be issued to him or her: Provided, That the party filing upon the lands under this section shall make his residence upon the same within twelve months after such filing, which residence shall thereafter be continuous; and any failure to reside upon said lands thereafter for a period of more than six months shall work a forfeiture of all rights under said filing and settlement: Provided further, That no person shall be permitted to enter more than one tract of land and not to exceed 320 acres, which shall be in compact form.

"SEC. 2. That all lands, exclusive of timber lands and mineral lands, which will not without irrigation produce some agricultural crop, shall be deemed desert lands within the meaning of this act, which fact shall be ascertained by proof of two or more credible witnesses under oath, whose affidavits shall be filed in the land office in which said tract of land may be situated.

"SEC. 3. That this act shall only apply to and take effect in the States of California, Oregon, Colorado, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, New Mexico, and Dakota; and the determination of what may be considered desert land shall be subject to the decision and regulation of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That this act shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued under said act, but all bona fide claims heretofore lawfully initiated may be perfected, upon due compliance with the provisions of said act, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed."

SEC. 4. That section 2275 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"Where settlement with a view to pre-emption or homestead has heretofore been made, and where settlement with a view to homestead shall hereafter be made, before the survey of the lands in the field, which are found to have been made on sections 16 or 36, those sections shall be subject to the pre-emption or homestead claim of such settler; and if they, or either of them, have been or shall be reserved or pledged for the use of schools or colleges in the State or Territory in which the lands lie, other lands of like quantity are appropriated in lieu of such as may be patented to pre-emptors or homestead settlers; and other lands are also appropriated to compensate deficiencies for school purposes where sections 16 or 36 are fractional in quantity, or where one or both are wanting by reason of the township being fractional, or from any natural cause whatever."

SEC. 5. That section 2289 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2289. Every person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years if a male, or at the age of eighteen years if a female, and is a citizen of the United States, or who has filed his declaration of intention to become such as required by the naturalization laws, shall be entitled to enter one quarter-section, or a less quantity, of unappropriated public lands of the minimum price of $1.25 per acre, or 80 acres or less of such unappropriated lands the price of which has been enhanced to double the minimum price, or $2.50 per acre, to be located in a body in conformity to the legal subdivisions of the public lands, and after the same have been surveyed; and every person owning and residing on land may, under the provisions of this section, enter other land lying contiguous to his land, which shall not, with the land so already owned and occupied, exceed in the aggregate 160 acres."

SEC. 6. That section 2288 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2288. Any person who has already settled on the public lands, either by pre-emption or by virtue of the homestead law, or any amendments thereto, and any person who shall hereafter settle on the public lands by virtue of the homestead law, or any amendments thereto, shall have the right to transfer, by warranty against his own acts, any portion of his pre-emption or homestead for church, cemetery, or school purposes, or for the right of way of railroads, canals, or ditches for irrigation or drainage across such pre-emption or homestead; and the transfer for such public purposes shall in no way vitiate the right to complete and perfect the title to their pre-emptions or homesteads."

SEC. 7. That any person entitled to enter a homestead under the provisions of chapter 5 of the Revised Statutes shall, by complying with all the provisions of said chapter relating to the entry of homesteads, be entitled to enter as a homestead one half-section or less of mountainous land, as defined by this section. All lands, exclusive of mineral lands, which are so mountainous and rough that they can not be plowed and cultivated shall be deemed mountainous lands within the meaning of this section, which fact shall be ascertained by proof of two or more credible witnesses, under oath, whose affidavits shall be filed in the land office at which the lands are subject to sale. The Secretary of the Interior may provide for cross-examination of such witnesses, and for the production of proof of the United States, before the register and the receiver as to the character of the lands sought to be entered; but the production of such proof shall not preclude the Secretary from requiring other and further evidence as to the character of said lands at the time of making final proof: Provided, That this act shall only apply to and take effect in the States of California, Oregon, Colorado, and Nevada and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, and New Mexico; and the determination of what may be considered mountainous land shall be subject to the decision and regulation of the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That any 40-acre tract of the public lands three-fourths of which is mountainous land, as defined in this section, shall be deemed, for the purposes of this act, as mountainous land.

SEC. 8. That in all cases under the pre-emption and homestead acts all contests or protests on the part of the Government or any individual concerning the land to be entered shall be instituted within ninety days after the duplicate receiver's receipt is issued, and not afterwards: Provided, That whenever it shall appear upon the face of the papers returned to the Commissioner's office that a clerical error has been committed, said Commissioner shall have power to suspend such entry, upon proper notification to the claimant, through such local land office, until such error has been corrected: Provided further, That after final proof of the claimant and the issuing of the duplicate receiver's receipt, if it shall come to the knowledge of the Commissioner, before the patent has issued for the same, that fraud has entered into the title so acquired by the claimant, unless it shall appear that the land has been sold and conveyed to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, the Commissioner shall suspend the issuing of the patent for the same, and file with the United States Attorney-General notice of such suspension of the patent, with his reasons therefor; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence proceedings at once in the proper court by a scire facias, bill, or information, to set aside such title. This section shall apply to all cases of suspended entries under the United States pre-emption and homestead acts: Provided, That when two years have elapsed, or shall hereafter elapse, from the date of the issuance of the receiver's receipt upon the entry of any tract of land under the homestead or pre-emption laws, and when during such period no contest shall have been instituted or protest or objection filed against the validity of such entry, the entryman shall be entitled to a patent conveying the land by him entered, and the same shall be issued to him; but this proviso shall not be construed to require the delay of two years from the date of said entry before the issuing of a patent therefor.

SEC. 9. That suits by the United States to vacate and annul any patent heretofore issued shall only be brought within five years from the passage of this act, and suits to vacate and annul patents hereafter issued shall only be brought within five years after the date of the issuance of such patents.

SEC. 10. That hereafter no public lands of the United States not heretofore offered at public sale, except abandoned military or other reservations, isolated and disconnected fractional tracts authorized to be sold by section 2455 of the Revised Statutes, and mineral and other lands, the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by acts of Congress of a special nature having local application, shall be sold at public sale or be subject to private entry.

SEC. 11. That an act entitled "An act to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries on public lands," approved March 3, 1879, section 2301 of the Revised Statutes, and section 2 of an act entitled "An act relating to the public lands of the United States," approved June 15, 1880, are hereby repealed.

Mr. DOLPH. Accompanying this letter the Senate bill which has just been ordered to be printed in the RECORD was returned with certain proposed amendments indicated in red ink.

As I said before, these letters, together with the bills and the amendments, were laid before the Committee on Public Lands, and certain of the sections which I will now name, section 6 of the bill and section 8 of the bill, were adopted precisely as recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, to indicate the character of some of the criticisms which have been made of this bill, I read from the communication read by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] yesterday:

Section 6—

That is, in Senate bill No. 2299—

Section 6 (not noted in previous letter) adds to existing law (section 2288, Revised Statutes) a provision authorizing transfers of entries for canals and ditches. As the right of way for these purposes is already provided for by law (section 2339, Revised Statutes) the amendment is unnecessary, unless it is to be used, as it probably would be, to enable assignments of entries to be made for the ostensible purpose of ditches, but really to acquire title to lands in excess of statutory limitations.

I say that is a fair sample of some of the criticisms which have been made on this bill. The original is section 2288 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

SEC. 2288. Any person who has already settled or hereafter may settle on the public lands, either by pre-emption, or by virtue of the homestead law or any amendments thereto, shall have the right to transfer, by warranty against his own acts, any portion of his pre-emption or homestead for church, cemetery, or school purposes, or for the right of way of railroads across such pre-emption or homestead, and the transfer for such public purposes shall in no way vitiate the right to complete and perfect the title to their pre-emptions or homesteads.

That section was proposed to be amended, because it was supposed by some members of the committee that the words "or hereafter may settle on the public lands, either by pre-emption or by virtue of the homestead law" might be incompatible with the repeal of the pre-emption law, and when it was under consideration it was suggested, and properly I think, that a homestead settler ought also to have power to transfer a right of way for canals and irrigating ditches, and those words were inserted. That is made the basis of a suggestion by the Commissioner that it would be possible under such a provision authorizing the transfer of a right of way for an irrigating ditch for parties to make a transfer of the title to their claim. If that argument is valid in the case of the right to transfer the right of way for a ditch it is valid in the case of the right to transfer grounds for a cemetery or a lot for school purposes.

The main objection to the balance of the bill seems to be to the provision contained in the first section, as follows:

That all entries made under the pre-emption laws, on which final proof and payment may have been made and certificates issued, and to which there are no adverse claims originating prior to final entry, and which may have been sold, after final entry, to bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, shall be confirmed and patented upon presentation of satisfactory proof to the Land Department of such sale.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], chairman of the committee, discussed that provision at length the other day. I am not going to repeat what he then said. The committee believe that that provision conforms to the existing law, by which the rights of innocent purchasers are already preserved, and that if that is not so the same rule ought to be applied when the Government comes to deal with its citizens that courts of equity apply in controversies between citizens themselves.

This is all I desire to say on the subject. I do not desire to argue the matter again. I thought it was probably due to the Secretary of the Interior that the communication which I have had read should be placed on record together with the bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have not a particle of objection to a limitation as to the quantity of these lands which shall be conveyed in the original grant, but when we undertake to follow the lands beyond that and say they never thereafter shall go into single hands, I think we are going too far. I shall therefore vote against the amendment because, while I am perfectly willing to put a restriction on the amount of land granted by the Government in its patents, when you undertake to follow these lands through all time and say they shall not be accumulated in the same hands I think you are going too far.

The fact is that there are some men who seem unable to hold land, and there are other men, their neighbors, who, when their lands are put in the market, will become the purchasers of them because they think they are worth more to them than to others. I do not know that there is any particular objection to that. I shall, therefore, vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. BLAIR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is confined at home ill. I am paired with him. If he were present, I should vote "nay." As I do not know how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HEARST (when his name was called). I think this amendment if adopted would make the bill totally inefficacious——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must remind the Senator that debate is out of order during the roll-call.

Mr. HEARST. Therefore I vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. He is for this bill, but I do not know how he would vote on this amendment; so I shall not vote. I should vote "nay" if not paired.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VOORHEES (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BECK. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], but believing that he would vote "nay" on this question if he were present, I vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA. On the assurance that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN], with whom I am paired, would vote "nay" if present, I vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I do not know how he would vote. If any Senator can tell me how he would vote if present, I can decide whether I can vote. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. CONGER. My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If my colleague were present, he would probably vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE. On the assurance of the colleague of the Senator from Michigan, with whom I am paired, that he would vote "nay" if present, I desire to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM. As I stated before, I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. Satisfied that he would vote "nay" if he were here, I vote "nay."

Mr. SAWYER. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from South Carolina would vote the same way.

Mr. SAWYER. Then, if you say so, I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS. I will take the responsibility of saying so.

Mr. SAWYER. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 3, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—3.

Blair,	Dawes,	Teller.

NAYS—42.

Allison,	Dolph,	Kenna,	Sewell,
Beck,	Eustis,	Logan,	Sherman,
Berry,	George,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Stanford,
Butler,	Gray,	Manderson,	Vance,
Call,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Walthall,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Whitthorne,
Chace,	Hearst,	Payne,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cockrell,	Ingalls,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,
Conger,	Jones of Nevada,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—31.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Mahone,	Plumb,
Bowen,	Frye,	Miller,	Riddleberger,
Brown,	Gibson,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sabin,
Camden,	Hale,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Colquitt,	Hampton,	Morrill,	Van Wyck,
Cullom,	Harris,	Palmer,	Vest.
Edmunds,	Hoar,	Pike,	Voorhees.
Evarts,	Jones of Florida,	Platt,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of the Committee on Public Lands I move to amend the committee's bill or substitute in section 3 by striking out the words "or his assignors," in line 18 of the section. I have my doubts about its being a proper amendment, but I am directed by the committee to move it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 18, after the word "he," it is proposed to strike out "or his assignors;" so as to read:

That no land shall be patented to any person under this act unless he shall have expended in the necessary irrigation, reclamation, and cultivation thereof, by means of main canals and branch ditches, and in permanent improvements upon the land, at least $3 per acre of the whole tract reclaimed and patented.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of the Committee on Public Lands I also move to amend further by striking out the words "or his assigns," in line 67 of section 3, with the same purpose in view of preventing the assignability of a claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I also, by direction of the same committee, move to strike out the word "three" and insert "four," in line 60 of section 3.

Under the provisions of the bill a claimant for a desert-land title is required to expend a dollar per acre a year for three years and to have one-eighth of the land under cultivation. Then this provision is that he shall, within three years after making his declaration, make final proof. The committee think, on examination, that he ought to have a little time after complying with the conditions of the act to make his proof. Therefore they propose to make the time four years for the declaration instead of three.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to offer one or two amendments from the Committee on Public Lands also. I move to insert, after the word "laws," in section 1, line 12, the following words:

Including the right of such persons as have entered contests to make entry of the land the subject of such contests, as provided by existing law.

So as to read:

Provided, however, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accuring under said laws, including the right of such persons as have entered contests to make entry of the land the subject of such contests, as provided by existing law; but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated upon surveyed or unsurveyed lands before the 1st day of July, 1886, may be perfected upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know the effect of that.

Mr. PLUMB. Under the present law the person entering a contest against any one already claiming public land who made the original entry has a preference right to enter the land if the contest is decided against the original entryman. Many of these contests, many hundreds, perhaps, are pending now, and of course if they were not saved the contests already initiated would not inure to the benefit of the parties making them. It puts them simply in the shoes of the person who steps out of possession of the land. It was supposed when the bill was originally drawn that the word "contests," in line 17, covered that class of cases; but on reflection the committee were satisfied that it did not do so, at least that it was not sufficiently clear to remove all doubt.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Is not that the law now by a special act?

Mr. PLUMB. It is by the act of 1880.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move in section 1, line 14, to strike out "July" and insert "October;" so as to read:

But all bona fide claims lawfully initiated upon surveyed or unsurveyed lands before the 1st day of October, 1886, may be perfected upon due compliance with law, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In section 1, line 20, before the word "made," at the beginning of the line, I move to insert the word "heretofore." That limits the operation of this provision to such entries as have heretofore been made and does not extend it to the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 20, before the word "made," it is proposed to insert "heretofore;" so as to read:

That all entries made under the pre-emption laws, on which final proof and payment may have been heretofore made and certificates issued, and to which there are no adverse claims originating prior to final entry, and which may have been sold, after final entry, to bona fide purchasers, for a valuable consideration, shall be confirmed and patented upon presentation of satisfactory proof to the Land Department of such sale.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not think that amendment should be adopted. The adoption of that amendment would be to prescribe a rule that is in direct contravention, as I understand, of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States on that subject. The right to sell land acquired under any of the land laws of the United States after final proof of entry has been made is complete.

Mr. PLUMB. This does not refer to the right of selling.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. If I did not understand it——

Mr. PLUMB. It does not refer to that. It only confirms entries heretofore made. It does not interfere at all with the right to sell.

Mr. HARRISON. Let it be again reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. PLUMB.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I did not misunderstand the effect of the amendment and I do not think it ought to be adopted. The amendment of the committee as it stands now provides:

That all entries made under the pre-emption laws, on which final proof and payment may have been made and certificates issued, and to which there are no adverse claims originating prior to final entry, and which may have been sold, after final entry, to bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, shall be confirmed and patented upon presentation of satisfactory proof to the Land Department of such sale.

I insist that that is just as it should be as it stands without any amendment. If the rule should apply to cases where entries have heretofore been made, why not apply it to cases where entries may hereafter be made? The object of the provision in the bill of course is simply to protect a bona fide purchaser who purchases land from a person who has made his entry, paid his money, received his final receipt, where such a purchaser purchases in good faith for a valuable consideration having examined the record and finding that the entryman has made his final proof before the register and receiver.

Now, then, I say that that rule should apply at all times and under all circumstances, and I can not see why it should be limited to entries heretofore made, because, as I have said, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided time and again that when final proof is made and entry is made, then the right to sell and convey the land is complete in the entryman. It may be sold for taxes. The Supreme Court decided that in several cases.

The effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas is simply to so frame the provision and so modify it and shape it that while it protects innocent purchasers in the past it does not protect innocent purchasers in the future.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. PLUMB. I will state that this amendment was inserted wholly at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior. I do not myself think there is any good reason why the rule should not apply to entries hereafter made as well as to entries heretofore made, but it is conservative ground to occupy, to say the least.

A great mass of entries we know have been made heretofore which are now struggling against the opposition of the Interior Department and in which great interests are involved, and some rule should be adopted with reference to those entries which would permit their being protected.

A further suggestion of the Department was that it should be limited to entries heretofore made; that is to say, the class of entries which had been made in view of the statute which now exists, leaving those who come hereafter to take their chances under the more stringent ruling of the office, thinking that that would not perhaps do any injustice. It is not in my judgment very material either way; still on the whole I think it is better to insert the word.

Mr. BERRY. The bill as reported from the committee proposes to validate fraudulent entries that have been sold to bona fide purchasers. The bill, as the letter of the Secretary of the Interior shows, if passed as reported by the committee, would apply to future transfers. In other words, if parties should fraudulently enter lands after the passage of the bill they could transfer their entries to innocent holders, and thereby prevent the cancellation that the Government proposes The amendment offered by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], says that it shall only protect bona fide purchasers before the passage of this act, not protect purchasers who may purchase this land after the act passes.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator from Arkansas give me a good reason why purchasers in good faith for a valuable consideration at any time without notice of fraud or without notice of any failure to comply with the law on the part of the entryman should not be protected just as much as an innocent purchaser for a valuable consideration is protected by the courts in an ordinary transaction? That is to say, when he purchases at a time when the Supreme Court said the entryman has a right to sell and the purchaser has a right to buy, why should not an innocent purchaser be protected in the future as well as in the past? What reason is there for the difference?

Mr. BERRY. I will answer the Senator. If this bill passes as it came from the committee, it will be simply serving notice on all those who hold these lands under fraudulent entries that if they do not transfer them immediately the entries will be canceled. If the bill passes as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Kansas, then all parties will be put upon notice, and if they afterward purchase land after the passage of this act they can not claim to be innocent holders.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is begging the whole question. Of course if a transfer is made to avoid and evade the law it is not a transfer in good faith; it is not a transfer for a valuable consideration, and it does not meet the proposition at all.

The courts have decided this very question. It has been decided by the district judge holding the circuit court in the State of Oregon, following the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, that where an entryman has perfected his title before the register and receiver, and received his final certificate and paid his money, he has a right to sell that land, he has a right to mortgage it if he sees proper; and the person purchasing and paying his money in good faith takes a good title, although subsequent to that transaction some flaw may be found in the title of the original entryman. It seems to me that is right, that it is fair and just; it is applying the same rule precisely to these matters that courts of equity apply in all other matters. If a man makes a fraudulent transfer, if he colludes with the person to whom he makes the transfer, of course he does not come within the rule of being a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration.

There is another thing about it. How far is the Land Department behind to-day, and how far behind will it be for years to come in the issuing of patents? Years. There are to-day to my certain knowledge hundreds and thousands, I may say, of persons who have taken up their homesteads, their donation claims under the Oregon donation laws and other donation laws and their pre-emption claims, who have perfected their title so far as concerns the doing of everything upon their part that the law requires them to do, who have paid their money and received their certificates, and yet they have not received their patents and will not receive them and can not receive them for years and years to come.

Now the effect of this amendment is simply that if a person makes a sale at any time in the future after his final entry to a purchaser, although the purchaser may act in entire good faith, may examine the record and find that the party has made the entry according to law, received a certificate, and paid his money—no matter how much good faith may characterize the transaction, if at any time thereafter upon the suggestion of some special agent some informality or fraud if you please should be discovered in reference to the original entry, the rights of the innocent purchaser are not protected; he loses his money and he loses his land. I insist that that is not right, and there is just as much reason to apply the rule to entries in the future as there is for applying it to entries made in the past, and more too.

Mr. MAXEY. The object of the committee is to protect innocent purchasers in good faith for a valuable consideration, without notice, actual or constructive. That is the intent of the committee, I think, and in accomplishing that object if they left out the word "heretofore" they would extend this protection to frauds which may occur in the future. If the word "heretofore" is inserted, then all purchasers of fraudulent claims will have notice of record that that class of claims is not protected. Therefore I think the word "heretofore" ought to be inserted in the section.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I presume I am very obtuse about this matter, but I wish the Senator from Oregon would inform me how the word "heretofore" will in any manner affect the sense, object, and purpose of this bill if it should be inserted. I can not imagine a more absolutely superfluous and nugatory word than "heretofore" inserted before the word "made." What does "heretofore" refer to? When will this bill become operative? When will this measure take effect if we agree to it? On the day of its approval. The word "heretofore," then, must necessarily refer and take effect and be construed from the time when this bill is approved. It is idle to suppose that means now. "Heretofore," whenever this bill becomes effectual and operative, will refer to the time when it is approved by the President of the United States.

How does it change the sense of the bill if we leave the word "heretofore" out? The word "heretofore" in it remains exactly the same as it is now, and I am somewhat surprised that the committee should move to put it in, because I do not think it will make one hair white or black. The law will take effect from its approval, and the word "heretofore" may mean made and issued before the time when this act was approved. It will include everything between now and that time.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Does the Senator from Kansas think the words "may have been," as they stand, would apply?

Mr. INGALLS. There is no principle of parliamentary interpretation more explicit, more clear, and better distinguished than that the law can only take effect from the date of its approval by the President of the United States, and the word that we put in now of course will be so construed whenever this bill goes into operation; and whether you put in "heretofore" or leave out "heretofore" does not add a single cubit to the stature of the bill. It can only affect the certificates made and issued before the bill is approved, unless we provide by language which can not be misunderstood that it shall apply to certificates issued after the bill is approved.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The chairman of the committee evidently does not understand the original text of the bill as his colleague does.

Mr. INGALLS. I am not responsible for the interpretation that the chairman of the committee may place on the bill. I appeal to the common understanding of men, and I assert that it makes no difference whatever in the minutest subdivision of a hair so far as the rights of claimants are concerned under this bill, should it become a law, whether the word "heretofore" is inserted or whether it is omitted.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator thinks in either event it simply relates to those made prior to the passage of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Prior to the passage of the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I had thought that construction might be placed on this before. I am not quite certain that that is the proper construction.

Mr. INGALLS. I think no other construction can be placed on it.

Mr. HARRISON. I rose to ask the Senator from Kansas who proposed this amendment at what point the word "heretofore" is to be inserted.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the word "made," at the beginning of line 12.

Mr. HARRISON. It seems to me it might make a difference if it had been inserted in line 21, "and which may heretofore have been sold." I supposed that was the point.

Mr. INGALLS. That would be different.

Mr. HARRISON. That would of course effectuate the intention of the amendment, which I understood to be to protect all the pre-emption claims in which final entry had been made and which, prior to the passage of this act, had been transferred to an innocent purchaser. That is the point which has been debated, and if that is the intention of the Senator from Kansas I think the word he proposes to insert should come in a little later in the bill, and then it would not be subject to criticism. In line 21 it might be inserted so as to read "and which may have been heretofore sold."

Mr. INGALLS. That is a different proposition.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand it to be a different proposition. I say being inserted there it would not be subject to criticism.

Mr. INGALLS. I am only criticising it where it is applied by the amendment as offered. I am not criticising it if applied to line 21.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not care to enter into a controversy with my colleague upon the construction of the language of this section; but notwithstanding the emphasis with which he has said it does not make any difference, I respectfully submit that it does. It entirely changes the purpose of the section. This is a continuing provision without the word "heretofore." Any entry which may have been made and which shall have been followed by a sale to a bona fide purchaser for value is protected by this provision, no matter whether the entry is made to-day, to-morrow, next year, or the year after.

Mr. HARRISON. It can not be made after the bill passes.

Mr. INGALLS. Because the law is repealed.

Mr. PLUMB. There is where Senators mistake the scope of this bill. It repeals it as to all entries which have not been already initiated, but there are many thousands of them, and perhaps tens of thousands, and I do not know but hundreds of thousands, that have already been initiated and that will be perfected hereafter and during many months hereafter under the provisions of existing law, the pre-emption law.

The distinction made by the word "heretofore" is between entries that have already been perfected and certificates issued and which may be sold after such entry is perfected to an innocent purchaser for value, and those entries which may be hereafter made which may be sold, and the word "heretofore," as I think, makes a broad distinction between these two classes of cases.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Now, I suggest to the Senator from Kansas, does he think Congress has any right to make any such provision as this? Is it not a fact that the title to this land the moment the entry is made passes out of the Government of the United States and into the vendee?

Mr. PLUMB. It does if we do not limit it by law. But suppose we say otherwise, what is to limit the power or the right, as the Senator uses the term, of Congress to do that?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not think you can put any limitation after you have provided that a certain party by doing a certain thing shall acquire title to the land. I think that is the end of it. The title vests and you can not impose a condition on it afterward.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not care to discuss that question with the Senator. I should feel that I was treading on very dangerous ground if I did not suppose the United States might provide by regulation for the disposition of its own title and for all that might happen to the land or the title to it up to the issuing of the patent. Up to that time conditions may be imposed.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I think there has been an erroneous construction put upon the law by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. It is not the law that the title of the United States passes upon an entry made or an application made for entry, or when a certificate is issued, as I understand. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Irvine vs. Marshall, 20 Howard, 555, held that although a certificate may be the subject of bargain and sale, yet the United States can take care that conveyance shall be to him who is in good faith its vendee, and the court said:

> The reception of the certificate of purchase as evidence of title may be regular and convenient as a rule of business, but it has not been anywhere established as conclusive evidence, much less has it been adjudged to forbid or exclude proofs of the real and just rights of claimants.

A mere declaration in writing by a vendor that the vendee has paid the purchase-price of land, and that he intends to give him a deed, is not a document purporting to convey title. (Osterman vs. Baldwin, 6 Wallace, 116.)

And there are a great many other decisions by both the Supreme and circuit courts of the United States holding that nothing but the patent is evidence of title or conveys title, and that a purchaser is not a bona fide purchaser without notice who buys land that has been entered under any illegal or fraudulent pretense without a patent. That is the law. Now, in regard to this amendment, I do not think it very material, but I do not see how the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] can construe the language "may have been" as referring to something future. An entry which may have been made is of necessity of the past, and the word "heretofore" of course has reference to the approval of this bill, as he stated; and the section itself in these terms, "may have been made," can only refer to cases that have occurred previous to the approval of the act.

But the question whether a different law shall be applied to purchasers claiming under the pre-emption laws of the United States from that which prevails between private individuals is a very doubtful one. The law between private individuals is that a bona fide purchaser without notice does not thereby acquire any other title than the party had who sold to him. There may be estoppels provided by statute law for want of record, estoppels because of the absence of some act or notice given by the vender, but a man can never acquire from another one because he purchased in good faith something which that other did not have. He can not acquire a right which was not in his vender. The vender may be estopped for negligence, but there is no process by which I can sell to a man something which I have not got and which I never had.

Mr. MAXEY. If you are on the record the apparent owner of a tract of land and convey that tract of land to A you are thereby stripped of all title. If A fails to put his deed on record and you subsequently sell that same tract of land to B, who purchases innocently without any notice, actual or constructive, of the previous conveyance, and he pays the purchase-money, he is protected by the courts and by the law in his purchase, although it was subsequent to your former sale to A.

Mr. CALL. That is precisely what I said. The estoppel comes from the failure of the vender to perform some act. A man can never sell that which he has not, but the true owner may be estopped from asserting his true claim. The status of title and property must be derived from the vender, something that is in him. But in the case of the United States the law has been affirmed substantially as it has been stated by me, that the patent is the evidence of title and it is the only evidence of title. The entryman may sell anything that is in him and he may convey anything that is in him; but the question is, whether he can convey anything which is not in him. The question here is as to a mere certificate, and this is almost the precise language of the court in the case of Yost vs. Shields (1 Woolworth, 353), and in other cases:

As against the United States the purchaser takes only what his vender has to convey.

Only the interest which he has in conformity with law acquired; and the conclusive fact is stated by the court that up to the time of issuing the patent bona fides can not attach and be the subject of investigation. A purchaser takes only the right, perfect or imperfect, which is in his vender. I have the decisions of the Supreme Court before me in the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to this effect. I merely wished while I was on my feet to call attention to the fact that in the marked copy of the bill which has been furnished me by the Interior Department in this section now under consideration are the following words:

That all entries made under the pre-emption laws, on which final proof and payment may have been made and certificates issued, and to which there are no adverse claims originating prior to final entry, and which may have been sold after final entry to bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, shall be confirmed and patented upon presentation of satisfactory proof to the Land Department of such sale.

This note is made upon this clause by the Commissioner of the General Land Office:

It condones all such fraudulent claims in the past, even those where the question has been adjudicated and the entries legally canceled, and it invites new frauds in the future by providing such a precedent.

And it is the opinion of the Commissioner that it should be stricken out. I merely wished to place before the Senate his comment on that subject.

I understand the reason to be that which has been stated in the reports made, that a large number of pre-emption entries have been made as a system by parties engaged in it by having a house placed upon wheels and allowing it to remain for a certain period of time upon one tract and then wheeling it over to another, and that it has been made a means of conveyance of large bodies of land to individuals in fraud of the pre-emption law. I do not mention these as facts, but I see them stated in reports. I understand from the Commissioner of the General Land Office that this language in this bill would condone and confirm all cases of that description.

The Senator from Kansas who has submitted this amendment doubtless presents many cases of great equity. Where such a case really exists, where an honest entry has been made and where a transfer has been made before patent and it was all in good faith, there is no kind of doubt that the United States ought to confirm. Every reason of good policy and equity would require in all such cases the confirmation of the title and the issuance of the patent, notwithstanding there might be irregularities, notwithstanding there might be an innocent and not a fraudulent failure to comply with some provision of the law.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Does the Land Department now do that thing?

Mr. CALL. Whether it does or not I do not know. Whether there are different constructions of law, as there are frequently differences between different persons on points of law, which would somewhat narrow and limit the interpretation that you or I might put on the law in the Department, I do not know. But I mean to say that all classes of cases to which I suppose the Senator from Kansas refers certainly ought to be confirmed. If, however, the language of this section is open to the criticism that it would confirm a great many cases of fraudulent entry where there had been a general object and purpose to defraud the Government, and it would confirm them in the hands of persons who while they might be bona fide purchasers in respect to the payment of the consideration, the money, while there might not be proof of their personal knowledge or being chargeable with sufficient knowledge to make them parties to the fraud, it is a very grave question whether, if there have been five or six or seven or eight hundred or eight thousand acres of this land under this character of pre-emption entries accumulated in the hands of one or two or three individuals, it ought to be confirmed. I myself think it ought not to be confirmed in such cases; but in the great majority of cases perhaps the considerations are such that there ought to be a confirmation, and the provision of the bill ought to be addressed to that.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, there has been a conflict going on for years between the courts and the Land Department on this very question. The courts have uniformly decided one way; the Land Department has not been consistent with itself. The courts have followed the law as it exists to-day, while the Land Department has only at different times followed the law and at other times has not followed the law as the courts have construed it. The pre-emption law as it stands on the statutes to-day protects innocent purchasers for a valuable consideration who purchase after final entry and proof. Section 2262 of the Revised Statutes does that. I will read it.

Mr. INGALLS. Before patent issues?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Before patent issues.

SEC. 2262. Before any person claiming the benefit of this chapter is allowed to enter lands he shall make oath before the receiver or register of the land district in which the land is situated that he has never had the benefit of any right of pre-emption under section 2259; that he is not the owner of 320 acres of land in any State or Territory; that he has not settled upon and improved such land to sell the same on speculation, but in good faith to appropriate it to his own exclusive use; and that he has not, directly or indirectly, made any agreement or contract, in any way or manner, with any person whatsoever, by which the title which he might acquire from the Government of the United States should inure in whole or in part to the benefit of any person except himself; and if any person taking such oath swears falsely in the premises, he shall—forfeit the money which he may have paid for such land, and all right and title to the same; and any grant or conveyance which he may have made, except—except in the hands of bona fide purchasers, for a valuable consideration, shall be null and void, except as provided in section 2288.

Do what, now?

Now comes the exception—

Which is another matter not affecting this question. There is a plain provision of law, as plain to my mind, and always has been, as it could possibly be written, that bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, where a purchase is made after final entry, after proof, and before patent, shall be protected. The courts, whenever they have had an opportunity to pass upon that question, have construed the law as it reads, while the Land Department has varied. Occasionally there has been a decision by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the rule laid down in the statute by its plain terms and as construed by the courts, but more recently the decisions of the Land Department have been the other way. I say that by the adoption of this amendment, or if the proper construction of the bill is as suggested by the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], the effect is to change the law as it is to-day in regard to this matter and deprive a bona fide holder for a valuable consideration of the rights now given him by the law as it stands.

The senior Senator from Kansas insists that the bill as it stands, or as it will stand with the amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee, will simply protect those bona fide purchasers in cases where entries have been made and sales made prior to the passage of this bill, thereby placing a legislative construction on the law as it stands to-day. As I said, there has been some doubt about it in the mind of the Land Department, and the effect of this legislation would be to declare that while Congress gives the construction that the courts have placed heretofore on this statute as to all cases of prior entry, it refuses to place that construction on the law as to the future. Is not that so?

Mr. PLUMB. That undoubtedly is the effect.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That I protest against. The very object, I say, of this provision which receives the construction suggested by the senior Senator from Kansas is to change the law on this subject. If Congress wants to do that, be it so. I say it is an injustice to men who purchased land at a time when the laws of the country said they had a right to purchase, and purchased in good faith and for valuable consideration. I say it is an injustice to such men.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. BERRY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before the roll is called I desire to have read simply for the information of the Senate and that we may have it in an available form a letter in regard to this bill and in regard to this provision. It was written by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to me at my instance, giving his views in regard to the various provisions of the bill. The letter is not very long and I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 21, 1886.

SIR: In compliance with your personal request of yesterday for a statement of objections to the Senate bill amending House bill No. 7887, to repeal the pre-emption, &c., laws, I have the honor to say that the objections to the Senate bill are generally to those matters in which it changes the House bill.

The following specific objections to the Senate amendment may be stated:

1. The second clause of the first section confirming all entries heretofore made under the pre-emption laws and which may have been sold to "innocent purchasers" must have the effect, if any, to validate and confirm all illegal and fraudulent entries so made under that act.

This provision, and a similar provision in the eighth section in respect to final entries hereafter made under the pre-emption and homestead acts, are in contravention of well-settled principles of the law of real property and of the law of equity. I think that neither under the civil law nor the common law, nor in any legal authorities, nor in any decision under the public land laws, is it or has it ever been asserted that a person can be an innocent purchaser who buys of one who does not own the legal title. Equity never relieves in such cases, and there is no reason why it should.

In private transactions the owner of property is not expected to indemnify a person against loss who purchases from one who has merely a claim to a legal title but not the legal title itself. The doctrine of caveat emptor is as good against a purchaser of property claimed to be derived from the United States as against the purchaser of property claimed to be derived from any other source.

The property of the United States in its public lands is as sacred as the property of individuals, and no good reason would appear to exist why legal principles should be violated and the public domain sacrificed to make good to the purchasers of fraudulent entries, or to speculators in them, titles which may be either absolutely void or voidable in law.

The classes of people who will chiefly be benefited by the proposed legislation are corporations and syndicates who have covered grazing and timber lands with a cloud of false entries and money-lenders who have taken worthless mortgages at exorbitant rates of interest and other charges. Doubtless individual citizens may also have been misled by erroneous advice or persuaded by land or loan agents to invest their money without looking to the foundations of their titles, but such persons have no possible claim upon the United States. Their purchases were private transactions, with which the United States had nothing to do. The public records were open to their inspection. They knew, or might have known, that their venders were not the owners of the land, but had only a claim to it, and that the validity of this claim depended upon its merits. They are charged with a knowledge of the law that all claims under the public land acts are subject to a final confirmation and are liable to defeat, and that titles do not pass until patents issue. If in some individual cases the purchasers of inchoate titles have suffered a misfortune which appeals to personal sympathy, and if such cases were a proper subject for public relief, it would be far better that direct money appropriations should be made than that a horde of false and fraudulent claims should be rushed through to patent by force of Congressional confirmation in order to save certain persons from the consequences of their own indiscretion.

2. The last clause of the first section of the Senate amendment provides for the location of soldiers' additional homestead entries by assignees. This provision is not in the interest of soldiers, their heirs or legal representatives, by whom the locations may now be made, but is exclusively in the interest of the speculative holders of such claims. I think legislation in the interest of any character of speculation in public land unwise, inexpedient, and contrary to good policy.

3. The last proviso in the second section of the Senate amendment repeals the existing requirement that timber-culture entrymen, in making final proof, must show that the specified number of trees were planted on each acre. This requirement is one of the conditions upon which all timber-culture entries have been made. Its repeal changes the contract in favor of the entryman, and enables proof to be made upon natural trees, when they may exist, instead of cultivated ones.

4. The third section amends the desert-land act in some meritorious particulars, but embraces other provisions of a different character, the principal of which is the incorporation of a right of assignment of the unperfected entry. This feature changes fundamentally the underlying principle of the public land laws, that entries shall be made for the exclusive benefit of entrymen and not for the benefit of other persons, and it practically abrogates existing restrictions of the act limiting one person to one entry of 640 acres. By the proposed amendment any purchaser of desert entries may obtain as great a quantity of land which has been heretofore entered or which may be hereafter entered under this act as he may be able or may choose to pay for. That it is the purpose of the amendment to aggregate entries in single or corporate hands is shown by the clause providing for the association of entrymen and the filing of joint maps, coupled with the right of assignment. In Wyoming, Montana, and elsewhere great bodies of land have been covered by consecutive desert-land entries, embracing the water privileges of many square miles of territory. To legalize the assignment and consolidation of these entries as proposed by the Senate amendment is to create a land monopoly of vaster proportions than any against which publicists have warned the country or political conventions have denounced.

Another objection to the amendment is that the provisions of the desert-land act are extended to another State (namely, Colorado) than the States to which it was confined by the original act. The public injury already done under this act, which, as stated by my predecessor, operates not to the reclamation of land but to its misappropriation and the prevention of reclamation, should not be extended to embrace additional territory. Legislation clamored for by monopolists is not legislation presumptively in the public interests.

5. Section 4 of the amendment protecting settlements on school sections before survey does not add to or change existing law. Under some past rulings of this office homestead settlers were not considered as protected by the statute, but the law as construed in more recent years protects all settlement rights upon such sections. The Senate amendment upon this point is not of itself objectionable. It is simply unnecessary.

6. The fifth section extends the homestead privilege to single females between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one. As young girls are not expected, as a class, to take up public land for the purpose of a home and to live alone upon isolated claims, there would seem to be no utility in this provision, at least not for any purpose of promoting actual settlements

7. The sixth section, authorizing the transfer of any portion of a claim under the settlement laws for church, cemetery, or school purposes, or for the right of way for railroads, canals, or ditches, adds to existing law (section 2288, Revised Statutes) the words "canals or ditches for irrigation or drainage." As the right of way for the latter purposes is already secured by general law (sections 2339, 2340, Revised Statutes), the occasion for this amendment is not evident. The objection to it, apart from its apparent want of utility for any necessary purpose, is the liability of its use for the consummation of frauds upon a great scale. "Any portion" of an entry may be so transferred. The words "any portion" include the whole. Entire claims may therefore be transferred under the proposed amendment for the ostensible purpose named. It is not necessary that any canals or ditches should actually be constructed. The claims can be transferred for the alleged purpose of constructing them, and the amount of land that may be thus acquired by corporations or individuals may be limited only by the extent of territory desired to be dominated.

8. The seventh section provides a new form of entry, to wit, "mountain homesteads" of 320 acres. No cultivation of the land is required. It opens up the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, and New Mexico to an easy form of fraudulent entry, which, falling under the provisions of the eighth section of the Senate amendment, will be protected and validated by the enforced confirmations of that section.

9. The eighth section is the germ and essence of the entire amendment. This section practically cuts off adverse claims and effectually prohibits contests against invalid entries, also rendering impossible an official investigation of fraudulent ones; confirms all entries that may be sold, however false or baseless, unless knowledge of the fraud is brought to attention within an impossible period; deprives the Land Department of its jurisdiction to determine the validity of claims against the United States under the public land laws; transfers executive functions to the judiciary; imposes upon the courts duties which if they could be performed would require a quadruplication of the judicial establishment, and makes an absolute confirmation after two years of all entries not otherwise confirmed in fact or effect by other provisions of this section and bill.

I regard this section as a nullification of all guards and restrictions in the public land laws; as a reversal of the whole policy of legislation in respect to the acquisition of individual titles to public land; as a repudiation of the pledges of political parties and conventions to preserve the public domain for actual settlements, and, in short, as the destruction of the public land system of the United States. And I perceive that this radical change can have no other effect than to promote the interests of speculation and monopoly.

10. The ninth section, providing that suits to vacate patents shall not be brought after five years from the date of the passage of the act or from the date of the issue of patents hereafter, would have the effect to validate both void and voidable patents even in the hands of the patentees, unless suit should be brought within the time fixed, which is wholly impossible, particularly in respect to patents issued to corporations, when the bringing of the suit may depend upon the settlement of questions that may not even be considered within the term of five years.

If it is said that some limitation of time is necessary within which public-land entries shall be liable to attack by individuals or to inquiry by the Government, in order that certainty in land titles may be assured, it may be replied that the same reason would apply to claims for money out of the Treasury, since such claims, equally with claims for public land from the treasury of the public domain, are the subject of sale and assignment; that unless the public-land system should be changed to favor speculative proprietorship instead of actual inhabitancy there is no substantial reason for anticipating the regular and orderly termination of cases; and, further, that another and better method exists by which a final adjudication of claims can be facilitated. This is by a simple repeal of laws under which the most extensive frauds have been committed, thus preventing their future perpetration, and by increasing the facilities of this office for the examination of existing claims, so that the work can be speedily performed, false claims discovered and suppressed, and good ones confirmed and patented.

Your attention is called to my report, May 6, 1886 (Senate Ex. Doc. No. 134), showing that, with the increased force asked for, the pending cases of final entry can reasonably be expected to be closed within a year and a half.

I also respectfully call your attention to marked paragraphs in my predecessor's annual report for 1884, pages 15, 16, and 17, and in my report for 1885, pages 64–67, relative to examinations of entries, and to other marked paragraphs in reports for 1883, 1884, and 1885, relating specifically to different classes of entry.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
United States Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Unless the chairman of the committee anticipates the conclusion of the bill to-night, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. DOLPH. I think there will be no difficulty in finishing the bill to-night.

CARRYING OF PASSENGERS BY STEAM VESSELS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the motion to adjourn is submitted, the Chair will lay before the Senate a report of a committee of conference, which has been laid on his table.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3037) relating to the licensing of vessels engaged in towing to carry persons in addition to their crew, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

WARNER MILLER,
J. N. DOLPH,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
CHARLES F. CRISP,
R. W. DUNHAM,
MARTIN L. CLARDY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The action of the House passes the bill without any further action of the Senate.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 23, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 22, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of so much of the Journal as relates to the introduction of bills and resolutions.

There was no objection.

The Journal as read was approved.

CARTER W. TILLER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without my approval House bill No. 4002, entitled "An act granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller."

The records of the War Department show that George W. Tiller, the son of the claimant, enlisted in a Kentucky regiment on the 8th day of October, 1861, and that he deserted on the 20th day of September, 1863; that he was captured by the confederates afterward, but the time and circumstances are not given. On the 21st day of July, 1864, he was admitted to the Andersonville hospital and died the same day of scorbutis.

The father filed his claim for a pension in 1877, alleging his dependence upon the deceased soldier. It is probably true that the son while in the Army sent money to the claimant, though he appears to have been employed as a policeman in the city of Louisville ever since his son's death at a fair salary.

The claim thus made was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the claimant was not dependent upon his son.

I am entirely satisfied of the correctness of this determination, and if the records presented to me are reliable, I think the fact which appears therefrom that the death of the soldier occurred ten months after desertion, and had no apparent relation to any service in the Union Army, is conclusive against the claim now made.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 19, 1886.

The SPEAKER. What action does the House take?

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask that the message be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the message will be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and will be printed.

There was no objection.

JOHN TAYLOR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also lays before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 3826, entitled "An act for the relief of John Taylor."

By this bill it is proposed to increase the pension of the beneficiary named to $16 a month. He has been receiving a pension under the general law, dating from his discharge in 1865. His pension has been twice already increased, once by the Pension Bureau and once by a special act passed in 1882. His wound is not such as to cause his disability to become aggravated by time. The increase allowed by this bill when applied for at the Pension Bureau in 1885 was denied on the ground "that the rate he was receiving was commensurate with the degree of his disability, a board of surgeons having reported that he was receiving a liberal rating."

I can discover no just ground for reversing this determination and making a further discrimination in favor of this pensioner.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 19, 1886.

The SPEAKER. What action does the House take? If there be no objection the message will be referred to the Committtee on Invalid Pensions, and will be printed.

There was no objection.

JOEL D. MONROE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 4058, entitled "An act for the relief of Joel D. Monroe."

The claimant mentioned in this bill enlisted in August, 1864, and was discharged with his regiment June 4, 1865.

The record of his short military service exhibits no mention of any injury or disability; but in June, 1880, fifteen years after his discharge, he filed in the Pension Bureau a claim for a pension based upon the allegation that in December, 1864, he was injured by a falling of a tree which struck him on his head, affecting both of his eyes. He added to this allegation the further complaint that he contracted rheumatism while in the service.

The application for a pension was rejected by the Pension Bureau because there was no record of the disabilities claimed, nor was satisfactory proof furnished that any such disabilities originated in the service.

I am so entirely satisfied with this determination of the Pension Bureau that I am constrained to withhold my approval of this bill.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 19, 1886.

JOHN W. FARRIS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval a bill originating in the House of Representatives entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Farris," which bill is numbered 6136.

The claimant mentioned in this bill enlisted in the month of October, 1861, and was mustered out of the service in August, 1865.

In 1881, sixteen years after his discharge, he filed an application for a pension, alleging that he was afflicted with chronic diarrhea contracted in the Army, and in 1885 his claim was allowed, and he was granted a pension for that cause.

In September of the same year, and after this pension was granted, he filed an application for an increase of his rate, alleging that in 1884 his eyes became affected in consequence of his previous ailments and the debility consequent thereupon.

The ingenuity developed in the constant and persistent attacks upon the public Treasury by those claiming pensions, and the increase of those already granted, is exhibited in bold relief by this attempt to include sore eyes among the results of diarrhea.

I am entirely satisfied with the opinion of the medical referee, who, after examining this case in October, 1885, reported that "the disease of the eyes can not be admitted to be a result of chronic diarrhea."

On all grounds it seems to me that this claimant should be contented with the pension which has been already allowed him.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 21, 1886.

HENRY HIPPLE, JR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 6897, entitled "An act granting a pension to Henry Hipple, jr."

This claimant entered the Army as a drummer August 6, 1862, and was discharged May 29, 1863.

In 1879, sixteen years after his discharge, he appears to have discovered that during his short term of military service in the inhospitable climate of Port Tobacco, within the State of Maryland, he contracted rheumatism to such an extent as to entitle him to pension, for which he then applied.

It is conceded that he received no medical treatment while in the Army for this complaint, nor does he seem to have been attended by a physician since his discharge.

Without commenting further upon the features of this case, which tend to discredit it, I deem myself obliged to disapprove this bill on the ground that there is an almost complete failure to state any facts that should entitle the claimant to a pension.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 21, 1886.

FRED. J. LEESE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 3624, entitled "An act granting a pension to Fred. J. Leese."

This claimant enlisted September 7, 1864, and was discharged June 4, 1865. During his short term of service there does not appear on the records any evidence of disability.

But in November, 1883, eighteen years after his discharge, he filed his application for a pension, alleging that in November, 1864, he contracted chronic diarrhea from exposure and severe work.

His claim has not yet been fully passed upon by the Pension Bureau, which in my opinion is sufficient reason why this bill should not become a law. I am also thoroughly convinced, from examination of the case that the claimant should not be pensioned.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 21, 1886.

JOHN HUNTER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval House bill No. 1990, entitled "An act granting a pension to John Hunter."

The claimant was enrolled July 20, 1864, and was discharged by expiration of his term of service July 13, 1865.

During four months of the twelve while he remained in the service he is reported as "absent sick." His hospital record shows that he was treated for intermittent fever and rheumatism. In 1879, fourteen years after his discharge, he filed his claim for a pension, alleging that in May, 1864, he received a gunshot wound in the right leg while in a skirmish. The month of May, 1864, is included in the time during which, by the record, he appears to have been absent sick and undergoing treatment for fever and rheumatism. His claim was rejected in December, 1884, on the ground that there was no record of the alleged wound, and the claimant was unable, though aided by the Bureau, to prove that the injury claimed was due to the service.

The evidence recited in the report of the Congressional committee to whom this bill was referred, though it tends to show, if reliable, that when the soldier returned from his service his leg was affected, fails to show a continuous disability from that cause. It is stated that about five years ago, while the claimant was gathering dandelions, in stepping across a ditch his leg broke. The doctor who attended him states that the leg was about four weeks longer in uniting than is usual, but he is not represented as giving an opinion that the fracture had anything to do with his patient's military service.

I find no reference to his condition since his recovery from the fracture of his leg, and there seems to be no allegation of present disability either from Army service or the injury sustained while gathering dandelions.

GROVER CLEVELAND

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 19, 1886.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PERKINS. If these messages are not referred to a committee will it not be the privilege of the House to vote upon them, they being submitted to the House for that purpose by the Speaker?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. PERKINS. And if they are referred to a committee and the cases are again returned to the House, will they be privileged?

The SPEAKER. They are privileged matters under the Constitution.

ELIJAH P. HENSLEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval House bill No. 1707, entitled "An act granting a pension to Elijah P. Hensley."

The records of the War Department show that this claimant was mustered into the Third North Carolina Regiment, but on the muster-out roll of his company he is reported to have deserted April 3, 1865, and there is no record of any discharge or disability.

In September, 1866, an order was issued from his department headquarters removing the charge of desertion against him. Thirteen days afterward, and on the 25th day of September, 1866, he filed an application for pension, which in 1868 was granted. He drew such pension, dating from 1865 until 1877, when, upon evidence that the injury for which he was pensioned was not received in the line of duty, his name was dropped from the rolls.

The pensioner appealed from this determination of the Pension Bureau to the Secretary of the Interior, who, as lately as May, 1885, rendered a decision sustaining the action of the bureau.

I find nothing in the facts presented to me which, in my opinion, justifies the reversal of the judgment of the bureau and the Secretary of the Interior.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 21, 1886.

ELIZABETH LUCE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 5997, entitled "An act granting a pension to Elizabeth Luce."

The claimant named in this bill is the widow of John W. Luce, who entered the Army in August, 1861, and who was discharged in January, 1864, for a disability declared at the time in the surgeon's certificate to arise from "organic stricture of the urethra," which, from his statement, existed at the time of his enlistment.

Notwithstanding the admission which thus appears to have been made by him at the time of his discharge, he soon afterward made an application for a pension, alleging that his difficulty arose from his being thrown forward on the pommel of his saddle when in the service.

Upon an examination of this claim by a special examiner, it is stated that no one could be found who had any knowledge of such an injury, and the claim was rejected.

In 1883, twenty years after the soldier alleged he was injured in the manner stated, he died and the cause of his death was declared to be "chronic gastritis, complicated with kidney difficulty."

It is alleged that the examinations made by the Pension Bureau developed the fact that the deceased soldier was a man of quite intemperate habits.

The theory upon which this widow should be pensioned can only be that the death of her husband resulted from a disability or injury contracted or received in the military service. It seems to me that however satisfactorily the injury which he described may be established, and though every suspicion as to his habits be dismissed, there can hardly possibly be any connection between such an injury and the causes to which his death is attributed.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 19, 1886.

NATIONAL MUSEUM.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the director of the National Museum for the preservation of collections, current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PRODUCTION OF PRECIOUS METALS IN 1885.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the Director of the Mint upon the production of precious metals for the year 1885; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS ALLOWED AND UNPROVIDED FOR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplemental list of claims allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations as to the balances of which are exhausted or carried to the surplus fund; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FORT NIAGARA, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of an appropriation for the protection of the site of Fort Niagara, New York; which was read, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TRUST FUNDS AND UNEXPENDED BALANCES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, with accompanying schedules, in response to a resolution of the House calling for information concerning trust funds and unexpended balances in the custody of the several Departments; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. Several days ago, the Chair laid before the House the agricultural appropriation bill with the Senate amendments, and it was temporarily laid on the table. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], the Chair understands, desires to have it referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. HATCH. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and that the Senate amendments be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

FORFEITURE OF LAND GRANTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 392) declaring forfeited certain grants of land made to certain States in aid of the construction of railroads, with the Senate amendments thereto; which were referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ROAD TO NATIONAL CEMETERY, KNOXVILLE, TENN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5866) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Knoxville, Tenn., with the Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate to that bill be non-concurred in and a conference requested.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, strike out all after "road," in line 3, down to and including "grounds," in line 14, and insert "from the intersection of Broad and Holston streets, thence along the line of Holston street to the intersection of said street with Munson street at the northeast corner of the national cemetery at Knoxville, Tenn."

Page 1, line 15, strike out "50" and insert "30."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK]?

There being no objection, the Senate amendments were non-concurred in and a conference was requested.

J. G. FLOURNOY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7650) to remove the political disabilities of J. G. Flournoy, of Mississippi, with Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the amendments of the Senate to that bill be concurred in. They are merely formal.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1, strike out "I" and insert "J."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to remove the political disabilities of J. G. Flournoy, of Mississippi."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia that these amendments be concurred in?

There being no objection, the amendments were concurred in.

COURT-HOUSE, KEOKUK, IOWA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 4498) authorizing an additional appropriation of $25,000 for the court-house at Keokuk, Iowa, to make the same fire-proof, with Senate amendments thereto.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 strike out "25" and insert "40."

Strike out all after "necessary," in line 5, down to and including line 7, and insert:

"To enlarge and complete such building at Keokuk, Iowa, and to finish the same as a fire-proof building, the sum of $140,000, to be the limit of the cost of said building."

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendments to this bill are in exact accord with the wish of the Committee on Public Grounds of the House. The bill passed the House originally under a peculiar order, and limited the amount of the appropriation to $25,000, although a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury had advised us of the necessity for an appropriation of $40,000. The Senate has simply amended the bill in accordance with the suggestion of the Secretary. I move that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate amendments were concurred in.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE IN GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 544) granting leave of absence to employés in the Government Printing Office, which had been returned from the Senate with amendments and a request for a conference.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to this bill and agree to the conference asked.

Several MEMBERS. Let the amendments be read.

The amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to non-concurring in these amendments of the Senate and agreeing to the request for a conference?

Mr. MORRISON. I think the bill and amendments should be referred. We can not understand the amendments from this hasty reading.

The bill, with the amendments, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

LOCAL OR SPECIAL TERRITORIAL LAWS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5179) to prohibit the passage of local or special laws in the Territories of the United States.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been returned from the Senate with amendments and a request for a conference.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the request for a conference.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let the amendments be read.

The amendments were read.

Mr. SPRINGER. At the request of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], I move that this bill, with the amendments of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Territories, and that the amendments be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, returned from the Senate with amendments and a request for a conference thereon, were severally referred as indicated:

The bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of Grafton Monroe—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 6311) granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Maria Walker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WILLIAMSPORT, PA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2148) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts of the United States, the post-office, and other Government offices, at Williamsport, Pa.," and making an additional appropriation therefor.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been returned from the Senate with amendments and a request for a conference.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I move that the House non-concur in the amendments and agree to the conference.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the reference of the bill and amendments to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill and amendments was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; the bill having been returned with a message that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection this bill with the accompanying message of the Senate, will lie on the table for the present.

There was no objection.

RIGHT OF WAY FOR RAILROADS IN NORTHERN MONTANA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2281) granting to railroads the right of way through the Indian reservation in Northern Montana; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. SCOTT. A House bill exactly the same in its provisions as this bill in the Senate has been favorably reported by the Committee on Public Lands and is now on the Calendar. I ask unanimous consent that this Senate bill be now taken up and put on its passage.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COBB. I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. COBB said: I have read Senate bill No. 2281, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] desired to have considered, and I withdraw my objection.

There being no further objection, the bill was taken up, read a third time, and passed.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Bills of the following titles were severally read twice, and referred as indicated:

The bill (S. 84) for the relief of the First National Bank of Portland, Oreg.—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 184) for the encouragement of the American merchant marine, and to promote postal and commercial relations with foreign countries—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The bill (S. 380) for the relief of Mrs. Henrietta H. Cole—to the Committee on Patents.

The bill (S. 492) for the relief of Frank Della Terre and Susan F. Della Terre, heirs of Peter Della Terre—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 582) for the relief of the board of field officers of the Fourth Brigade of South Carolina Volunteer State troops—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 634) relating to sales for taxes in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 766) for the relief of Francis Denmead—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 851) to amend the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 925) to grant Dearborn Park, in the city of Chicago, to said city for the use and benefit of public and benevolent institutions—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 975) for the relief of Mathilda Victor—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (S. 1072) to prevent the publication of lottery advertisements, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 1380) regulating the sale of distilled and fermented liquors in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 1388) for the relief of the trustees of Isaac R. Trimble—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1717) for the relief of Robert H. Montgomery, a captain in the Fifth Cavalry, United States Army—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (S. 1768) granting a pension to John D. Fincher—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 1772) providing for the purchase of "the Capron collection of Japanese works of art"—to the Committee on the Library.

The bill (S. 1817) for the relief of John McKernan—to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 1861) to provide for the sale of the site of Fort Omaha, Nebr., the sale or removal of the improvements thereof, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 1948) increasing the rate of pension to minor children, and extending the pensionable period therefor—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 1976) to provide for the survey of certain historic grounds, locations, and military works—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 1990) to provide for the adjustment of matters connected with certain judicial proceedings in Pennsylvania in which the United States was a party—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 2004) authorizing the transmission of weather reports through the mails free of postage—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The bill (S. 2199) to increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 2254) granting an increase of pension to Mary von Kusserow—to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (S. 2265) for the relief of Sarah E. Perine, widow and administratrix of William Perine, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 2692) to amend and correct the act approved June 1, 1886, granting a pension to J. H. Thornburg—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Joint resolution (S. R. 3) for the relief of the widow and children of John W. Judson, late agent of the United States at Oswego, N. Y., for public works on Lake Ontario—to the Committee on Claims.

Joint resolution (S. R. 55) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Joint resolution (S. R. 56) authorizing Augustus J. Cassard to accept a gold medal conferred upon him by the Government of France—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of the report of the International Polar Expedition to Lady Franklin Bay, with amendments of the Senate thereto; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

RETURN OF BILLS TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House messages from the Senate requesting the return of bills of the following titles:

The bill (H. R. 7341) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Natchez, Miss.; and

The bill (S. 2292) to provide for the settlement of a certain Cherokee claim, under a treaty of February 14, 1833.

The SPEAKER. Without objection these orders will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

PURCHASE OF LAND, SAN ANTONIO.

The SPEAKER announced as managers at the conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 7183) to authorize the purchase of a certain tract of land near San Antonio, Tex., Mr. CUTCHEON, Mr. LAIRD, and Mr. ERMENTROUT.

UNITED STATES BARRACKS, BATON ROUGE.

The SPEAKER announced as managers at the conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 985) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer the United States barracks at Baton Rouge, La., to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College of said State for educational purposes, namely, Mr. WHEELER, Mr. DARGAN, and Mr. STEELE.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (H. R. 248) for the relief of Henry Gee;

A bill (H. R. 868) appropriating money for the completion of the public building at Frankfort, Ky.;

A bill (H. R. 5891) to authorize a patent for the south half of the southeast quarter of section 34, in township 22, of range 15 east of the sixth principal meridian to Elizur B. Hill;

A bill (H. R. 2953) for the relief of John P. Bush and James Grigsby;

A bill (H. R. 3440) making an appropriation to construct a macadamized road from the United States barracks in Saint Bernard Parish, Louisiana, to the national military cemetery at Chalmette, in said parish;

A bill (H. R. 3475) for the relief of William Talbert;

A bill (H. R. 3998) for the relief of Susan A. Wamack, administratrix of the estate of Stephen M. Farish, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 4009) for the relief of Ann B. Hubbard, administratrix;

A bill (H. R. 4063) to authorize the improvement of the water-power in the Mississippi River at Little Falls, Minn.;

A bill (H. R. 4115) for the relief of John Taggart;

A bill (H. R. 5221) to change the time of holding United States circuit and district courts in southern district of the State of Florida;

A bill (H. R. 5547) for the erection of a public building at Savannah, Ga.;

A bill (H. R. 6590) granting a pension to Catharine Whitesell;

A bill (H. R. 6665) for the erection of a public building at El Paso, Tex.;

A bill (H. R. 7735) making an appropriation to complete the public building at Hannibal, Mo., in accordance with the original plan of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and to make the same fire-proof;

A bill (S. 16) for the relief of J. A. Wilson, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Gregory Jarrett, deceased;

A bill (S. 24) for the relief of Samuel B. Seat, administrator of Christian Kropp, deceased;

A bill (S. 365) for the relief of Martin L. Bundy;

A bill (S. 498) for the relief of George D. Dudley;

A bill (S. 579) granting a franking privilege to Julia D. Grant;

A bill (S. 2073) for the relief of the officers and crew of the light-house tender Lilly, and the inspector of the fourth United States light-house district;

A bill (S. 2222) to authorize the Cheyenne and Northern Railroad Company to build its road across the Fort Russell and Fort Laramie military reservations;

A bill (S. 1352) granting the right of way to the Leavenworth, Northern and Southern Railway Company through the military reservation of Fort Leavenworth; and Joint resolution (S. R. 18) for the relief of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (H. R. 4177) to reduce the fee on domestic money-orders for sums not exceeding $5;

A bill (H. R. 4415) to make the allowances for clerk-hire to post-masters of the first and second class post-offices cover the cost of clerical labor in the money-order business, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 5553) for the relief of E. J. Phillips; and

A bill (H. R. 5888) to legalize and validate the general laws of the Territory of Dakota for the incorporation of insurance companies.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. JAMES, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. BENNETT, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. COOPER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

SPECIAL PENSION ACTS.

Mr. MATSON. I rise to present a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report back with an amendment the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public service, to inform the House how many persons are now drawing pensions from the Government of the United States by reason of special pension acts having been passed in their behalf, and what amount of money is required annually to meet the obligations incurred by the Government to this class of pensioners.

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. BLANCHARD, introduced in the House on the 14th of June, 1886, and referred to the committee, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

This committee regard the resolution as timely, and that the answer thereto by the honorable Secretary of the Interior will give to the House and the country valuable information which they should possess in a condensed form.

The committee regards the purpose of the resolution to acquire information as to the number and cost of original pensions granted by special acts, and not to relate to acts to increase pensions, and therefore ask that said resolution, to be made more specific, be amended by inserting the word "original," in line 4 between the word "drawing" and the word "pensions," and, as amended, recommend that it do pass.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. MATSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. M. HOBBS.

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 118) for the relief of J. M. Hobbs, and that the same be considered at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $973.44 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the benefit of J. M. Hobbs, of Bentonville, Benton County, Arkansas, for tobacco furnished the Indian Department, under contract with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in 1860.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BEACH. This is apparently a very stale claim, having originated in 1860. I should like some explanation of it.

Mr. PEEL. A report from the Committee on Claims accompanies the bill, which will give a better explanation than I can give.

The report (by Mr. HOWARD) was read, as follows:

The claim is for 3,042 pounds of manufactured tobacco furnished the Government, upon contract with A. B. Greenwood, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for the use of the Indian Bureau, at the rate of 32 cents per pound, $973 44.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, A. B. Greenwood, states upon oath that in the fall of 1860 he was Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and at that time, by the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, with the approval of the President, he was directed to repair to what was then known as Bent's Fort, on the Upper Arkansas, to meet the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians, for the purpose of concluding a treaty with those tribes. A train loaded with goods was to be sent out for these Indians, and it became necessary to procure tobacco, and it was thought best to procure a good article; and upon making inquiry as to article and price, he contracted, as Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with J. M. Hobbs (this claimant) for what tobacco it was thought necessary to purchase. By the terms of the contract the tobacco was to be delivered at Kansas City, Mo., to be sent out upon the train, which was to start from Kansas City; that from some cause the train started earlier than first agreed upon.

The Commissioner states he did know the reason for the train starting earlier than the time first agreed upon, but has now forgotten. The tobacco was delivered by the time stipulated. On the arrival of the Commissioner he found the tobacco stored at Kansas City, the place agreed upon in the contract for the delivery of the same, at a warehouse used for storing Government goods; took a portion of the tobacco with him and distributed on his trip to the Indians. On the return of the Commissioner from the Indian country to Kansas City, left the tobacco in charge of the warehouseman, subject to orders from the Indian Office at Washington, intending the tobacco to be used in supplying the Indians the next season.

The Commissioner further states that he had kept a full and complete memorandum of his trip, &c., but it was burned during the late war, with every other paper he possessed of any value; for that reason is unable to fix dates precisely, &c.; that the tobacco delivered was 3,042 pounds, at 32 cents per pound. In regard to the price, it was thought to be at the time the most advantageous to the Government.

The claimant swears to the correctness of the account, and that the tobacco was delivered according to the terms of the contract.

John Lechliter, an expert tobacconist, swears he was an employé of J. M. Hobbs in the summer of 1860, at Hobbs's tobacco factory at Bentonville, Ark., putting up tobacco, and that in the latter part of the summer of that year two loads of manufactured tobacco, grade No. 1, were loaded up at the factory to be carried, as he understood, to Kansas City, Mo., upon a contract with A. B. Greenwood, then Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to be issued to the Indians; that the tobacco at that time was worth at the factory 32 cents per pound.

Your committee are of the opinion that the contract was made in good faith; that the tobacco was delivered according to the terms of the contract, and that the same has never been paid for; that the price charged was reasonable for the quality furnished, and that it is reasonable to presume that the tobacco was used for the benefit of the Government, and that the weight of evidence is overwhelmingly in favor of the correctness of the claim. They therefore recommend that the bill do pass without amendment.

Mr. BEACH. The report fails to give any reason why this claimant has slept so long on his rights.

Mr. PEEL. The claim has been before Congress for ten years.

Mr. BEACH. And reported favorably?

Mr. PEEL. It has been more than once reported favorably.

Mr. BEACH. Under those circumstances I will not object.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

NEW MEXICO SUPREME COURT.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 2850, a bill (H. R. 9642) to provide for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 2850 was laid on the table.

TERMS OF COURT IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. ROGERS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 1458) to provide for holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan at Bay City, in said district; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MONTANA SUPREME COURT.

Mr. ROGERS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 503) relating to the supreme court of Montana Territory, and providing for the establishment of judicial districts in said Territory; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER IN MONTANA.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7851) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River in Montana; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE OVER TENNESSEE RIVER.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 8978) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Sheffield, Ala., and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS WEST PASCAGOULA RIVER, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6114) to require the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas Railroad Company to construct and maintain a suitable draw in said company's bridge across the West Pascagoula River, in the State of Mississippi; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRISP. Those bridge bills, I think under the direction of the Speaker, go to the Private Calendar and not to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WELLBORN). That reference has been made.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1730) providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate the truth of alleged discoveries of the specific cause of yellow fever and of a method of preventing that disease by inoculation, and to obtain all information possible as to the cause and prevention of that disease; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TENEDO TEN EYCK.

Mr. DARGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3032) to authorize the President to restore Tenedo Ten Eyck to his former rank in the Army and to place him upon the retired-list of Army officers; which was referred to the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission for the minority of the committee to file their views in opposition to that bill, to be printed with the report of the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

J. M. HIATT.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 1942) for the relief of J. M. Hiatt, only surviving partner of Hiatt & Co.; which was referred to the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

J. G. FELL AND OTHERS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 3209, a bill (H. R. 9643) for the relief of J. G. Fell, Edward Hoopes, and George Burnham; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, JEFFERSON, TEX.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 2442 a bill (H. R. 8544), for the erection of a public building at Jefferson, Tex.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The House bill H. R. 2442 was laid on the table.

MRS. SARAH YOUNG.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2113) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Young; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CAROLINE P. BOLTON.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9004) for the relief of Caroline P. Bolton; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY E. HEDRICK.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8623) granting a pension to Mary E. Hedrick; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GREEN FIELDS.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9170) for the relief of Green Fields; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES HAHNEMAN.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8180) granting an increase of pension to Charles Hahneman; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY PARROTT.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7952) granting a pension to Mary Parrott; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY CORBETT.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9213) granting a pension to Mary Corbett; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 8809) granting a pension to Ashley C. Rice;
A bill (H. R. 4030) granting a pension to George A. Warren;
A bill (H. R. 8423) granting a pension to Mary H. Phillips;
A bill (H. R. 4036) granting a pension to Mary A. Mykins;
A bill (H. R. 7288) granting a pension to George R. Long;
A bill (S. 158) granting a pension to Mary A. Mykins; and
A bill (S. 1459) granting an increase of pension to Walter A. Donaldson.

MARY GRIMES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9247) granting a pension to Mary Grimes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LIVINGSTON CLARK.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7547) granting a pension to Livingston Clark; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RICHARD FOREMAN.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 9248) to increase the pension of Richard Foreman; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. SARAH RANDLES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7352) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Randles; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PHILA CLARK.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 8847) for the relief of Phila Clark; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY TARBELL.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 6656) for the relief of Mary Tarbell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES H. BLOOD.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 2263) granting a pension to Col. James H. Blood; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY WOOD.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7971) granting a pension to Mary Wood; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES SMITHPETER.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 752) granting a pension to James Smithpeter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CLARA B. DAVIDSON.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 2321) granting an increase of pension to Clara B. Davidson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 725) to pension Mary Ann Perkins; and A bill (H. R. 4576) for the relief of Mary Brady.

REBECCA MORRIS.

Mr. O'HARA, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8486) granting a pension to Rebecca Morris; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar; and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

IRENE GOOGINS.

Mr. O'HARA, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8635) granting a pension to Irene Googins; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NIRIUS CISSELL.

Mr. O'HARA, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9026) granting a pension to Nirius Cissell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS WEEKLEY.

Mr. O'HARA, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8437) granting a pension to Thomas Weekley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. O'HARA, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 7994) granting a pension to Moses Triplett;
A bill (H. R. 7783) for the relief of Nancy E. Sams;
A bill (H. R. 7551) granting a pension to Anderson W. Young; and A bill (H. R. 7782) for the relief of James A. Sams.

LUCINDA BARRETT.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 356) granting a pension to Lucinda Barrett; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ANDREW J. VANORDER.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 8067) to pension Andrew J. Vanorder; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MISSOURI ANDERSON.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5171) granting a pension to Missouri Anderson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARY KAYLOR.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6423) for the relief of Mary Kaylor; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LEWIS A. CRONKHITE.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8352) for the relief of Lewis A. Cronkhite; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORRIN P. COOLEY.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with amendment the bill (S. 1844) granting a pension to Orrin P. Cooley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HENRY LAFNER.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 2308) granting a pension to Henry Lafner; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ANNA M. MARSHALL.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 2393) granting a pension to Anna M. Marshall; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GEORGE FAULK.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 2147) granting a pension to George Faulk; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN P. TAYLOR.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1779) for the relief of John P. Taylor; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

THOMAS G. POLLEY.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5629) granting a pension to Thomas G. Polley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH JONES.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 9301) granting a pension to Joseph Jones; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MAHALA BROWN.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8384) for the relief of Mahala Brown; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM B. EVE.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8720) granting a pension to William B. Eve; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HENRY P. REED.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3963) granting a pension to Henry P. Reed; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SARAH A. JONES.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 8355) for the relief of Sarah A. Jones; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JAMES H. HUSK.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 7035) granting an increase of pension to James H. Husk; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SUSANNAH ARTHINGTON.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4827) for the relief of Susannah Arthington; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

EMILY THREADGILL.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7418) granting a pension to Emily Threadgill; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM M'FADDEN.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6027) granting a pension to William McFadden; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

OWEN P. WILSON.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6069) granting a pension to Owen P. Wilson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LINNÆUS W. RISLEY.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8670) granting a pension to Linnæus W. Risley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN SELBY.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6026) granting a pension to John Selby; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LARKIN DELPH.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7504) granting a pension to Larkin Delph; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 2655) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Kelley; which, on motion of Mr. GOFF, was referred to the Committee of the Whole House of the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 941) granting a pension to Esther V. Blackburn; which, on motion of Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 4284) granting a pension to Franklin R. Dunsmore;

A bill (H. R. 3966) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Margaret Lynch;

A bill (H. R. 3986) granting a pension to Alonzo A. Chaddock;

A bill (H. R. 8669) granting a pension to Thomas R. Elliott;

A bill (H. R. 5626) granting a pension to Cressy Roberts;

A bill (H. R. 7449) granting a pension to Benjamin Ruh;

A bill (H. R. 4858) to increase the pension of Ann Leddy;

A bill (H. R. 3434) granting a pension to Greenbury Lynch;

A bill (H. R. 884) granting a pension to I. H. R. Caldwell;

A bill (H. R. 5276) granting a pension to Christopher H. Mathewson;

A bill (H. R. 6065) granting a pension to Mrs. Isabella Bullock;

A bill (H. R. 4289) for the relief of Atha L. Isenbery;

A bill (H. R. 8887) for the relief of James F. Cullen;

A bill (H. R. 6070) granting a pension to William M. Campbell;

A bill (H. R. 1654) granting a pension to C. C. White;

A bill (H. R. 7041) granting a pension to Samuel Anderson;

A bill (H. R. 4736) granting a pension to William P. Lowery;

A bill (H. R. 3417) to restore the name of Robert N. Doughty to the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 4269) for the relief of Saraphina E. Dukes, widow of Alexander Dukes;

A bill (H. R. 3959) granting a pension to Benjamin Lucas;

A bill (H. R. 7274) to place the name of Joseph Frisbee on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 3423) granting a pension to David B. England;

A bill (H. R. 5465) granting a pension to Robert Hollan;

A bill (H. R. 2356) granting a pension to Hartford Matherly;

A bill (H. R. 8166) granting a pension to Joseph Bastin;

A bill (H. R. 4504) granting a pension to Sanford M. Dougherty;

A bill (H. R. 2387) granting an increase of pension to Freemorton Young;

A bill (H. R. 2380) restoring the name of Elizabeth French to the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 4734) to increase the pension of Mrs. D. P. Woodbury;

A bill (H. R. 7943) granting a pension to Daniel F. Tuder;

A bill (H. R. 4004) granting a pension to Mary Howard;

A bill (H. R. 7706) granting a pension to Thomas Hoskins;

A bill (H. R. 2281) granting a pension to Clevlin C. Creech;

A bill (H. R. 5099) granting a pension to William B. Davis; and

A bill (H. R. 3974) granting a pension to Sarah A. Hicks.

FRANCES M. LAMBERT.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1063) for the relief of Frances M. Lambert; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MINNIE C. BOUCHER.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6473) granting a pension to Minnie C. Boucher; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. MARGARET DUNLAP.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 2167) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret Dunlap; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MANHATTAN PICKETT.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 7165) to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett, with the recommendation that they be non-concurred in; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDWARD CORNING.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 1666) granting a pension to Edward Corning; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying bill, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 785) granting a pension to George Ham; and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MRS. HENRIETTA M. DRUM HUNT.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 8869) granting a pension to Mrs. Henrietta M. Drum Hunt; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. JOSEPHINE DE COSTA THOMAS.

Mr. WOLFORD, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4688) granting a pension to Mrs. Josephine De Costa Thomas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF ISAAC P. TICE, DECEASED.

Mr. TRIGG, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 1311) for the relief of the administrator of the estate of Isaac P. Tice, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

A. B. NORTON.

Mr. LANHAM, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 282) for the relief of A. B. Norton; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. LANHAM, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back the bill (H. R. 2409) for the relief of A. B. Norton, with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

HENRY HERMAN.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 2028) for the relief of Henry Herman; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELLIE M'ROBERTS.

Mr. MULLER, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5711) for the relief of Ellie McRoberts; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CRUMBO & MELCHER.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3330) making an appropriation of $1,958 to reimburse Messrs. Crumbo & Melcher for money lost on their contract to construct a roadway from New Albany, Ind., to the national cemetery near that place, caused by change of grade; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRITISH BARK CHANCE.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 2088) for the relief of the officers, owners, and crew of the British bark Chance; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FLORA SKINNER.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 580) for the relief of Flora Skinner; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CLAIBORNE DE LOACH.

Mr. NEAL, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 9645) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Claiborne De Loach, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE B. COSBY.

Mr. MCKENNA, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7873) for the relief of George B. Cosby; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANK P. MURPHY.

Mr. MCKENNA, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 2237) for the relief of Frank P. Murphy; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. KINKEAD.

Mr. MCKENNA, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 1353) referring to the Court of Claims for adjudication the claims of John H. Kinkead, Samuel Sussman, and Charles O. Wood; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCKENNA, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back the bill (H. R. 1453) referring to the Court of Claims for adjudication the claims of John H. Kinkead, Samuel Sussman, and Charles O. Wood, with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

WILLIAM M. MORRISON.

Mr. FLEEGER, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 2629) for the relief of William M. Morrison; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN WIGHTMAN.

Mr. FLEEGER, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2530) for the relief of the legal representatives of John Wightman, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REPRESENTATIVES OF ELIZA N. FERRIS.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2427) for the relief of the legal representatives of Eliza N. Ferris; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of bills of the following titles; and the same were referred to the Committee on War Claims:

A bill (H. R. 1033) for the relief of the heirs of William Pitcher, Axel Hayford, and Samuel Otis and John B. Ferguson; and

A bill (H. R. 9060) for the relief of William H. Young.

E. S. ROWLAND.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7294) for the relief of E. S. Rowland; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANCES W. DYER.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 1071) for the relief of Frances W. Dyer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANNA M. COGSWELL.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 9646) for the relief of Anna M. Cogswell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. ELLEN MALLOY.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported a bill (H. R. 9647) for the relief of Mrs. Ellen Malloy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HIRAM JOHNSON AND OTHERS.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 2306) for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others.

Mr. J. M. TAYLOR. I ask that that report be placed on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. That order will be made, and the report will be printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask permission to file the views of the minority on this bill.

There being no objection, leave was granted to file the views of the minority, to be printed with the report of the majority.

NATHANIEL M'KAY AND OTHERS.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported back with amendments the bill (S. 1477) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF CHARLES B. SMITH.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 148) for the relief of the heirs of Charles B. Smith, deceased, late a lieutenant in the Fifth Iowa Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN A. OURSLER.

Mr. PERRY, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 9648) for the relief of John A. Oursler; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS F. PERKINS.

Mr. PERRY, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported a bill (H. R. 9649) for the relief of Thomas F. Perkins, administrator of Eliza M. Dawson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARYLAND ROMAN CATHOLIC CLERGYMEN.

Mr. PERRY, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported a bill (H. R. 9650) for the relief of the corporation of Roman Catholic Clergymen of the State of Maryland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SARAH E. E. PERINE.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on War Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 5714, a bill (H. R. 9651) for the relief of Sarah E. E. Perine, widow and administratrix of William Perine, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

D. W. GLASSIE AND OTHERS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2328) for the relief of D. W. and Minna H. Glassie and Joseph C. Nash; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. FRANCES MARSHALL.

Mr. KLEINER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 5362) for the relief of Mrs. Frances Marshall; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. HEISTAND, from the Committee on War Claims, reported adversely on the petition of James P. Carroll for commutation of rations while on recruiting service; which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. HIESTAND, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8496) for the relief of the heirs of Christopher Cott; and it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LANDS AT SAULT DE ST. MARIE.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8425) to confirm certain lands to the village of Sault de St. Marie; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION.

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1130) to exempt from taxation the property held by the trustees of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompany report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, also reported favorably the bill (S. 1129) to exempt from taxation all property held by the trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PROTECTION OF LIFE AND PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DOWDNEY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back the bill (H. R. 9034) for the further protection of property from fire and safety of lives in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF WILLIAM BLAIR LORD.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back with an amendment a resolution for the relief of the estate of William Blair Lord; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. SPOONER, the Committee on Accounts was discharged from the further consideration of the resolution for the relief of Minnie Lyles; and it was referred to the Committee on Claims.

MONUMENT TO ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on the Library, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2012) for the erection of a monument to Abraham Lincoln; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

STATUES OF COLUMBUS, LAFAYETTE, AND GARFIELD.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on the Library, also reported back favorably the joint resolution (S. R. 35) setting apart public reservations for statues to Columbus, Lafayette, and James A. Garfield; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INSPECTION OF STEAM VESSELS.

Mr. DINGLEY, from the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, reported a bill (H. R. 9652) to amend the laws relating to inspection of steam vessels; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RELINQUISHING LANDS TO SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. HENLEY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1110) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco and their grantees; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

W. H. WARD.

Mr. ATKINSON, from the Committee on Patents, reported favorably the bill (S. 2158) for the relief of W. H. Ward; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TELEGRAPH, SANFORD TO POINT JUPITER, FLA.

Mr. VIELE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the bill (S. 2652) for the construction of a military telegraph line from Sanford, Fla., to Point Jupiter, Fla., and the establishment of a signal station; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF JOHN W. REED.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 21, 1886.

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to Addie S. Reed, widow of John W. Reed, late an employé of the House, a sum equal to his salary for six months, and also the expenses of his last illness and funeral, not to exceed $250."

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution, having considered the same, respectfully report that said John W. Reed was an employé of the House as a messenger during the Forty-eighth Congress, and also during the Forty-ninth Congress up to the date of his death, May 20, 1886. His widow, the said Addie S. Reed, is in very needy circumstances, his whole estate outside of a small homestead being insufficient to pay his funeral expenses. Following repeated precedents, the committee recommend that the resolution pass.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. If any gentleman wishes to ask any question about this matter, the facts are within the personal knowledge of the gentleman from Texas on my left, to whom I will yield for the purpose of such explanation. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The resolution reported by the committee was adopted.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF RULES—PAYMENT OF PENSIONS.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last I gave notice of my then intention to renew the motion to consider the tariff bill. I have no expectation that any different result would now be attained from that arrived at when the motion was before made. Therefore I shall not renew the motion to-day. I now call up a privileged matter, the report of the Committee on Rules, proposing an amendment to Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be in order, when any general bill or proposition to increase the rates or amounts of pensions, or to grant pensions to persons not previously entitled thereto by law, is under consideration, to amend the same so as to provide by taxation or otherwise for the payment thereof; but no such amendment shall be in order unless the net revenue provided for shall be thereby set apart for the sole purpose of paying such increased pensions.

The proposed rule or amendment of the rule will, when adopted, be clause 9 of Rule XXIII, and is intended to give the House power, when granting additional or increased pensions, to provide the means for paying them at the same time and by the same bill in which the increase is made.

The number and magnitude of proposed increases now pending, in view of the present condition of the Treasury, its receipts and expenditures, make this amendment necessary, unless we would mock those to whom we grant pensions while leaving the Government without the means of paying them.

Since the late war we have paid for pensions more than eight hundred millions. When we have paid another $800,000,000 there will be pensions yet to pay. The arrears bill passed in 1879 was estimated to cost from twenty-five to thirty-five millions. It has already cost nearly two hundred, and will have cost $260,000,000 when all payments are made, or eight times the amount stated when the arrears bill was passed.

We have at this session already increased widows' pensions and passed through the House the Mexican pension bill. The two together will increase the yearly pension-roll not less than ten and maybe as much as fifteen millions of dollars.

There are still pending in this Congress the maimed or crippled soldiers' pension bill, the destitute or poor soldiers' pension bill, the bill to pension soldiers who suffered in prisons, and the new arrears bill or bill to repeal the arrears limitation. The cost of this last arrears bill is estimated by the Commissioner of Pensions at $222,000,000, without including what may be required to pay rejected claims and claims not yet presented. I assume, therefore, that it is not safe to estimate the whole cost of the pending arrears bill at less than $300,000,000, of which more than $50,000,000 would be payable in the first year. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] but a few days since predicted a deficit for the coming year of $14,000,000. Others have predicted a yet more doleful condition of the Treasury for the fiscal year beginning with next month.

I do not share in these gloomy forebodings, but the surplus will not be large as compared with the demand for increased pensions, and certainly none of those who so much protest their earnest desire to grant all the pensions asked for will refuse to provide the money to pay them. The source from which the money would be obtained would be in the discretion of Congress, but must be obtained from some source, whether in the same bill or not would rest in the same discretion.

In these days of reckless, not to say extravagant, appropriations for purposes other than payment of pensions, it would, I believe, be a wise precaution, which must lead to more frugal legislation, to provide for raising the money for the payment of every large appropriation in the same bill which authorizes the expenditure. But putting aside the question of any general policy this provision may be indispensable to the payment of pension arrears.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I have listened, Mr. Speaker, with some interest to hear a statement of the reasons which governed the majority of the committee in this proposed change of the rules of the House. I admit the gravity of these questions connected with pensions; I have no desire to diminish or avoid that; but I am surprised to see the action which is proposed upon the other side. If there be anything in the logic which has been presented here in favor of this proposition it must equally apply to all other subjects of appropriation as well as pensions; yet this rule proposes to confine the amendment to pensions alone.

Now, what is the real object—or, rather, for I am not willing to go into a question of motives, what will be the practical effect of this action? Surely the consideration of the question of pensions ought to be separate from any other, and every member of the House ought to have an opportunity to express his views upon the pension question undisturbed by any other. Yet there is not a practical man in this House who does not know that this rule, proposed to be made applicable to pensions alone, will, if adopted, be employed to fasten upon every pension bill some method of taxation which will prove obnoxious to many men who might be desirous, after careful consideration, of voting for that particular pension bill.

This method of embarrassing legislation is proposed only as to pension bills. Why this invidious distinction? For what purpose is it attempted to saddle bills connected with pensioning soldiers with the possibility of legislation put on solely for the purpose of defeating the bills themselves?

The gentleman from Illinois has alluded to a debate in which the question of deficiency or possible deficiency was raised. Whether he is correct in his statement of figures or my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], I can not undertake to say. But this I do know, that long before the actual limit for necessary expenses of the Government is reached there is a large amount appropriated for the sinking fund, and we know that the situation is quite liable to be such that we shall not be able to continue the payment of the public debt except by putting it out of existence at a very great premium. And that may happen to us shortly.

We also know another fact: This country is wonderfully recuperative as to its income, and we, all of us, who look about can see the signs of a coming prosperity which, like the one of a few years ago, may lift our income, as such prosperity has lifted it before, a hundred millions.

I do not feel, so far as the future is concerned, there is very grave danger we shall exceed our income. At least I see no such crisis which demands of us that we should invidiously single out a particular class of legislation and give opportunity to impair it by tacking on legislation which is obnoxious to those who are in favor of the subject of the appropriation.

I have tried, Mr. Speaker, to state this matter as fairly and as candidly as I know how, and for one I am not willing to enter upon such an invidious course as is proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON]. I yield whatever time the gentleman desires to my colleague on the committee from New York.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I go further than my colleague on the Committee on Rules in reference to this question, and assert that it is an attempt to make an invidious distinction; it is more than that. I say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], who fathers this report, it is an attempt on his part to defeat the pension legislation by this Congress; that will be the certain result—will be the result of this amendment offered to the rules.

It is an attempt on the part of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] to evade the responsibility of the defeat of such legislation by a direct vote. When pension bills are reported here by committees of the House he desires for himself and his friends to escape the responsibility of a direct vote against those bills.

What will be the effect, I ask the House, if this amendment is adopted? You move to amend a pension bill by a provision levying a tax, and it follows that the whole system of revenue taxation or customs taxation or tariff taxes is forced into the House and into the discussion; an endless debate is to and will ensue, and the result will be the pension legislation will be defeated, and the gentlemen on the other side of the House—I will not say the other side of the House, but gentlemen opposed to pension legislation—will evade the responsibility of voting directly against the bill.

It puts it in the power of any man to precipitate the House into an endless discussion foreign to the merits of the bill, the end of which can not be foreseen at this late day in this session of Congress. And that, in my humble opinion, is the object of the amendment to the rules.

This amendment to the rule was reported here, sir, some time ago. It is brought up now in these last days of the session, and it is urged that it is proper that a pension bill shall carry the pledge of a particular fund for its payment. I desire to impress upon the House the effect of the amendment to the rule will be absolutely to defeat every pension measure introduced here, however meritorious it may be.

But I am surprised, Mr. Speaker, any gentleman should take the ground that the United States should attempt to pledge any part of its revenues for any particular purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. Have we not already pledged the gold coin coming into the Treasury for the interest on the bonds?

Mr. HISCOCK. We have, and that is the only pledge Congress has ever made.

Mr. MORRISON. Also in the case of the Navy pension fund.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Government pledged its revenue for the payment of the public debt when it was necessary to do it in order to sustain the public credit. When, Mr. Speaker, this Government was striving for its very existence, when it was necessary to sustain our credit abroad to support our armies in the field, we pledged that all of the revenue derived from the customs duties should be sacredly devoted to the payment of the public debt, and I confess my surprise that that should be cited at this time by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as a precedent for this measure. Have we reached that point, I ask, that what we were compelled to do to maintain our credit in the world in the darkest days of our nation's history should be cited as a precedent for the adoption of a policy such as is proposed to be inaugurated here in reference to the pensions of our soldiers?

Mr. BLAND. Does the gentleman from New York contend that we pledged gold for the payment of the public debt? If he does, I would like him to cite me to the law.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, then, I will amend by saying coin, if I said gold.

Mr. BLAND. No; we did not pledge coin for anything.

Mr. HISCOCK. But I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that I do not intend to drift into a discussion of the silver question here to-day.

Mr. MCKINLEY. The gentleman from New York does not wish to be understood as claiming that this proposes to pledge anything for the payment of pensions? Is it not rather a proposition of this character: That if you are going to give pensions to the soldiers of the country where are you going to get the money from to provide for their payment? If it were an honest effort to pledge the revenues to the payment of pensions I would favor it, for that is an obligation that we should sacredly keep.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, yes. Let me read the proposed rule:

Resolved, That it shall be in order when any general bill or proposition to increase the rates or amounts of pensions, or to grant pensions to persons not previously entitled thereto by law, is under consideration, to amend the same so as to provide by taxation or otherwise for the payment thereof—

A special tax, as I understand this amendment to the rule, is to be in order for the payment of the pensions that will be due under the particular bill under consideration.

But no such amendment shall be in order unless the net revenue provided—provided for shall be set apart for the sole purpose of paying such increased pensions.

Provided under that bill—

Yes, sir, this is a bill for pledging certain revenues of the Government for certain specific objects; and we are going back in the history of the world to the time when England and the weaker nations since then have been compelled to pledge specific revenues to borrow money.

The Government of the United States, rich in its resources, rivaling as I believe any other nation on the face of the earth in its wealth, proposes by this rule to go back to the half-barbaric ages and pledge certain revenues to certain specific purposes; and I almost wonder that the gentleman did not propose to pass it over to some special machinery for its collection—to the creditor, if you please—and follow completely the precedent that in part is followed.

But, Mr. Speaker, I now desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois who reports this resolution to some language of his used upon another occasion. I refer to his language in the last Democratic national convention, as I believe he was the gentleman who reported the platform for the convention; and I read one of the resolves in the platform of the last national Democratic convention:

The system of direct taxation, known as internal revenue, is a war tax, and so long as the law continues the money derived therefrom should be sacredly devoted to the relief of the people from the burdens of the war.

Now, I call his attention particularly to this:

And be made a fund to defray the expenses, and for the care and comfort of worthy soldiers disabled in the line of duty in the wars of the Republic, and for the payment of such pensions as Congress may from time to time grant to such soldiers, a like fund for the sailors having been already provided.

Here is the gentleman from Illinois recorded before the election advocating and promulgating for his party a platform upon which he went to the country and asked the election of his candidates, saying to the soldiers, "Internal-revenue taxes are pledged for your support and for the payment of pensions to you." I ask the gentleman from Illinois if we have exceeded the amount raised from this source? The report from the Secretary of the Treasury is that one hundred and fifteen millions of dollars will be raised for the current year. We have the pledge of the Democracy that this one hundred and fifteen millions shall be devoted to the care, support, maintenance of, and for pensions to loyal soldiers; and here at the very first session of the first Congress that is convened since the adoption of that platform, we find the same distinguished gentleman who reported that plank in the platform of his party saying to the soldiers, "No, we have not money enough to pay you your pensions and carry out and redeem that pledge, and we repudiate the solemn obligation we are under to you that the internal-revenue tax, the war tax, shall be devoted to that holy purpose."

Repudiate! Yes, that is the word; and every bill that comes in here to provide for you, no matter how meritorious it may be, we propose to have it subject to an amendment, by any one of the three hundred and twenty-five members of this House who wishes to affix to it some provision in reference to taxation, which will be subject to an amendment also, the effect of which will be to defeat all bills for your relief, just or not—to defeat them all most certainly.

Mr. BLAND. Let me ask the gentleman from New York if the construction of a platform is law. The object here is to carry out the platform by enacting into a law that provision.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am surprised that so distinguished a gentleman as the gentleman from Missouri, a leading Democrat, should ask that question. I would have been surprised more, except that the gentleman that offers this amendment to the rules so quickly repudiates the plank in the platform to which I have called attention, and I answer him by saying that in my judgment the pledges that we made to the soldiers in our national platforms ought to be redeemed. At least, sir, we should not shirk from voting on bills that are introduced here upon their merits. We should not attempt to avoid the responsibility of our votes. We should come up like men and vote directly on every proposition that is here upon its merits.

Mr. Speaker, I concede that there is great likelihood that there will be a deficiency during the next fiscal year. But I ask you, and I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], is that a good reason why we should repudiate solemn obligations? It may be a good reason why we should have other legislation. It may be a good reason why we should defeat schemes and defeat certain bills carrying appropriations of money. But it is not a good reason why solemn obligations upon the strength of which, upon the faith of which, a great party has come into power should be repudiated.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, what pension bills I may vote for. Whenever they come here I am willing to take the responsibility of voting for or against them as my judgment may advise to be proper. I shall never seek to shrink from the responsibility of a direct vote, and I beg of this House—it will be for its credit—I beg of the other side—it will be for your credit—to meet this question squarely before the country. And I say to the other side, I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] who asked the question with reference to the pledge of our revenues or of our coin to the payment of the public debt—I say to him that the Democratic party so near the time of its having come into power, and to individual members of that party, they can not afford to shrink from the responsibility of this question. They can not afford to dodge it. They had better meet it squarely and vote directly upon it. The country is prepared, if any pension legislation is proposed here which ought not to be adopted—the country is prepared for its defeat and expects Congress to defeat it; and if there is any pension legislation proposed here which ought to be enacted into law, the country is prepared to pay the money which may be required by that legislation.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield the floor and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANDALL and Mr. CANNON rose.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] if he wants to go on now. I yield him five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to offer an amendment to this proposed rule, of which I will now give notice to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON]. After the word "law," where it first occurs in the proposed rule, I desire to insert the following words:

Or to authorize the expenditure of money for any other purpose or to make any charge upon the Government not heretofore authorized by law.

And at the end of the proposed rule I desire to add these words:

Or other expenditure or charge upon the Government.

So that if amended as I indicate the rule will read as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be in order, when any general bill or proposition to increase the rates or amounts of pensions, or to grant pensions to persons not previously entitled thereto by law, or to authorize the expenditure of money for any other purpose, or to make any charge upon the Government not theretofore authorized by law, is under consideration, to amend the same so as to provide by taxation or otherwise for the payment thereof; but no such amendment shall be in order unless the net revenue provided for shall be thereby set apart for the sole purpose of paying such increased pensions or other expenditure or charge upon the Government.

I want to see what the Committee on Rules mean by this proposed rule. I think I do see it to my own satisfaction. They propose to place it in the power of any man in the House, friendly or unfriendly to pension legislation, to move a revision of the tariff or the imposition of internal-revenue taxation all along the line upon any general pension bill or any individual pension bill that may be under consideration in the House. And that means in most instances a defeat of the individual bill and perhaps in many cases of general legislation, because with the unlimited power of amendment and the disposition to amend and discuss revenue matters upon this floor it would mean weeks and months for the consideration of every proposition that would be brought before the House to amend the general pension law or to extend its provisions to those not covered by it. The intention and effect of this proposed rule is to embarrass and prevent pension legislation. This side of the House is ready to enact pension legislation, that is just precisely as we enact all other legislation; and then if we need more money to meet it we are ready to raise it by taxation just as we do to meet other expenditures.

I want to see now, gentlemen, whether you are willing to go a step farther in the enactment of this rule, and say that when there is a public building to be erected in the district of some gentleman to whose constituents that public building is a boon, whether you are willing then also to rise and protect the supposed public interest and to move a general or special revenue bill upon such proposition. Or if, perchance, some of the gentlemen south of Mason and Dixon's line desire that the House shall authorize the improvement of a so-called river where God Almighty did not make one, whether it would be in order to move a general or special tax bill on legislation authorizing an appropriation for river and harbor improvement throughout the length and breadth of the country. Why is it that the expenditure of money for pensions, either general or special, should be selected by the other side of this House and the Committee on Rules to be burdened with clogs, while they propose to allow public buildings, frequently of almost as great value as the balance of the towns in which they are built, and river and harbor appropriations, to go through without these clogs?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does your amendment permit such an amendment to be moved to river and harbor bills?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; the language of my amendment is "all expenditures not theretofore authorized," and I hope my friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] will be found voting for my amendment or voting down the previous question, so that I may offer it if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] does not choose to admit it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] have occupied twenty minutes of his time.

Mr. HISCOCK. Did I speak in my own time, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from New York to speak in his own time.

Mr. HISCOCK. I did, and reserved the balance of my time.

Mr. RANDALL. The remarks of the gentleman from Illinois who introduced, on behalf of the Committee on Rules, this proposed change of rule were so clear, comprehensive, and, I might add, conclusive that he has left little for others to say in its advocacy. I concede to the other side full measure of patriotism in relation to these matters, and I claim for this side a like spirit in every particular, both individually and collectively. There is not anybody, so far as I know, on this floor who is not ready to do entire justice to the soldiers of the Union in the granting of proper pensions. There may be differences of opinion as to the method in which pensions should be granted and as to the extent of allowance to which we should go. No one, however, will differ upon this proposition: that if we do give pensions we ought honestly to provide the money to pay them. What is our present condition? The probable revenues and the amount of appropriations may be about equal. Those appropriations for pensions by existing laws require $80,000,000 of money.

What does this proposition say? Simply that if we add to the required $80,000,000, we shall at the same time provide the means of payment. That is the courageous, the manly, way of dealing with the question. I have witnessed on this floor from time to time efforts to get some political advantage for one party or the other in connection with pensions. We should discountenance all such efforts. There should not, in the American Congress, be any doubt about the attitude of any of the representatives of the American people in this particular. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has said that we have made no such distinction as this heretofore. We have made distinctions, and I cite an instanee. Under the act of 1862 providing for a sinking fund, we make a distinction in favor of the public debt. We make a distinction in reference to the customs revenues paid in gold in behalf of the interest on the public debt.

Why, then, if we are to go on granting additional pensions, should we not say that we will at the same time provide the particular means of paying them? My friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] thought he had found danger in this proposition because of the opportunity it would afford for tariff legislation. He need not be uneasy about that. This proposed change has no such possibility. It could not have any such object. I believe that all sides here seek rather to reduce than to increase the revenue from that source, and any effort of legislation of that kind would be to decrease the revenue, rather than to provide additional means to meet the expenditures of the Government. The passage of the arrears bill, independent of the passage of other pension bills now pending, requires that we should at the same time provide the money for their payment, and we all know that the present sources of revenue would prove inadequate to that end.

Do not let us pettifog about this question, or venture in the least upon the realm of the demagogue. There has been enough of that. Let us to-day say deliberately that hereafter when we vote pensions, that not having the money in hand we will vote also the taxation necessary to raise the money to pay such pensions. And, Mr. Speaker, I deny the right of any gentleman on the other side, or anywhere, to question in this connection the motives of the committee or of the majority of the Committee on Rules. I know that they were prompted by a sincere desire not to cripple what is justly due to the soldier. Their purpose was to stop holding out to him the liberal hand, when we have not the money to give him which we profess to desire to give.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY].

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, if this proposition coming from the Committee on Rules, representing the majority of this House, means anything, it means that we have not revenues enough now on hand to pay the pensions of deserving soldiers. If it means anything, it is a confession before the House and the country that our revenues are inadequate to meet the just demands of the disabled soldiers of the Republic. Now, if it means that, Mr. Speaker, then the conduct of this House and the conduct of certain members of this House is quite unexplainable.

We have witnessed here within the last six days an effort on the part of a majority of the leading committee of this House to reduce the receipts of this Government from customs about $26,000,000, a proposition coming from the Committee of Ways and Means to so adjust the tariff as to diminish the annual income of the Government $26,000,000; and now, immediately after the failure of that committee to have accorded to it even the courtesy of a consideration by the House of that measure for the reduction of the revenues, immediately following that, we have this proposition from a member of the Committee on Rules, himself the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House which reported that tariff measure—we have a proposition from that distinguished gentleman which amounts to a confession that we have not, and will not have within the next twelve months, revenue enough in the Treasury to meet the honest and just demands of the soldiers of the Republic.

What strange inconsistency! What is the matter? What can account for these contradictory positions within a week?

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we have not revenue enough to meet these demands to-day, then why, in the name of Heaven, did you want to reduce revenues $26,000,000 last Thursday? What has been done with that surplus since then?

And not only does that proposition come from the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means, but if the newspaper reports are correct, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], who on this occasion at least seems to be in harmony with the majority on the other side of the House, has himself a bill that he is about to introduce in the House reducing internal taxation some $20,000,000 and customs duties about $6,000,000. Yet these two leading gentlemen of the same political faith, each proposing to reduce the annual income of the Government, come in here and say to the House, "We have not money enough to pay our pensioners; and if you intend to vote pensions you must provide a way to get the money." There is enough and a surplus for all other purposes.

I say that is not fair; that is not frank; that is not manly. If we have no money in the Treasury to pay the pensions of our worthy and dependent soldiers, let us put some there; let us provide means to increase our revenues, increase our taxation. If it is necessary that we should resort to an income tax in order to give to the soldiers of this country what we pledged them they should have when they went forth to fight and suffer, then I am in favor of an income tax. But it would not seem necessary to resort to any extraordinary taxation so long as the Ways and Means Committee of the House report a surplus of thirty millions in the Treasury which they feel called upon to diminish by a revision of the tariff.

Mr. RYAN. An income tax for general purposes.

Mr. MCKINLEY. For general purposes; for there is no reason in the world why a discrimination should be made against the just claims of the soldiers of the Republic. The only purpose of such a movement must be to make the payment of pensions odious. It is virtually saying that the House will provide money for every other purpose in the ordinary way through its appropriate committee, but for the deserving soldiers, if you would keep your promises with them, you must find the money.

Why do not the gentlemen on the other side apply such a requirement to the appropriation to pay their salaries and allowances? It would be just as sensible and equally appropriate. Why not fix that limitation and condition upon every bill which requires the expenditure of money? Why not make the River and Harbor Committee bring in a tax bill as a rider to provide for the fourteen millions which it proposes to expend for the fiscal year? Why not make the Public Buildings Committee carry on every bill for the erection of a public building a tax bill to pay for the proposed expenditure, and so all the way through? Why single out the soldiers, the maimed and crippled defenders of the Union, and require that their claims, the most sacred and obligatory which rest upon us, shall be paid from a different fund; ay, more, that before they shall have the relief they deserve the money must be raised by special taxation, differing from all other claims against the Government? This is not right, and should be firmly resisted by every real friend of the soldier and of good legislation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] that the only ground upon which a proposition of this kind can be defended is the claim that there is need of additioal money to pay the pensions of the deserving soldiers of the Republic. But, Mr. Speaker, I take it that this is not the real reason which prompts this measure. For some time past I have been led to believe there was a settled policy of opposition to all pension legislation, which was to be followed by the majority of this House and by its party in future political contests before the country, and that it is desired to prepare the country for such a contest. I believe that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. MORRISON], who presents this proposition, has learned, to his sorrow, that the people have determined that his attack upon their industries shall be met and defeated, and that his party has for the last time made a successful canvass before the people unless attention can be diverted from its true free-trade character.

I think the gentleman when he introduced this proposition confessed what most people before well knew, that this country intends to stand by the American system of protection to labor and honest industry. I believe that the proposition now presented is "a new departure," that it is authorized by the highest authority representing the party who are in the majority in this House. I have seen with surprise high officials of the country attempt to throw discredit upon the pension legislation of this Congress. I think that there emanates from the highest source and permeates down through the lower officials of that party an attempt to discredit the deserving character of the pension legislation which has been asked for in this House. It has been too often said and too often allowed to go unchallenged upon this floor that the pension laws of the United States are already too liberal. This is a mistake that I fear some well-meaning people may have had imposed on them by these assertions. They are not too liberal. The fact is, the pension laws of the United States are not to-day even just. The applications for pensions of many thousand deserving soldiers, their widows and dependent parents, that have been pending for years and yet remain unsettled is conclusive proof of this. The small and trifling sums allowed for disability incurred in the line of duty when pensions are granted is additional evidence, if any is needed, not to speak of the vast number rejected on purely technical grounds.

This country should know that to-day there are not as many men drawing pensions on account of wounds received in battle as there were Union soldiers killed in battle, yet all know that at least four were wounded to one killed; that there are not to-day as many men drawing pensions for disease incurred in the four years of hard campaigning as lost their lives by disease, yet it is beyond dispute that at least six men became seriously sick in the Army to every one that died.

The pension laws, I repeat, are not liberal; they are not even just.

Mr. Speaker, if this is the issue which gentlemen propose, let it be made. I have sat here night after night when, as has been truly said, a minority of the House came here to pass pension legislation, when men would rise with words such as I have heard here to-day declaring that they favored pension legislation, and yet would consume every moment that they could in methods which did not tend to the passage of such legislation, but did tend to consume the time and lessen the number of worthy cases that could be considered. And I am glad to be able to say that those who made these obstructions have generally been men who saw no service at the front in any army, and have never learned the kindly sentiment of respect which every true soldier feels for another.

I have heard with regret veto messages of pension bills read from that desk which contained not one patriotic expression, but were full of complaints about Congress granting pensions to some poor private soldier or his widow lest in every case it might not have been conclusively proven that the death or injury directly resulted from the wounds or disability alleged. I am the more surprised at these things when I know that this same Executive has approved laws granting officers' widows much larger pensions in cases in which it was not even alleged that death occurred from any disability incurred in the service.

It has been said there ought not to be so many private pension bills. I grant it; but why? Not that these individual applications are not deserving and worthy, but because they ought to have been in most cases granted before they came here. I repeat that it has been too often said, and gone unrefuted, that the pension laws are too liberal.

But, gentlemen, if you wish to make that issue, if you propose to go before the people and say "we are opposed to the policy of pensioning the disabled veterans of the war, and the widows and dependent fathers and mothers of the dead," make that issue, if you please, and you will be met with the fact, which I confess as a disgrace to my country, that to-day it is estimated that ten thousand men who wore the blue, who fought beneath that flag, who were in most cases good soldiers and who escaped the death which befell so many of their comrades, are to-day in almshouses or receiving aid as paupers. This is an argument you can not refute, and is a demand for additional legislation that can not be answered. Make this issue if you will, and you will meet if possible a worse defeat than the one that certainly awaits you if you make your next campaign upon the issue of an attack upon the industries of the country.

Let the people only know the truth, that our pension laws are not liberal, and they will say to you, as they say to me and all of us here, "Make those laws both just and liberal." That is what is demanded. I care not whether the money in the Treasury is scarce or plentiful. This country is both able and willing to do right, and the people will always approve that course. Two years ago we heard there was a surplus in the United States Treasury that we could hardly give away; to-day the same gentlemen are confessing that the surplus is gone, that we are too poor to be honest, and that there is likely to be a deficiency. To save money to pay Southern war claims, to levee the Mississippi River, to pay salaries to officials and for other liberal expenditures, you now propose to attack that subject which is dearest to every loyal heart—the duty which the Government owes to those who as soldiers of the Republic have suffered in its behalf. I can say more to you. The intelligent, educated laborers of this Nation, who have made the policy of protection a success, and who demand that our people shall not be brought in competition with foreign pauper labor, are right at heart on the subject of doing justice to the soldiers. Many of them were good soldiers themselves. They ask that the Government shall deal justly with all, but especially with those who risked their lives in its defense. The party that is in the majority in this House, and that for the time being has the Executive, may proclaim what it pleases as its design and purpose in this matter, but the people well know that if there were now a Republican Congress and Executive we would have no occasion to talk about worthy pension bills being vetoed, and that no proposition to change the rules so as to discriminate unfairly against pension bills would be brought forward in Congress.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM.]

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], in announcing that whenever we provide pensions for soldiers we must necessarily provide at the same time the means of payment, appears to go upon the theory that heretofore pensions have not been paid when we have passed acts for that purpose. Sir, we have heretofore paid pensions just as they have been provided for by our legislation; there has been no difficulty upon that score, and if the Democrats are honest and do not stop the passage of pension laws by such subterfuge as is contemplated by this resolution, there will be no difficulty in the future. Therefore the soldiers are not in any danger for want of appropriations.

But let me remind my colleague of another fact. This resolution as introduced here means that when any pension bill is under consideration an amendment may be made to provide by taxation the means of payment. Why, Mr. Speaker, the other day, when the Post-Office appropriation bill was up, my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] at the eleventh hour came to the rescue of the Democratic party and lashed the Democrats in against the appropriation for carrying the foreign mails in American ships upon the special plea that there was no estimate from any Department, and there being no estimate from any Department, and the matter not having been reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, we should not attempt on the floor of the House to provide for its payment.

Why is it the gentleman is so inconsistent that he must whip in his party under the lash of no estimate against an appropriation when the foreign-mail question was considered for the purpose of defending the Democratic administration for a clear violation of law, but now he is willing that we shall in every pension bill make an estimate ourselves, a double estimate in fact—i. e., we must first estimate the amount necessary to pay the pensions, and then guess at the amount that may be realized from the several levies that we may make here on the floor on the spur of the moment?

But, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is this Democratic party has failed to foist upon this Congress their free-trade bill, and right upon the heel of the defeat the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. MORRISON], in explaining why he does not mean to ask for a vote again, acknowledges that he would again be defeated; yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] immediately upon that says to this House, "I have a privileged matter," and thereupon introduces this resolution. What does that mean? A resolution which will practically enable him to gain the very point he lost—i. e., the introduction and consideration of the very measure my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and other Democrats stood up with us to prevent him from gaining. What is that? Why, sir, the consideration of the tariff bill whenever the question of pensions may be raised.

I ask whether you gentlemen think you can go before the public and hoodwink them with this simple way of covering up your tracks? You practically open up the whole tariff question every time you introduce pension bills, and thus give the free-traders the very opportunity they are seeking.

But my colleague says this can not decrease the tariff, as it will only provide for an increase, and yet under our present system you put in our general appropriation bill an amount sufficient to pay all the pensions in bulk, while under this proposed system you itemize it, or you divide it, and the aggregate will be the same. But again, Mr. Speaker, it is claimed that this pension-money is to be raised not by duties on imports, but by internal revenue; yet the reading of the resolution does not mention either, but only speaks of taxes. But, sir, if the money is to be raised by internal revenue so much the worse, for that means the perpetuation of the cursed system at least as long as pensions are payable. It is nothing more than a cowardly effort to do that which you are afraid to do in an open and manly way. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will reserve whatever time I may have remaining.

Mr. MORRISON took the floor and yielded five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON].

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I think it is well that both sides of this House should recognize the gravity of this question, because, in my judgment, it involves the question whether or not certain measures of pension legislation are to be made possible. The estimate that has been made in relation to the payment of arrears of pension varies from $200,000,000 to $300,000,000. The lowest estimate I have ever heard was $200,000,000 and the highest perhaps was $302,000,000. There is in the Treasury an actual surplus of $105,510,000, and can two hundred millions or three hundred millions of dollars be paid with $105,000,000? It is a mathematical proposition which can be demonstrated to a certainty that more money must be raised if arrears of pensions are to be paid.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does the gentleman mean to assert the actual expenditure for pensions under the bills proposed will be over $200,000,000?

Mr. MATSON. I do not, but I mean that the total cost of the arrears will reach that sum.

Mr. DINGLEY. But that stretches over all the future.

Mr. MATSON. I mean the cost of arrears that is now proposed to be paid by the bill which is favorably reported, which is upon the Calendar, and has been for months, and which we will ask the House to consider and pass. This bill will involve an expenditure of from two to three hundred millions of dollars.

Mr. LAIRD. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MATSON. No, sir; I decline now to yield until I am through, after which I will be glad to answer any questions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are the figures. I want to see the arrears paid; and your party, gentlemen, on that side of the House is pledged in its national platform that these arrears shall be paid. How are they to be paid? They must be paid, if paid at all, by the raising of money through taxing the people. They can not be paid any other way; and to vote against raising the money to pay the arrears is to vote against the arrears themselves. That is all. It is dishonest for gentlemen to say they want to pay the arrears, when they know they are defeating the plan by which they can be paid. That is a plain proposition. Your party has put it into your national platform, and pledged itself in favor of this system of general pension legislation which you claimed you wanted to see accomplished.

Now, let us see the proof of your pledges. I want to accomplish it. I have always advocated it. Gentlemen here know my position upon that subject.

But gentlemen say this is unfriendly to the pensioners of the country. How is it unfriendly to them? Is it unfriendly when the debtor, owing a number of creditors, picks out the most valuable piece of his property and pledges it to the payment of that indebtedness, still leaving the creditor with his interests in the general estate? Is that unfriendly to the creditor?

Can any one see anything unfriendly here in a proposition which simply declares that whenever the arrears of pensions or any other general pension law is passed, there shall be at the same time provided the money with which to pay it; and we do further provide that the money shall be devoted to the payment of that increase of pension. Where is the unfriendliness about it, I call on gentlemen to point out?

It is therefore not only a necessity, so far as the accomplishment of these great measures of pension legislation are concerned, but it is especially friendly to the soldiers of this country, for the reason that it pledges to them and to the payment of their demands a large sum of money, besides leaving them all the interests they now have in the general fund belonging to the Government.

Now, then, does not every gentleman on this side of the House know that there would not be a dollar of pensions paid any year unless the money was appropriated out of the general fund to pay them? Does not everybody know that the money must be appropriated first to pay pensions? How, then, is this not friendly to the pensioners? They still must come in here year after year and get the general pension bill passed just the same as with all other matters of appropriation by the Government. This proposition is simply to establish a fund and dedicate it sacredly to the payment of the soldiers' pensions. Ah, gentlemen, the trouble is that you are afraid of a special tax upon the incomes of the wealthy men of this country to pay the soldiers these just demands. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But yesterday, being suspension day, when you got knowledge of the fact that the Committee on Invalid Pensions, after its unanimous action in the morning of yesterday, had determined to pass two of these great measures for the benefit of the soldiers and attach to them an amendment providing an income tax making it possible to pay the arrears and carry out these great measures, you gentlemen stood up every one of you without exception in favor of going into Committee of the Whole to consider the appropriation bill because you were afraid to meet that question of the income tax. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GUENTHER. The gentleman does not mean to say that every one stood up?

Mr. SYMES. May I ask the gentleman a question now?

Mr. MATSON. Not now; after I get through I will yield.

But gentlemen say that this is unusual legislation; that it is something new and unheard-of—a proposition to devote a certain fund to the payment of a certain debt. Why, in the pension system it is well known that we already have the interest upon the prize-money devoted to the payment of naval pensions, known and denominated as naval pensions.

Why not have a military pension fund as well—a fund raised, too, not upon the labor of the country—for I will be frank with you gentlemen on that side of the House. I am in favor of reducing tariff taxes; I am in favor of taking off the burdens from the laboring people of this country, but at the same time I am in favor of paying the pensions of the soldiers and the honest claims which they are urging here. But I want that expenditure levied upon the wealth of the country, upon the men who got rich while the soldiers were in the front fighting the battles. [Applause on the Democratic side.] While these soldiers were absent these men got rich. They made their great fortunes during that period, because great fortunes were almost unknown before the war.

Now I am willing to yield to my friend from Colorado.

Mr. SYMES. Did the gentleman from Indiana vote to take up the tariff bill for a reduction of revenues the other day?

Mr. MATSON. I think I did, sir.

Mr. SYMES. The gentleman states that he is in favor of the arrears-of-pension bill, I believe?

Mr. MATSON. I am.

Mr. SYMES. Then you say that the pension-arrears bill will call for two hundred millions of revenue?

Mr. MATSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SYMES. Then will you explain to this House how you expect to pass the pension-arrears bill and meet the additional expense to the Government caused thereby by reducing the revenue? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MATSON. If the gentleman had listened to me he would have heard me explain that, when I said I was in favor of a graduated income tax, by which we can raise now between fifty and one hundred million dollars.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Will my colleague allow me one question?

Mr. MATSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Would it not be just to the soldier to pass the pension bill first, to get him on the pension-roll, and then pass the tax bill to raise the money?

Mr. MATSON. I think, on the other hand, the Republican Senate, for not carrying out the party pledge and passing the arrears act, has only one excuse, and that is that the House has not raised the money. The prudent and honest thing is always to be able to pay before you promise. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MORRISON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT].

Mr. HEWITT. I rise mainly for the purpose of clearing up, if I can, some obscurity which gentlemen on the other side have endeavored to throw around the declarations of the Democratic platform adopted at Chicago prior to the last Presidential election. Two great pledges of primary concern were made in that platform. One was that the Democratic party "stands pledged itself to reduce the tariff in the spirit of fairness to all interests." The other was that so long as we continued to levy war taxes under the internal-revenue system we should appropriate the money thereby raised, or so much thereof as might be needed, sacredly to the payment of pensions. Those two pledges were honest, and the Democratic party, coming into power by virtue of these pledges, is bound to fulfill them.

Within a week we have attempted to begin in this House the fulfillment of the first pledge; but by a coalition between members upon the other side and gentlemen upon this side we have been prevented from giving the consideration to that question which is demanded by the honor of the Democratic party and the welfare of the country. [Laughter and applause.] But the pledges survive; and the Democrats upon this side who combined with Republicans upon that side to defeat for the moment the fulfillment of that pledge are bound to see it executed; and I expect to see them, under the guidance of their distinguished leader, bring a measure into this House which will enable all Democrats, however much they may have differed, to take up the question, in a spirit of fairness to all interests, to revise the tariff and to reduce the burden of taxation.

But it does not follow that when you reduce the burden of taxation you are going to reduce the revenue. On the contrary, it is quite possible so to revise the tariff as to reduce the burden of taxation by doing away with the obstructions to business and the conduct of industry, so that industrial enterprise will be everywhere revived, the exchanges will increase, the revenues will grow, and thus provide an ample fund to meet all the obligations of the Government economically administered.

Now, on the other hand, the pledge of the Democratic platform to devote the proceeds of the internal-revenue tax to the payment of pensions is equally binding upon the conscience and action of the party; and this measure brought in to-day here is in fulfillment and not in violation of that pledge, as my colleague from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] seemed to think. The rule as proposed to be amended provides that the money required for the payment of pensions may be provided by special tax or otherwise. The words "or otherwise" are inserted there for the express purpose of enabling us to dedicate the proceeds of the internal-revenue tax to the payment of the pension. And I say they ought to be so dedicated, for when we issued four thousand millions of bonds we made a dedication of the customs revenue to the payment of the principal and the interest of these obligations; and under that pledge the bondholders have received over twelve hundred millions of dollars of principal and over two thousand two hundred millions of interest, all paid in gold, and much of it when gold was at a premium.

The pensioners, on the other hand, have had to trust to annual appropriations, and for a time were paid in depreciated money.

They have trusted to the justice of Congress. We propose to repair the omission of the Republican party to render such justice. They pledged the customs revenues of this Government to the bondholders. We intend to pledge an equivalent portion of the revenues of this Government to the pension-holders. [Applause.] That is the principle underlying this measure, and for one I shall not cease until a fund is definitely appropriated either out of the internal-revenue taxation or by an income tax or some other just method of taxation by which the pension-holders shall be assured that their annual income will come to them with as much certainty as the money is taken out of the Treasury and paid to the bondholders. [Applause.] Justice to the pensioners, honest treatment to the bondholders, is the motto of the Democratic party [renewed applause]; and, with the bondholder and the pensioner hand in hand, we shall go down the pathway of time paying every obligation to every man who contributed a dollar to save this Government and paying every man who gave life or limb or health for the preservation of the Union. [Applause.]

Mr. MORRISON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY].

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Chairman, I am much obliged to the gentleman from Illinois, who has so kindly yielded me five minutes of his time, but I have never yet since I have had the honor of a seat upon this floor consumed five minutes of the time of the House in talk, and I do not know that I shall do so now, for I believe this House is as well prepared to vote upon this question at the present moment as it would be if the discussion lasted three weeks.

As far as I am concerned, in the vote which I shall cast upon this question there is no concealment whatever, nor do I believe that there is any effort at concealment upon the part of the majority of the House which has offered, and which in my judgment will adopt, this change in the rules. It seems to me, sir, that all of the solicitude is upon the other side of the House. While the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] was speaking upon this subject I attempted to interrupt him for the purpose of asking a question. He refused to yield, but he asked a question himself and then answered it. He asked what would be the result if this change in the rules were adopted, and he answered the question by stating that the result would be the defeat of all pension legislation.

Mr. Speaker, how could that result come about unless that side of the House vote to defeat all pension legislation? The object of the Democratic party is to provide money with which to pay a pension before they shall vote the pension, and a further object of that party in my opinion—certainly it is my object—is to put an income tax, if necessary, upon this appropriation bill, and make the rich men of the country pay their proportion of the taxes which are required to provide the money to pay the pensions of the deserving soldiers of the Union. That, sir, in my humble judgment, is a proper step for the Democratic party to take. For years it has been made to appear before the country that the Democratic party was opposed to the payment of pensions. The record does not bear out such an assertion, because Democratic Houses of the Congress of the United States have voted as much money for pensions as ever were voted, according to my information, by any Republican House ever assembled in this country.

Another point. The labor troubles in this country have resulted, in my humble judgment, from the great accumulation of wealth in the hands of individuals and corporations. The imposition of an income tax would give greater satisfaction to that discontented element in this country than any other action which this Congress can take. Let us, if necessary, in reporting and passing these bills, put on an income tax for the purpose of raising money to pay the pensions of the soldiers of the Union, and let the other side of the House, fostering monopolies and monopolists as they have done in the past, dare to vote against it and go before the country on that record. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, in the course of nearly eight years' experience as a member of the House of Representatives I do not remember to have ever heard a proposition so monstrous as the one we are now called upon to consider. For the first time, I believe, in the history of legislation in this Government it is proposed to embody in the rules of the House of Representatives a provision making it in order when a certain class of bills is under consideration involving an expenditure of money to offer an amendment to such measure proposing an increase of taxation sufficient to meet the probable requirements of such enactment.

Nearly one hundred years have gone by since the organization of the first House of Representatives, and for the first time in the history of this legislative body it is proposed to make it in order to attach to a general law a proviso raising sufficient revenue to carry that law into execution. I repeat that in the whole history of written or unwritten American parliamentary law this proposition can find no parallel.

But if there was anything needed to increase the iniquity of this proposition it is found in the language of the proposed rule, which restricts its operation to pension bills. Why this invidious distinction? Why select the Union soldier as the object of your attack? It will not pass without notice that the majority of this House propose to apply this rule only to legislation looking to the relief of those who sacrificed everything in the defense of their country. Look at this proposition for one moment.

It is well known to the country that there are certain measures for the relief of soldiers pending in this body to-day that are demanded by the Grand Army of the Republic, and the majority of this House hesitates to adjourn without taking favorable action upon them. How then can the majority seem to favor these measures and yet accomplish their defeat? This rule solves that question. Let me illustrate: Here is Senate bill 1886, demanded by the Grand Army of the Republic, demanded by every sentiment of honor and justice—it has passed the Senate and ought to pass this House—which declares that those soldiers who survived the shock of battle, and returning took up the burdens of life where they laid them down to answer their country's call, but who have been overtaken by misfortunes and deprived of health or limb, are forced in the unequal conflict to labor for the necessities of life or take shelter in an almshouse. Adopt this rule, and when this measure comes up for consideration it will be in order to amend it by a proposition to raise revenue which would at once launch us on a sea of debate upon which the bill itself would surely be wrecked.

Here are fathers and mothers who, though their sons lost their lives in the defense of the country, can not under the law to-day draw pensions, because they are required to prove that they were dependent at the time their sons went into the service. They were not dependent at that time; but misfortunes have since overtaken them, and in their old age they stand with empty hands pleading for charity. Senate bill 1886 proposes to provide for these aged dependent parents, and instead of passing the measure as you ought, you meet this humane measure with a rule that it shall be in order, when that measure comes up, to submit a proposition to increase the tax on whisky or tobacco or impose some new tax, knowing that in the discussion on the tax the bill will fail. Thousands of pension claims are to-day hung up in the Pension Department because the law requires that the applicant shall show that when he went into the Army he was of sound bodily health.

The Senate in its bill 1886 says that requirement is unjust. The fact that the soldier was received into the service after examination made at the time shall be taken as prima facie evidence that he was an able-bodied man, and in the absence of fraud the onus should be upon the Government to show that such was not the fact. These men to-day, in their old age, are denied their pensions because of this requirement. You now propose to say by a rule that when this measure comes up for consideration it shall be in order to submit an amendment raising revenue, and thereby complicate the matter and insure its defeat. Now, every member of this House knows that the moment you adopt this rule, and allow upon these pension bills such an amendment as is proposed, it means the defeat of every one of these measures; and that, in my humble judgment, is the deliberate purpose of it.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], when the arrears of pension bill came in here, succeeded with his party lash, which he wields with such a master-hand, in driving that bill back into committee. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] says it is his intention to have that measure considered. Considered when and how? After you have adopted a rule which in its application you know will insure its defeat. If you in good faith intend to consider and pass these measures, you shall have no such hollow excuse as that they can not be reached. I say to you now that we give you leave to take up any one or all of them to-day, this hour, and put them on their passage. Ask unanimous consent this moment to take up Senate bill 1886 and I pledge my word there will be no objection on this side of the Chamber. I challenge you to make the request now, and then let us see who objects and who will stand by the soldier in the passage of just pension bills.

But why do you not select as the subject of a proposition of this kind something besides these pension bills, this proposed pension legislation? Why do you not take the river and harbor bill, with its $15,000,000 of appropriations? Why do you not take the public buildings bills, and say that on those bills amendments shall be in order to increase taxation to meet the expenditure? Why do you not take the bills reported from the Committee on War Claims—a committee whose room is packed with Southern demands against the Government for compensation for property destroyed or taken during the war? Why do you not say that none of those bills shall pass without embodying in them a proposition to tax the people to meet the expenditure entailed thereby?

But no; you have taken the pension bills; you have taken those alone; and I affirm that it is for the sole purpose of defeating every one of them and preventing the Union soldier from receiving his just dues. Do you say the Treasury is exhausted? Then take means to replenish it. Meet these measures fairly; let them stand on their own merits; and if they pass, if you have not money enough to meet their requirements, introduce your bill to provide means for the purpose, and this side of the House will stand by you in voting all the money necessary to meet the obligations of this country to its defenders and those who suffered by the war.

Upon this proposition, which, as I have said, I regard as the most monstrous ever introduced in the American Congress, I wish to say in conclusion to the minority of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], who were opposed to the proposition in the committee, that they will come short of the demands of this side of the Chamber and of the country if they do not exhaust every means known to parliamentary law to prevent the writing of this infamous provision in the body of our rules. [Applause on the Republican side.] I say we ought to stand solid in declaring to the Democratic party on the other side of the Chamber, "If you ever write this abomination in our code of rules you will do it only when resistance becomes futile, and then only by your own votes." [Renewed applause.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman occupied fifteen minutes himself and gave ten minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. He has thirty-five minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I like a good, brave foe, who will give and take manly blows; I hate a concealed enemy; and I believe there are men of the same mettle on the other side of this Chamber. This proposition is a concealed foe of the soldier, and poorly concealed at that. For several months this monstrous proposition has slumbered on the files of this body. It seems that it waited for the overwhelming disappointment that has settled upon the free-trade leader of this House to bring it to the surface and attempt to pass it through this body.

Mr. Speaker, it seems that under the cover of this debate the other side of the Chamber, including even the gentleman from New York, who struck at helpless widows, co-operated with by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, assumes suddenly to become the friends of the soldier. I say to you that while you attempt to present a flower to the lips of the soldier you are plunging a dagger into his heart. No soldier on this side of the House will second your proposition.

The chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions says that on yesterday an attempt was made to pass a general legislation bill for soldiers and that this side of the Chamber voted solidly against it. This is false. I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] to listen. I say to him that a motion to take up the sundry civil bill came from your own side, and almost to a man your side of the Chamber voted in favor of taking up the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MATSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. No; I have but ten minutes, and I wish you to listen further. [Applause.] What is the proposition you attempted to put through on yesterday? The Senate sent over a bill, No. 1886, called the "general disability" or "Blair bill," which has been petitioned for by almost every soldier of the Union. Every post nearly of the Grand Army of the Republic has sent its voice to this Capitol praying for its passage. It had three broad, sweeping, benevolent propositions for the soldiers' relief, and, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Invalid Pensions drew its deadly pen through every line of each one of those three propositions. [Applause.] You cut it off behind the ears [laughter], and brought in its stead a proposition that the soldiers of the country never asked you for.

But that is not all. You seek to couple with it a bill to increase the pensions of those who had their limbs cut off in battle. This is well enough; but that is not all. You propose to handicap these two propositions. Cowardly and weak as the substitute was which you offered for the Blair bill, you tried to load that down with an income-tax law, and now you come and talk about taking the money out of the pockets of the rich! Ah—my gentle friend I will modify it. [Laughter.]

You say "What harm can come from this?" What harm! You have not done a thing hardly for your old comrades in this Congress, although you stand here with 40 majority behind you. I say take up these pension bills, and every man on this side of the Chamber will back you. At any moment you want to you can move to any place on this Calendar, and in point of fact take up any bill you will, and we will back you heartily to put it through. [Applause.]

Mr. RYAN. You mean any pension bill for the soldiers.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Yes; any pension bill for the soldiers. That is what we will do. You wish to handicap it with income taxation, which has been rejected years ago by the people of the Union. What harm can come of it! Bring up a general pension bill under this proposed rule and what will follow? One wants to put more tax on whisky, and another more tax on beer, and still another more tax on tobacco, and so on. We will then have what may be termed an interlocutory battle at every step, making the passage of any pension bill impossible. Then, if we ever should, under this damnable proposition, succeed in getting through this Democratic majority any Senate pension bill, you know mighty well there is a power on whose face "veto" is written for pension bills which you would fall back upon to kill it at last. [Applause on the Republican side.]

No, Mr. Speaker, I say for one, and I do not care whether REED or HISCOCK or any other man agrees with me or not, but my vote and voice will antagonize this last concentrated, deadly, and cowardly blow at the rights of the very best blood of America. [Applause on Republican side.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL].

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen on the other side of the House flatter themselves that they are going to deceive the intelligent people of this country into the belief that their proposed amendment to the rules is not intended as a blow at pension legislation they will find themselves very much mistaken. The people will understand this proposition for just what it is—a deliberate purpose to hamper and hinder and hedge about all attempts to pass any general pension legislation.

If the pension debt of this country is to be regarded as less sacred than any other of the country's obligations by that side of the House, it is time for us to know it. If the general Treasury of the country is too good to be used for the paying of pension to our soldiers, it is time that we should know it. If pension bills are to be hampered with odious tax provisions so as to make such legislation odious, let us know it now.

Now, what is the proposition before us? It is simply this, that hereafter there shall be no pension legislation unless it is coupled with a provision to raise the money with which to pay the pensions by a tax upon subjects of taxation not heretofore so burdened for general revenue purposes.

It is an announcement to the country that those subjects of taxation which we have left out of account in providing revenues with which to discharge the obligations of the nation, because a tax upon them is more odious and more burdensome than any other form of taxation, are to be brought back under our taxation laws, not to raise money for the general Treasury and subject to the payment of all obligations, but to pay pension indebtedness, an indebtedness not good enough, if this proposition prevails, to be paid out of the general funds of the United States.

Do gentlemen suppose that such proceeding would not excite hostility to pension legislation all over the country? And are we to be deceived into the belief that the design of the pending proposition is anything else than to make the payment of pensions more burdensome to the people than are the other debts and expenses of the nation?

We are told that it is the intention to raise pension money by a tax upon incomes. It is not difficult to understand what that means, for we all know that the great portion of all the money so raised would come out of the Northern States, and that in this way the South would be relieved from helping to pay this part of our common obligation.

That is the way you on the other side of the House measure justice; that is your idea of justice to the Southern half of the country, relieving it from its share of these several obligations, and by special exactions of money from the North, specially set apart for the payment of pensions, give us all to understand that this is a sectional and not a national debt. The people will not be deceived, and you will not pass this rule unless you do it over the heads of every friend of honest pension legislation in this country. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS].

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, in that time I only want to remind this House of two things that have taken place within the last week and this spectacle of the majority facing both ways on this floor on this very morning. Among the records of this House is the report from the Ways and Means Committee on the Morrison tariff bill, made after great deliberation, wherein they said only sixty days ago that the expenditures of this Government so clearly could not be exceeded by anything which we would do that they knew there would be $30,000,000 of surplus revenue in excess of what was needed for all legal obligations, including pensions, which they wanted to wipe out. And now in the very sentence in which the chairman of that committee comes on this floor and tells this House that there is this surplus for next year which can be wiped out he announces that he and those with him have called a halt; that they will not try to strike down the $30,000,000 of surplus revenue, but he will provide for more taxation as if for a deficit. The country and the House know that the annual expenditure for pensions on the regular annual roll does not greatly exceed that $30,000,000 which they said would next year accrue as surplus revenue.

Now the majority here, loudly claiming to be the guardians of the honor of this country, solemnly pledged to the soldiers when they volunteered in the danger of battle and the hour of the nation's peril, say there are $30,000,000 of surplus in the Treasury, but you shall not have it to pay the money we pledged to you for pensions. Sir, if that surplus is there it should first be devoted to the debt of honor due to the soldiers of the country. [Applause.]

But instead of that what do we find? From the public offices the soldiers have held you have been turning them out incontinently but steadily. They are turned out here and there among the rascals whom you declared must go, and now when ten thousand of these veterans are found in the almshouses of the country, the thirty millions of surplus revenue you say you have in the Treasury is to be withheld from them for their pensions, and you say "No, you shall not have it."

If this House should believe that an appropriation is due to the soldiers of the Union, you say to them, "Notwithstanding the surplus we say is in the Treasury, you shall not receive what we believe to be due unless we find some other source of revenue yet untried; unless we can, amid the divisions of opinion here upon tariff and internal revenue, agree upon a special tax which may also please the Senate and President; unless we impose new burdens which may make odious to the country the very claims of our soldiers which by our votes here we profess to believe is their just due." Why should the claims of our soldiers run this gauntlet we impose upon no other creditors of the Government the valor of these soldiers preserved?

On the other hand, how farcical is it for the chairman of the Ways and Means, instructed by his committee to reduce tariff-surplus revenue, to turn about at the very moment the country is expecting him to call for a vote which will reduce revenue $25,000,000, to bring in instead a new system of internal-revenue taxes upon the implied confession that after all there is no surplus but a deficiency, as the country is beginning to learn, and that under Democratic rule if this House should believe that we ought to pension ten thousand disabled and helpless soldiers in the poor-houses yet the Government has not a dollar in the Treasury to pay it, but must raise new revenue by imposing new internal taxes, because we need all the customs duties we now have for revenue only. And yet this is the most charitable defense of this new rule.

One other defense only remains. It is this: this Democratic House is so reckless, so careless, so unfit, that it squanders public money like a spendthrift and can not trust itself, and you will by an iron rule compel it to raise new money before you can intrust it with the expenditure of the surplus left by the Republican administration.

If this be true, why not apply this rule to the millions you have squandered on the river and harbor bill and the public-building bills? Why not apply it to the Hennepin Canal, to the Tehuantepec Ship Canal? Why single out the soldiers, who saved the flag under whose cover you come seeking these doubtful appropriations?

Upon these private pension bills, of which so much is said, the duty of every member is to vote against an unjust increase of an unjust pension; but where the pension is justly due every man in this House owes it to his country to redeem the pledge made a quarter of a century ago to the volunteers for the Union. The private pensions by special acts in all the Congresses since the war do not take annually out of the Treasury of the country, as I am informed by high authority on the Pension Committee, a half million of dollars. These six hundred pension acts which have passed this session, I am told also, will not require $90,000 annually for their payment, a sum yearly diminishing by deaths, an amount which does not exceed the salary of the Executive and his staff at the other end of the Avenue.

But further, when you find only this little sum of money so appropriated for special pension acts this session, we are asked now out of the general revenue to hold this fancied surplus as a preferred fund to pay the interest on the public debt, to pay bondholders, to spend it on rivers and harbors, on claims, on every private enterprise or scheme. All these are to be paid out of the money in the Treasury, but the money which is to pay the pensions of the soldiers is to come by an income tax from the rich men, thereby enabling them to say to the soldiers who were fighting while these men gathered their wealth, "There, you are a pauper on my bounty."

I say, sir, to fasten this stigma upon our soldiers in the rules of this House and to bind this body by such an organic law to pass from Congress to Congress in the fundamental rules of procedure is to go back upon the glorious past, to go back upon the promises we have made to the defenders of our country, upon the men who in time of future national trouble we must always depend, the volunteer soldiery of this land, a better and cheaper defense than a huge standing army. Upon them we must depend for our future as we have safely depended upon them in the past. We can not forget it, and we should not in this way teach posterity to forget it; and I protest against the enactment of such a system, discriminating in favor of our salaries and all other creditors but against the soldiers of our country, and I will vote against it and fight against it until the last hour of the last day of the session. [Applause on the Republican side.]

[During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the hammer fell.

Mr. HISCOCK yielded two minutes additional to Mr. MCCOMAS, who resumed and concluded his remarks as above.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, it has been well said by my colleague [Mr. HEWITT] that the Democracy stands pledged to devoting the internal revenue tax to the support of the soldiers. It has been well said by him that the Democracy stands pledged to reducing taxation. It was upon these two planks that they went to the country. There is now in this question before the House one deeper than even the repudiation of the first pledge of this great pretentious party.

I said a little while ago that the object of this amendment to the rule was to enable the Democratic side to avoid a direct vote upon this question; and certainly I have nothing to withdraw in that respect. But more than that, there is, under this proposition, the direct confession that the Democracy can not redeem its pledge to reduce taxation. Upon the floor to-day, if you discussed this question, you will say that you can, and your press is hounding you on to do it, and your press is chastising the faction that refused to unite with you in doing it the other day. But you know it is an impossibility. You know that you can not reduce taxation a single dollar, and you are then driven to the paltry pretense of taking the position that the large sums paid to the soldier is the reason why you can not do it.

We were told here the other day, Thursday, that to-day those men that were in favor of reducing the taxation would put in again their appearance and again move the consideration of a bill to reduce tariff taxes; that they would fight it out on that line; that that was the issue that they would go to the country upon; and that as regards those Democrats that refused to go with them, they would pulverize them, you would stamp them beneath your feet. And your organs in the country, the press that has supported you, that has taken the same position, has urged you on. And yet to-day, instead of moving to go into Committee of the Whole to consider this other pledge of yours, the reduction of tariff taxation, you stand before the country and admit that you can not do it; the revenues will not allow of it; that no more taxes to-day are being collected than it is necessary for the prudent, economical, reform Democratic administration to spend. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Hence the charges against the Republican party were untrue.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes; the charges against the Republican party were untrue. Yes; and they know they were. I say to the gentlemen upon the other side, you know you can not reduce taxation a dollar; and I want this question emphasized before the country. Revenue reformers you say you are. Tell us where you can remove or lighten a burden. Ah! No more motions for the consideration of that bill; no more motions to go into Committee of the Whole to consider that bill; but abjectly these men stand and say, "We admit the charges made upon the floor the other day are true, and next year there is to be a deficit exhibited to the country."

Your President sent his message here commanding you to do it, and his Secretary of the Treasury has lashed himself into a fury commanding you to do it. And upon this day you abandon it all and admit that the taxes can not be reduced, and that for the reason that our expenses are so large, and that for the purpose of holding them within limits you will tack to a soldier's pension bill revenue taxation.

Where is your full Treasury that you promised to the people? Where are your reform measures that you promised to the people? But I must not attempt to discuss them; I have not the time. What I desire to do in these few minutes that I have reserved to myself is to again impress it upon you, impress it upon the country, impress it upon the press of the United States, that this Democratic party that said it had come home to stay in its father's house confesses that it has to exhibit to the country a deficit. Every single pretense they made is false, every single pledge they made is unfulfilled and unredeemed, and you stand here cowering before the country, admitting—and I desire to put it in the strongest language it is possible for me to employ—admitting that it is powerless for you to lift any burden, that you have spent all the money, and that empty Treasury vaults are the fruits of a Democratic victory. [Applause.]

You told us how much money we had that we could apply to the payment of the national debt. Where is the money that you can apply to the national debt in the next year? One gentleman, alluding to me, said he was disposed to filibuster against the amendment of these rules. I say for myself I am willing to emphasize until the country, until your party, and until my party shall take notice that when Congress has been in session up to the present time with a Democratic majority of 40 in this House late in the session nothing has been accomplished, notwithstanding all these promises were made, and that in these last days they, the Democratic majority, have confessed, "We knew nothing about what was before us; we knew nothing about the receipts of the Government; we knew nothing about the workings of the Government; we are incompetent to carry out any of those promises, any of those pledges."

It will be time well spent, my friends, if for a brief while at least we point the attention of the whole country to this question, if we point the attention of the people of all parties to the fact that the Democratic party would turn back upon, repudiate, its pledges because it was obliged to; that its pretenses were indulged in for party effect; that nothing is to be expected from it but large appropriations for public buildings and a gradual depletion of the Treasury for personal and private ends for the benefit of its individual members upon this floor, and that those great promises, those planks in its platform formulated by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means have turned out to be empty sound. Yes, I say, brief season can be well devoted to the pointing of the attention of the country to this picture which is presented here to-day.

The bill to reduce taxation, to reduce tariff taxes as they tell us, is practically withdrawn from the House, no vote is to be taken upon it, and an attempt made to amend the rules in such a manner as to render it utterly impossible to pass any pension bill during this Congress however meritorious it may be, and all because of the empty Treasury that confronts us after one year of Democratic administration.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, the attitude of our Democratic friends on the question of prospective gratitude to the soldier is very touching. It recalls to my mind what took place upon this floor on the 4th day of May last, when there was under consideration a bill for the relief of certain officers of the volunteer army and for other purposes, which contained a proposition to do simple justice to two classes of men who were overlooked in the hurry of the war; they had been forgotten and not remembered from that time to this, notwithstanding the patriotic anxiety of the great Democratic party. First, that bill proposed to pay to officers of the volunteer army who had been promoted after re-enlistment the bounty which was due them according to law; and, second, to pay to soldiers honorably discharged for other reasons than wounds before the expiration of two years of service, the money (bounty) which was due them according to law.

Do you remember that day, gentlemen, and what you did? And remembering that, can you tell the soldiers of this country that you are their friends? I remember that in the course of that debate on May 4 three things took place. First, you consented to give us as a matter of grace, not justice, what we sought for the veteran officers, if we upon our part would betray and sell out the private soldiers. You were willing to swap and trade, to deal in and dicker out justice to one class if we would surrender the other; that is, you would grant as a matter of grace what was due to the officers, if we, as a matter of barter, would surrender what was due to the private soldiers.

Second. I remember in that debate the peculiar attitude of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT], who is now the fierce and impetuous advocate of prospective gratuities to the soldier, provided such gratuities are paid for by an income tax. The argument of that gentleman [Mr. HEWITT] and the attitude of your party proclaims that if the veteran sufferers of the war will go down upon their knees and crawl upon the ground and lick the hand of the millionaire, those veterans can have justice. Can we? And what have we done to deserve such "monstrous" gratitude at your hands?

How stands the case now? You have your millions, and the veterans their honor unsullied by beggary; you have earned in peace, while we fought, in part at least, your battles; you have the golden rewards of thrifty peace, we the glorious record won on the battlefields. You can keep your millions, and we will keep our honor. [Applause on the Republican side.]

If pension legislation is to be made odious by the levy of an obnoxious property tax to meet it, if the veterans can not be paid out of the public Treasury, as is the Congressman, the Senator, the clerk, and all the creditors of the nation, then we will wait until that can be done.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT], in his speech against the bill offered by myself on the 4th of May, who is now so overcome with a desire to rush to the rescue of the unfortunate soldier and repeal the arrears act and redeem the promises of the Democratic national convention, who is so anxious to do that which is impossible to be done, and to bestow impossible rewards upon the soldier at some future time, I remember stated in that debate that he did not blame the men of the South for voting for steals and robberies in the way of river and harbor bills in order that they might be compensated for the daily petty larceny committed by the North in the giving of pensions to the loyal soldiers. I stand here, said the gentleman from New York, and I I condemn the purpose of the bill (meaning the bill to pay what was legally due the veterans promoted after re-enlistment, and to pay $100 bounty to soldiers discharged for disability before the expiration of two years of service), and denounce it as an effort to unlock the doors of the Treasury and throw the contents into the street for the benefit of men who will not work for an honest living.

I remember that infamous characterization of my comrades, and I promise you I shall never forget it.

And I remember a third thing, and that is that a clear majority of over one hundred in this House had to accept the law from the two gentlemen from the South [Mr. ROGERS and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas], who, after twelve hours of filibustering, carried on by the Democratic party in this House for the purpose of the defeat of this bill, declared that they would never allow it to pass; and thus was the Congress of the United States, and the wronged and loyal soldiers of the Union army, compelled to accept law at the hands of the men of the South. And still the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] and his colleagues have the effrontery to pose and posture before this House and this country as the friends of soldiers. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The soldiers of the late war are not beggars nor mendicants. They demand justice, not alms. They will accept relief, but not insult. If you have been so anxious to pass the arrearage act, how comes it that you have sinned away nine hundred and ninety-nine days of the session, and only now bring a resolution before the House which makes the acceptance of an insult the condition-precedent to possible relief?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. Our friends on the other side seem to have about as much difficulty in reconciling their positions in favor of reducing the revenue and at the same time opposing pensions to soldiers on the ground that we have not revenue enough, as the theologians of the last generation had in reconciling predestination and free-will. It is simply one of the things that can not be done, and the greater the effort to do it the more evident becomes the impossibility.

Now, what is proposed here by our friends on the other side? They have tried, as they say, to reduce the duties upon imports. A bill for that purpose was called up for consideration the other day in this House, but it did not succeed in being considered, and now they shift their ground and seek to reduce expenditures at the cost of the soldiers of the country, because gentlemen know very well that if this proposition is to become a part of the rules of this House it will be as impossible to pass any measure here for the relief of the soldiers as it is for a camel to go through the eye of a needle. This proposition is simply a stab in the back. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] professes to be in favor of the repeal of the limitation in the arrears act, but what did he do and what did his friends do when we sought, a little while ago, to put that on as an amendment to the widows' pension bill? Ah, they were wonderfully in favor of repealing the limitation, but at the same time they utterly opposed taking advantage of the opportunity to do it. Now they are wonderfully in favor of pensioning the soldiers, but at the same time, not daring to meet the question squarely and go before the country upon it, they introduce a proposition here to do by indirection what they dare not do directly.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to propose his amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I propose the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "law," where it first occurs in the proposed rule, the following words: "Or to authorize an expenditure for the construction of any public building, the improvement of any river or harbor, or for the expenditure of money for any other purpose, or to make any charge upon the Government not theretofore authorized by law."

Also amend by adding after the word "pension," at the end of the proposed rule, the words "or other expenditure or charge upon the Government."

Mr. REED, of Maine. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, from the announcement made the other day by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, we were led to expect that he would this morning again undertake to call up his tariff bill. But, much to our surprise, we are met here with a proposition to make the pensions of the soldiers odious in the eyes of the masses of the American people. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON], the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, has told this side of the House that yesterday when by a motion to suspend the rules it was intended to deprive the Committee on Invalid Pensions of its day for the consideration of pension bills we on this side rose as a man to advance that proposition. Sir, every member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions on this side of the House expected to see its chairman stand up and combat that proposition and resist the attempt to have the Committee on Invalid Pensions give way. But, sir, among the first men to yield to the effort to deprive the soldiers of a day in this House was the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Sir, we hear a great deal of talk about the arrears-of-pension bill and of the necessity of putting riders on our pension legislation. Why, sir, the arrears-of-pension bill was reported to this House early in last March. There has been plenty of time to consider it; yet the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions has never tried to bring it up; or if he has tried, we on this side who stood ready and willing to assist him have never been able to discover that effort on his part.

The gentleman tells us that it will take two, or three, or four, or five hundred million dollars to pay these arrears of pensions; and it would appear from the statement that this vast amount of money was to be expended at once. But, sir, the Commissioner of Pensions, General Black, told the Committee on Invalid Pensions in a conference which he had with that committee—and I betray no secrets of the committee—that his office could not expend more than $50,000,000 per annum, that he thought the revenues of the country sufficient, and that the demands of the soldiers required the expenditure.

Why, sir, this question of pensions is not such a bugbear to the people of the country as some gentlemen here seem to suppose. It is not a bugbear to the people of my own State; for to-day North Carolina, although one of the States which gentlemen on the other side are in the habit of saying was robbed and crushed into the dust by the Republican "carpet-baggers" and "scalawags," levies a large tax upon the property-holders of the State—for what? For the purpose of paying pensions to confederate soldiers. And every man, black and white, pays the tax cheerfully; not a murmur has arisen. More than that, in my own county some of these pensioners on the confederate rolls are to-day occupying Federal positions; and nobody complains. The Federal soldier in that State contributes his mite. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I presume that all gentlemen here have heard of that celebrated game which was carried on between the Oriental Ah Sin and Bill Nye, in which it turned out that Ah Sin had twenty-four packs of cards up his sleeve while playing that game which he did not understand. Now, as to this proposed rule, the Democratic leaders of this House have had twenty-four packs up their sleeve for the last few months, and to-day they are trying to play them upon us.

The first inquiry that suggests itself to my mind is, what has become of the Committee on Ways and Means, and whether they have utterly abdicated their right and prerogative of bringing revenue bills into this House. A few days ago we had a revenue bill presented here by the Committee on Agriculture; it was received, acted on, and passed. And this morning we were notified that the Committee on Invalid Pensions had prepared a revenue bill which they would bring into the House and ask to have considered. But last week the Committee on Ways and Means asked consideration for a revenue bill which it had prepared, and the doors of this House were incontinently closed against it. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Ways and Means is about the only committee of this House that is not permitted to bring in a revenue bill and have it considered.

We were invited by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to be present this morning to vote upon a bill to reduce the revenues of the Government. We were informed by that gentleman on Thursday last that the present revenues of the Government were producing a surplus at the rate of $30,000,000 a year. He wanted to reduce that surplus—to get rid of this $30,000,000 a year in excess of the economical wants of the Government. We came here to meet that proposition to-day, as we notified him we would be here. But instead of a proposition to reduce the revenues of the Government $30,000,000 a year or thereabouts, we are met by a proposition to impose an internal-revenue tax and to increase the revenues of the Government.

Now, I ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, did you not know on Thursday last that the Government needed this increased revenue; and if you did not know it on Thursday last, how and when did you find it out? On Thursday last, when you wanted to reduce the revenue, you knew what pension bills were pending; you have known that for weeks past. Yet only on Thursday last the Democratic leader of this House, backed up by a Democratic caucus and its members, came in here and asked us to take up, consider, and pass a bill which would reduce the revenues of the Government. Gentlemen of the Democratic side of the House, this is mere "bluff," and it can not succeed here. If the statement were not unparliamentary, I would be inclined to say that it is cheap demagogy and can deceive nobody.

We went into the last campaign with you in 1884, and the principal issue you tendered us then was a surplus of $400,000,000 in the Treasury. Here we stand in the month of June, 1886, with the declaration on your part tacitly at least, impliedly at least, that there is no surplus, but there is a deficiency staring us in the face, and we must resort to that most odious, that most offensive form of legislation, the internal-revenue tax, to make good this deficiency which stares us in the face.

You want pension legislation, do you? Then give us your pension legislation. We invite you; we challenge you; nay, we dare you, now at this day and hour, to bring forward your arrears-of-pension act and I pledge you this side of the House. Bring forward your bill to give pensions to those who suffered amputation of their limbs from wounds received in the war, and we can pass it in thirty minutes. [Applause.] This is a mere delusion and a snare. You do not mean pension legislation. If you do, bring forward your pension legislation, and we will pass it. [Applause on the Republican side.] Yes, we will pass it and put it into operation; and when it is determined there is need for further revenue we will help you to get further revenue.

Mr. ELDREDGE. How did you vote on the Mexican pension bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not hear the gentleman.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. I now yield for three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat amazed at my colleague from Indiana [Mr. MATSON], chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, at being now so anxious to get at some legislation in the interest of the soldiers. He has had control of the Invalid Pensions Committee ever since this Congress met. On the first week of this session there was a bill introduced to pension the needy soldiers who are now disabled. There was also an effort made to pass a general pension act. Yet, sir, he has not up to this hour asked Congress to set apart a single day to consider either one of those bills.

When pension legislation comes back now from that committee it is to come back coupled with a condition like this: I say to you, my brave boys who carried the musket and knapsack, I am willing to vote you pensions if you couple with it the condition that I can get the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], a high tariff man, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], a free-trade man if I can get them to agree on some measure by which we can raise money enough—I am willing then to give you pensions [laughter]; but until I can get the extremes of the Democratic party to meet and dwell together in peace and harmony I will have to deprive you of any such pension legislation. [Laughter and applause.] That is the proposition he makes here to-day.

Now, sir, I have yet to learn that the men who bared their breasts to the storm of shot and shell to save the Government must stand back while the President, while the Cabinet, while all the civil service of the Government are permitted to draw their money out of the common Treasury; that they are to stand back to see if the extremes of the Democratic party can agree on some plan by which the money is to be raised by additional taxation for the purpose of paying these pensions. If the law is not sufficient for the purpose now, if some amendment is necessary to raise additional money to pay for the pensioning of our soldiers, let me suggest an amendment. Let us amend the present law by providing that the entire civil list, that the President and the Cabinet and the entire Congress, the Senate and the House, shall stand back and not receive their salaries until the pension-list has been paid entirely. If such an amendment be adopted I will pledge you then the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Illinois will agree on some measure to pay their own salaries. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Nine minutes.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I desire above all things that this question should be considered on its merits. I am opposed to it not only as a proposition in regard to pensions but in regard to any legislation in this House. It is contrary to the principle of sound legislation as practiced in this country for these many years.

It has always been the custom for the House of Representatives to make its appropriations and then to lay its taxes to pay the bills it has incurred. And this course of procedure is founded upon a wise, sound, and salutary principle, and that is, that the majority which votes to expend money may be a majority changeable as to individuals when you come to raise it. It takes a majority to do both, but hence majorities may be composed of different men. The question of expenditure being once settled, the House then turns itself to the question of ways and means. That is sound legislation.

Now, is there any reason why we should deviate from this sound principle upon which all right action is founded? I charge here and now that this is only one of the examples of the indirection which long years of servitude have caused to be a habit in the Democratic party. Having been for long years in the minority they have got a fashion of indirection, and they can not drop it now when they are in the majority and in power. You yourselves know, every one of you, that the majority that would vote for a pension bill might be composed of different persons from those who would vote in favor of a particular tax bill. You therefore single out pension legislation and saddle it with this disadvantage, for which you can give no justification if your purposes and intentions are honest.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY], in that brilliant five minutes which he devoted to your situation, has exposed and laid bare the entire hollowness of it. If you believe that this country needs more revenues, why did the leader of this House demand a reduction of revenue of $26,000,000? If you do not believe it, why did you bring in this rule? Take either position you like, and you stand condemned before intelligent people.

Now, sir, I have one other word of reply to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Unintentionally, no doubt, he has confused this matter by undertaking to represent to this House that this expenditure which pensions may produce has got to be immediate. He has rolled up before you the $250,000,000 which Mr. Commissioner Black, in his last revised estimates, says that arrears of pensions will cost, and presented it to this House as if it was an annual expenditure that must be met at once. And he knows that this same veracious authority, whose virtues have caused this House to ring, declares that if the bill were passed he could only liquidate $50,000,000 per annum. Where, then, is the honesty of such a statement?

It is on a par with the honesty of this proposition. They rush forward with enormous anxiety to pay pensions and saddle them with a tariff discussion! Good heavens! what legislation on earth in the way of appropriations could stand a tariff discussion? Why, this House by a majority of 17, in a Democratic House of 40 majority, has expressed its disgust with the subject to such an extent that although the bill was still-born, nevertheless they absolutely refused the oratorical ceremony of burial. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Yet this thing comes from a Democratic party that met together in Chicago and announced a platform of principles accompanied by a statement of facts as veracious as its principles were sound. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Why, that Democratic assembly, containing all the wisdom there was in what was called "Democracy," announced that we had a surplus of $100,000,000 torn from a suffering people. [Laughter.]

And yet to-day we are told that pensions, which presumably are deserved, because it is presumed the House will pass wise bills even if it has forty Democratic majority—it is a presumption of law if not of fact [laughter]—and yet we are told that not a single one of these shall pass unless an internal-revenue or tariff-taxation bill is allowed to overwhelm the House into that sleep which follows such efforts at oratory as would instantly burst forth.

Ah! But the Democratic party have pledged the internal revenue to pensions. There is another instance of their methods of indirection. Why the internal revenue? Because they do not want it repealed; because they wish to fasten the patriotic sentiment of this country upon the internal-revenue taxes in order that they may run riot in the tariff schedules; and yet after all their careful preparation, after all their indirection, there seems to be not much running riot in the tariff schedules. But if we can not unite the Democratic party upon that platform, let us see if we can unite them upon a proposition to hamper pension legislation and involve it with other subjects with which it has no necessary connection. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 7364) authorizing the Secretary of War to allow the interment in the national cemetery at New Berne, in the State of North Carolina, of the remains of the late Mrs. Harriet B. Lehman.

Also, that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which concurrence was requested, the bill (H. R. 1341) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Natchez, Miss.

Also, that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1836) for the relief of Libbie C. Montis.

Also, that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution requesting the President to bring to the attention of the Government of Nicaragua certain claims of citizens of the United States against that government.

Also, that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested, namely:

A bill (S. 2292) to provide for the settlement of certain Cherokee claims under the treaty of February 14, 1833; and

A bill (S. 2661) touching the grade of commander in the Navy, and to correct an error in relation to an appointment therein.

The message further announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 209) for the relief of the legal representatives of John M. Robeson, deceased, and asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes thereon, and that it had appointed Mr. HOAR, Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, and Mr. GRAY as conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT TO THE RULES.

Mr. MORRISON. I desire to substitute for the original resolution what I send to the desk. I have made some verbal amendments in the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois proposes to offer as a substitute what the Clerk will read.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask unanimous consent to substitute it for the original resolution.

Mr. BURROWS. Let it be read first.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be in order, when any general bill to increase the rates or amounts of pensions is under consideration, to amend the same so as to provide by taxation or otherwise for the payment thereof; but no such amendment shall be in order unless the net revenue provided for shall be thereby set apart for the sole purpose of paying such increased pensions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to substitute what has been read for the original resolution.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I object.

Mr. MORRISON. It is not intended to mean anything different from the original resolution; but some gentlemen would prefer the resolution in that form.

Mr. CANNON. In obedience to a very general expression of those about me who desire to have a straight contest upon this rule, pure and simple, as it is reported from the committee, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MORRISON. Is there still objection to the substitution of what has been read for the original resolution?

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is. We will take a straight vote on the resolution.

Mr. MORRISON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG].

Mr. BRAGG. I am exceedingly indebted to the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] for his reference to the failure of this House to consent to the consideration of a revenue bill reported from the Committee on Ways and Means. I am delighted at it, because it shows what sort of contempt the Republicans of this House feel toward those who have been recreant to their faith, to their pledges; that while they are received with open arms and approbation for the acts they have done, they are thoroughly despised for their political recreancy.

Mr. Speaker, when I came into this House a few moments ago the distinguished gentleman from Iowa had the floor, and I stopped for a moment to listen, for I thought that by accident I had strayed into a camp-meeting. But in a few moments I saw it was the old hobby-horse, brought out to be ridden around again and pranced and posed in the presence of the American people for the benefit of the claim-agent newspapers, and to circulate them among that class of men whose votes they think can be bought by their pretending to be the "soldiers' friends." [Cries of "Oh!" "Oh!"] Yes, "Oh!" [Laughter.] I repeat "Oh!" [Many cries of "Oh!" "Oh!"] Who was it when you had two-thirds majority in this House, when the war was still recent, when men were suffering from wounds everywhere—who was it that passed a limitation upon pensions and provided that every claim not presented within five years should only commence to draw a pension from the date of the filing of the act? Who was that? Will you answer me? "Oh!" [Laughter.] It was the Republican party—"Oh!" Who was it that repealed that limitation upon arrears and gave the soldiers whose cases were pending their pension from the date of their disability? It was the Democratic party. "Oh!"

Who was it that in their national convention in 1884 declared in favor of the repeal of the limitation on the arrears, and one of their candidates, now presiding in one of the branches of this Government, within thirty days afterward refused to follow the platform of his party? It was one of the great Republican financial leaders who now occupies the position of President of the Senate.

Now, why is it we hear all this talk? There is nothing in this resolution relating to the refusal of soldiers' pensions. This resolution provides for means of paying soldiers' pensions. It is not to refuse to grant them, but to provide for their payment. And when these men spring to their feet and cry out it is an attack on the soldiers, it is nothing but an attempt, under the guise of friendship to the soldier element of the country, to protect the bondholder, to protect the wealthy man [applause], to protect those men who during the war, favored by a Republican administration, fattened upon the blood of the men in the field, and as contractors filled their purses. [Applause.] They have been protected and pay no tax, because they hold Government bonds that were bought with currency worth 50 cents on the dollar. They have received their interest promptly, some of them semi-annually——

A MEMBER. Quarterly.

Mr. BRAGG. Year after year, without paying anything upon that capital. But when we propose, in order to provide a method for paying soldiers, to reach this fund that has refused to pay what it ought to the support of the Government, and when we say that that fund which was made out of the blood of the soldiers, that property which was protected by the blood of the soldiers, shall contribute to the payment of pensions, then we find these men crying out simply because it is a method to reach their ducats. Hinc illæ lachrymæ.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe I have some time left. I did not intend to indulge in any further discussion touching the matter before the House, and would not have risen now except for the language used by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG]. I stand here his peer in every respect, with convictions as pure as he can possibly have [applause], and I have the courage to maintain them. [Applause.]

A few years ago we had this controversy, and I cast my vote then as I cast it on Thursday—from conviction. I resisted anything that tended to free trade in the United States and the lowering of the wages of the American laborer. [Loud applause.] I was condemned in some quarters for that vote. I went with the rest of you to a national convention, where I was told I would have no Republicans to help me. What was the result of that convention? Does any man here attempt to say that the measure introduced into this House by the Ways and Means Committee is in harmony with the spirit of that convention or the enunciations of those who took the stump in its behalf? No.

I am to-day just where I stood then. I am in favor of revision of the tariff and a lowering of the rates of duty, and also of the repeal in part of the internal-revenue taxes—the question upon which the Ways and Means Committee of this House has denied us the privilege of voting. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I have only to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] that he has from me as much contempt as I can well send forth. [Renewed applause.] I am ready to discuss with him the propriety of my course, whether here or elsewhere, even in my own city where the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] recently took occasion to go, and I now formally invite that gentleman to come and take part in the joint canvass in my district in November next. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEWITT. Will the gentleman allow me a word. He has asked whether the measure introduced by the Committee of Ways and Means was in accordance with the pledges of the Chicago platform. I say that it was, and that is the question that I will go into his district and talk out with him and with his workingmen. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RANDALL. I know well the conduct of the gentleman in the Chicago convention, and I know that neither he nor any other man subsequently went on the stump in his State or elsewhere and made declarations in the direction of the bill of the Ways and Means Committee as I conceive it to be. I not only know that, but I know also that, on the contrary, I was invited into his State, and spoke there in the exact line of the declarations that I have made here and make now. [Applause on the Republican side.] I know more; I know that in the canvass last year which resulted in the election of Governor Hill they took care to invite me again, and they invited also many other men who agreed with me in sentiment as to the construction of the Chicago platform, while they failed to invite any man to speak there who thought as the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] now declares. [Applause on the Republican side.] And what was the result? The result was that the Democratic majority in the State of New York increased from something over 1,000 in 1884 to 11,000 in 1885, and it was not on any free-trade doctrine. [Laughter and applause.]

I declare that I am ready and willing to vote with anybody who will seek intelligently to reform the inequalities of the tariff. But how have we been met in this particular? We have had to either take the bill of the Ways and Means Committee or nothing. It has been asserted that we can not put upon a customs bill anything that looks to the repeal of internal taxation. I believe that the system of internal taxation is un-American and undemocratic. It was so pronounced by the fathers of our country, and I shall never weary in seeking its repeal in part or altogether. [Applause.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. Did you vote for the oleomargarine bill?

Mr. RANDALL. I did.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That proposes to increase internal taxes.

Mr. RANDALL. I voted for the oleomargarine bill because I believe that the people of the United States should be protected from fraud. ["Good!" "Good!" and applause.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then you are for the continuance of internal-revenue tax?

Mr. RANDALL. I am for the repeal in part or in full of the internal-revenue system of taxation.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to be led or driven away from the subject now under consideration.

Mr. RANDALL. I was assaulted.

Mr. MORRISON. I assaulted no one. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] very well understands that I can not go any length into this question now. Claiming to be assaulted, he tells us that no tariff or tax bill is fair and in the spirit of the Chicago platform that does not present him the opportunity of voting to remove or reduce the internal-revenue taxes, and again and again he makes his same old unkept promises and declarations as to what he will do toward reducing taxes, and we have just heard from the other side by way of reproach that we pledged ourselves at Chicago to keep internal taxes unrepealed and apply them to the payment of pensions. We are so pledged, and these taxes do go to the payment of $75,000,000 annual pensions. We do so devote them to pay the pensions of soldiers. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENLEY. The gentleman is borrowing the representations of the other side for the arraignment of Democrats on this side of the House who do not think with him.

Mr. MORRISON. I am arraigning nobody, and least of all the Representative from California. I am addressing myself to his leader, the man whom he follows and who made such comment upon my work as to invite reply here and now, although I share with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] in the feeling that this subject did not belong here in this debate. And I will take early occasion to reply more in detail to what he has said if he will cease denying to me the opportunity to be heard. Then I will undertake to prove that there is not a word of realized truth in all his promises. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I yield now seven minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this debate has wandered off from the real issue before the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The gentleman from New York need file no demurrer against me. I shall not discuss the tariff question until that question comes before the House.

Mr. Speaker, the cost of the late war, from June 30, 1861, to June 30, 1866—and I give exact figures derived from official sources—was $3,389,622,434.27.

There has been added to that cost since the war $830,272,834.13 paid as pensions—or will have been paid by the close of the present fiscal year, June 30—and $2,274,275,844.21 as interest on the public debt, making the total cost of the war to June 30, 1886, not including claims allowed since 1880, $6,494,171,112.63. Therefore since the war there has been added as a result of the war an amount almost equal to the first cost of the war. Of this only $830,000,000 in round numbers has been paid for pensions, while $2,274,275,844 has been paid as interest on the public debt.

Again, the interest-bearing debt at the close of the war was $2,381,530,294. Almost as much, therefore, it will be seen, has been paid as interest since the war as the entire interest-bearing debt when at its highest figure in 1865. This interest-bearing debt, moreover, represents, as was stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin, a loan made to the Government in greenbacks worth less than 50 cents on the dollar. That debt was afterward made a coin debt. That is to say, the cost of the war was well-nigh doubled by doubling the value of money, thereby doubling the debt created by the war. There was set apart and pledged for the payment of the interest of that debt the coin collected on customs duties, gold until lately; so that, besides doubling the debt by doubling the value of the money in which it was made payable, the interest has been paid ever since semi-annually or quarterly in gold.

Two classes are now represented here. First, those who during the war risked their lives, fought the battles, gave their blood, sacrificed health in defense of the Government. They have received besides the $13 a month in greenbacks paid them during the war $830,000,000 as pensions, while the others, those who speculated upon the misfortunes of the country in time of war, or who loaning greenbacks have received gold worth twice as much in their stead, have received by increase of the original debt and interest paid since the war over three and one-half billion dollars. Think of it! More than half the entire cost of the war has been interest upon the public debt paid in gold or the increase of the debt as the result of changing from paper to gold. Half the original debt and half the interest paid since has been clear bounty paid to capital for its part in the war. Half the original debt is $1,190,765,147, half the interest paid since is $1,137,137,922, altogether $2,327,902,069. The bounties paid to the soldiers for fighting the battles, not including local bounties in States, was, up to 1880, $140,549,334.97. This has been the grand result of Republican legislation affecting the soldier and the bondholder.

Well may the soldier say with Shakespeare—

> I have kept back their foes,
> While they have told their money, and let out
> Their coin upon large interest.

But let us go a step farther. Since the beginning of the war till a little over a year ago your party has had full control of the executive department of the Government, and most of the time of the legislative, at least down to 1878. Then both Houses were Democratic. Now, how does the account stand? Down to the date of the passage of the arrears act in 1879, or in eighteen years, you had paid the soldiers as pensions—and all wars are included in the figures I give—$375,629,214, while in the same time you paid the bondholders as interest on their doubled debt, $1,764,256,198.45. Since 1879, when the arrears act was passed by a Democratic Congress, or in seven years, there has been appropriated, mostly by Democratic Congresses, $454,643,620.13 for pensions, as against less than $570,000,000 for interest.

These figures tell better than words or buncombe speeches made to catch soldier votes. Now I come to the question at issue. Bills are before us and are being pressed to a passage that call for $250,000,000 to $300,000,000 to be paid, not in annual payments, but immediately, or in a single year, or at most in one or two years. What annual payment would be required thereafter I do not know. I allude particularly to the arrears bill. Now, how shall that large proposed expenditure be met? It can be met in only one of two ways—by increasing the burden of taxation upon the laborer and the producer or levying taxes upon the accumulated wealth of the country, upon the billions accumulated, in part, in the manner I have stated. Less than half a million of men now own $40,000,000,000 out of the $50,000,000,000 of the wealth of this country.

These pension bills—and especially the arrears bill, which involves, as has been shown, probably $250,000,000 in a year—can not pass and the expenditures they require be met unless you levy taxes of one kind or another to meet them. Which shall it be; a temporary income tax upon accumulated wealth and the incomes derived therefrom, or a tax which the laborers of the country—in fact, the soldiers themselves—must largely pay. Which shall it be, I say? I am ready to go to the country on that issue if you are.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I would like four or five minutes more.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, there have been appropriated for pensions this year $81,000,000—well-nigh the entire cost of the Revolutionary war. The gentleman from Pennsylvania on the other side of the House [Mr. JACKSON] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and others complain that bills extending pensions have not been passed. Do they forget the bill which passed the House in the Forty-eighth Congress which would have made it possible for every soldier now disabled, if the disability were not the result of his own fault or had not occurred since the war, to go upon the pension-roll and receive a pension proportionate to his disability? Such a bill did pass the House in the last Congress. It went to the Senate, and there it was smothered.

The then Commissioner of Pensions stated that that act would have admitted to the pension-roll more than a hundred thousand soldiers. But it did not become a law for the reason I have stated. Gentlemen on the other side of the House know very well, too, that their party had control of this Government every year and every day from the beginning of the war till a little more than a year ago. If the pension laws needed revision, if they needed to be extended, why was that not done during those twenty-five years? You had, too, the administration of the Pension Office all that time. Every place, from top to bottom, was filled by Republicans. If pensions were not granted as they ought to have been under the laws which you made, who was at fault? Nobody but yourselves, in failing to pass proper legislation or in the administration of the laws which you yourselves made. That is all there is of it. You have only yourselves to blame, nobody else.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman tell us what bill he speaks of as having been "smothered" in the Senate?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It was a bill extending the provisions of the pension laws, and affording pensions without requiring proof specific of the incurrence of disability in the service. It made present disability the main test.

Mr. HEPBURN. Did not the Senate pass that bill in connection with a Mexican pension bill, and did not your side of the House filibuster against it for two days?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. No, sir. The Senate sent back to the House a bill which they knew would not pass and ought not to pass in the form in which it came here, and which it was never intended should pass. They sent it back here to make capital for the next campaign. You made all the capital you could out of it, but it served you to little purpose; and your opposition now to the proposition to make possible the passage of pension laws and to meet the requirements of such laws will avail you little in the coming canvass.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Ohio tell us what bill passed this House?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The bill I have referred to. It passed this House and was smothered in the Senate.

Mr. HEPBURN. I say that no such bill passed the House in the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I say that such a bill did pass, and it was smothered in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. No, sir, I do not, for I have but a minute or two more time. I say the bill I refer to never became a law, but died in the Senate.

Mr. STRUBLE. Oh, tell us what bill it was that you say was smothered in the Senate.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It was a bill reported by the Committee on Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, and your party smothered it in the Senate. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, extraordinary expenses always call for extraordinary taxes, and bills calling for two hundred or three hundred millions of dollars in a single year, almost a million dollars a day, may certainly be called extraordinary expenditure. To meet that, I say, an extraordinary tax would have to be levied. How shall it be levied? That is the question. Upon the poor, upon the laborers of the country, upon the necessities of the poor man, on his clothing, his coffee and sugar, or upon the accumulations of the rich and their incomes? Shall it be upon the incomes of the rich or the necessaries of the poor? Sir, that is the question before this House, and that is the only question. [Applause.]

The object of the amendment to the rules is to permit an income or other special tax to meet sudden and extraordinary expenditures, such as some of the pension bills before us call for, especially the arrears bill, which it would be mockery to pass without providing at the same time for revenue to pay the arrears allowed.

It is not intended that this power shall be invoked except for large and extraordinary expenditures, and it would not be. With only revenues enough from ordinary sources to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government, including the regular annual appropriations for pensions and the sinking fund for the extinction of the debt, some such provision, I repeat, must be made, or pension legislation calling for increased appropriations must stop, and that is what you are to decide.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Why do you not put this provision on some other appropriation instead of upon the pension appropriation? Why do you hamper that, and that only, for you are in favor of passing these appropriation bills?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I tell the gentleman from Michigan that I would favor an income tax to meet the expense of even a river and harbor bill if necessary. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRISON. I yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON].

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask the intelligence and attention of the House for five minutes.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Before this debate closes I desire to be heard.

Mr. MORRISON. If the gentleman is on the other side of the question he will have to ask time from the other side.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I do not propose to ask either side of the House for the right to be heard on this question. I propose to ask for time in my own behalf.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to the floor and will proceed.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say, in the first place, that it is important in the consideration of this matter to remember that the proposition here is not to affect any pension which now exists or which may be obtained under any law now existing. This proposition is to obtain only so far as additional and new legislation is concerned. There is no effort upon this side of the House or those who advocate the amendment of the rules to prevent any single pensioner or any person from procuring a pension under existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Or any private pension bill.

Mr. MATSON. Yes, or any private pension bill. The clean, naked proposition is upon general pension bills hereafter; it will be in order to provide means of meeting the expense of those bills.

Mr. BRUMM. The resolution does not say so.

Mr. MATSON. It does as I understand it and as the gentleman will understand it when he has considered it.

Here is a fact you can not escape from. Gentlemen talk about deceiving the House and deceiving the country. It is a practical and plain proposition of figures which you can not escape by talking about the best blood of America, or talking about the general pension legislation, or any other talk outside of the real question. That is not going to lead away the attention of the people of the country from the fact that it is utterly impossible to pay additional pensions without providing additional revenue. [Applause.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. What have you done with the surplus?

Mr. MATSON. There is but $105,000,000 of surplus in the Treasury. The proposition here is that in order to pay four or five hundred millions of dollars in the event of our passing the arrears of pension bill, and the bill we reported, which the gentleman from Iowa criticises, to pay all dependent soldiers a pension, we shall need to meet this increased pension-list many millions more of revenue than we now receive. This money must be raised by additional taxation. That is a proposition from which there is no escape. What is the honest thing to do about it? Is it honest to pretend you can pay these millions of increased pensions when you have not the revenue to do it? The clean, naked proposition we say is that to meet this additional expense we must levy additional taxation, and in levying that additional taxation we say further let the tax be laid upon the incomes of the country. [Applause.] Now, if you want to intensify it by filibustering or in any other way the people of the country are ready to meet it.

You say that this income tax is an obnoxious tax. You say that additional tariff legislation ought to be laid. We say that the income tax is a fairer tax, and are ready to go before the people on that issue.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me ask the gentleman to point any feature in this resolution which proposes an income tax.

Mr. MATSON. I must decline to yield to an interruption.

Let us understand now the issue as made up. You upon the one hand say that you are opposed to an income tax and in favor of additional tariff legislation to meet this increased expenditure for pensions and we say the reverse——

Mr. BRUMM. This resolution does not say anything about an income tax whatever.

Mr. MATSON. I have already declined to yield to interruptions.

Mr. BRUMM. But the gentleman intimates that this resolution provides for an income tax.

Mr. MATSON. I have declined to yield again and again, and hope gentlemen will not interrupt me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. MATSON. We have said and said distinctly that the purpose and object of the new rule is to enable us to put before the House, so as to provide the means of paying these additional pensions, an income tax upon the wealth of the country. My friends upon the other side on the Committee on Invalid Pensions no longer ago than yesterday, without a dissenting voice, agreed to that proposition, every one of them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRISON was recognized.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I would like to have two or three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to thirteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I will ask my friend to yield to me, and I will ask unanimous consent of the House to grant the gentleman from Illinois additional time.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, after I have said what I have to say I propose to ask the previous question. I can not yield further after yielding so often and so much of my time.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has some time yet remaining. I therefore return for a moment to the subject of the tariff bill, already brought into this debate. If I do him injustice he has time and opportunity for reply. I have already called attention, and now again recur to this matter out of place because the gentleman invited it in his reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin, which he had the right to do, but he went out of his way and away from the facts, as I believe, to say that the proposition or tariff bill presented by the Ways and Means Committee did not conform to the meaning or spirit of the Chicago platform.

Need I call attention to the fact that in nearly every paragraph of the Chicago platform we pledged ourselves as a party and as individually to the reduction of tariff taxes, and we especially pledged the continuance of internal-revenue taxes, in connection with the payment of pensions first, and then to be paid into the Treasury.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORRISON. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. What were the "war taxes" referred to in the Chicago platform that, in the judgment of the Democratic party, ought to be abolished?

Mr. MORRISON. War taxes are both internal and tariff taxes. Nearly one-half of the customs or tariff taxes we are paying to-day are taxes which were added to the Morrill tariff, passed the last day of Buchanan's administration.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. May I interrupt the gentleman from Illinois for a suggestion?

Mr. MORRISON. I will yield to the gentleman, although my time is very short.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I ask the gentleman if the Chicago platform did not state that—

> The system of direct taxation known as internal revenue is a war tax.

And further this language:

> We denounce the Republican party for having failed to relieve the people from crushing war taxes.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MORRISON. Certainly that is true. I have just said in reply to the gentleman from Virginia that war taxes were and still are both internal and tariff taxes.

The internal-revenue taxes, which yielded three-fourths of the entire revenue derived from that source when internal taxes were highest, have been repealed, and the internal-revenue tax which yielded then the one-fourth has been continued. They are not so crushing. The war taxes that were put on the tariff or the custom duties, aside from that upon tea and coffee, substantially remain still crushing to-day, and in nearly every line of the platform we promised reduction, and we are bound to do it by everything that binds honorable men.

Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania says, notwithstanding we promised reduction and he wants to keep faith and the pledges made in the platform, yet he will not vote to consider a bill unless it gives an opportunity for doing that which he pledged himself not do—repeal internal revenue. He knows further that the platform declares that in the reduction of taxes with our system we can get revenue from a less number of articles. That pledged us to something on the free-list and to get our revenue from fewer articles. And now I will wait to hear from the gentleman from Pennsylvania what it is he is willing to put on the untaxed list that we may have fewer taxed articles.

Mr. RANDALL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MORRISON. Without answering mine. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. Do you think that Mr. Cleveland would have been elected President if that convention had declared for free raw wool?

Mr. MORRISON. I think that Mr. Cleveland would have gotten more votes than he did with a specific promise of untaxed wool. He did not carry Ohio, nor California, and he did not carry Pennsylvania by 80,000 votes, and he would not have carried either of those States if we had promised to put the tariff mountain-high on wool. And he would have carried the great wool-growing State of Texas and all the States he did carry with a pledge of untaxed wool.

Again I repeat, that if the gentleman from Pennsylvania continues in his refusal to vote on a bill to redeem his pledges of tax reduction until he is given an opportunity to violate his pledges by a reduction of internal taxes he may never vote at all on the subject, which all his actions show he is disinclined to do. Not all the gentlemen who voted to consider the tariff bill favor all its provisions, but this bill brought, or would bring, the whole question of tariff-tax reduction under consideration, and would have afforded every man an opportunity for keeping or trying to keep his pledges and promises. None of us can keep faith or pledges without consideration of the subject in some bill, and the gentlemen who have refused to consider the bill and the subject are chargeable with a faithless disregard of promises with a purpose to continue taxes as they are.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. If the mere proposition to adopt this rule creates so much confusion on your side, what would be the result if on a pension bill you attempted to pass a tariff bill?

Mr. MORRISON. If you will quit your illicit intercourse with our friends on this side this pension matter as well as the tariff reduction will go through and all our pledges will be kept. But so long as you insist on coming to our side and getting some of the men elected on our side, and with the same pledges we gave, to help you and prevent the reduction of taxation, there is likely to be some confusion. And then you reproach us—what did some of you say a short time ago about fairness!

Mr. REED, of Maine. We do not reproach you. We think it is the highest compliment we can pay you to say that some of you have deserted the Democratic party.

Mr. MORRISON. That compliment is not mine. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes.

Mr. MORRISON. Something was said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY] about a lack of honesty in this proposition, which could only be answered by a word not parliamentary. Some of those on the other side of the Hall, who professedly believe themselves the especial and only friends of the soldier, and who assume to find something unfriendly in a proposition for his especial benefit, have dealt freely in the words indirection, fraud.

All the fraud, indirection, all that is in it, good or bad, is mine. But I decline to exchange epithets with you who assume to discover here anything with which an honest man can find fault. Gentlemen, I have no fears that any honest man in this House or this country will question or suspect my motives on this subject or any other. [Applause.] Go on, gentlemen; you are welcome to make all you can out of such words or epithets when applied to anything I have done or am trying to do.

A word more about this proposition. If the arrears of pensions are to be granted, you know, gentlemen, that we have not the money to pay them, do you not, no matter whether we make the proposed tax reduction or not? The gentleman from Ohio sought to make a point by suggesting that we first offered to reduce taxes, and now we propose to increase them within the next few days. If we do not make the reduction proposed in the tariff bill, still we have not the money to meet the requirements of the arrears bill. This we all do know.

When the arrears bill is passed the Commissioner estimates $75,000,000 as the sum required the first year.

Now, will anybody who has any information on the subject and manhood enough to tell the truth say that we will have the $75,000,000 with which to meet the first year's payment? One at least, and I believe others of you, promise or predict that we will not have money enough to meet the ordinary expenses of government by $14,000,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. Don't you believe it?

Mr. MORRISON. I do not. I reported a joint resolution to take some of the money out of the Treasury, and you signed a paper, a minority report, to keep it there, and you will not let us have that to pay pensions.

Mr. HISCOCK. I signed a paper protesting, in the line of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury speaking for this Democratic administration, against reducing the amount in the Treasury to so low a point as you propose.

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, but you reported to keep it all the same.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] also.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have the authority in dissenting from your report of having the same views expressed by the President of the United States and his Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MORRISON. No matter whose company you are in, if the money stays in the Treasury it will not pay pensions.

Mr. McKINLEY. And in addition to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury we have the report of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT].

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, that is all true; you may be in very good Democratic company, and yet money kept in the Treasury will not pay arrears. How can you pay the pensions with the money you are obliged to keep in the Treasury?

Mr. HISCOCK. You should take the administration to task as to that.

Mr. MORRISON. Oh, no; not in this connection, because the administration does not propose to keep money in the Treasury and grant pensions that could only be paid by taking it out, and yet refuse to provide other necessary means of payment.

I want to say in conclusion this resolution makes or enforces no amendment, it lays no tax, but it enables the House of Representatives, if it sees fit, to take this method of raising money to pay any pensions which justice to the soldier requires it to grant whenever the amount is so large that the ordinary revenues are not equal to the payment of pensions granted. This is in the especial interest of the pensioner and in the line of our promises to him at Chicago, because all the ordinary revenues, including that received from internal taxes, may be taken in paying the annual pension-roll of $75,000,000 and the ordinary expenses of administration necessary to good government. This is the only safe and best guarantee the arrears pensioner can have; for if he went unpaid until taxes in the ordinary way were raised by bill from the Ways and Means Committee his professed friends here might refuse to consider it, and his claims be further delayed.

Mr. MORRISON. I move the previous question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I move to lay the resolution on the table, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 127, nays 139, not voting 55; as follows:

YEAS—127.

Adams, G. E.	Fleeger,	Markham,	Seney,
Allen, C. H.	Fuller,	McComas,	Sessions,
Anderson, J. A.	Gallinger,	McKenna,	Smalls,
Atkinson,	Gilfillan,	McKinley,	Spooner,
Baker,	Goff,	Millard,	Stahlnecker,
Beach,	Grout,	Milliken,	Steele,
Bingham,	Guenther,	Moffatt,	Stephenson,
Bliss,	Harmer,	Morrill,	Stewart, J. W.
Bound,	Hayden,	Morrow,	Stone, E. F.
Boutelle,	Henderson, D. B.	Negley,	Strait,
Brown, C. E.	Henderson, T. J.	Nelson,	Struble,
Brown, W. W.	Hepburn,	O'Donnell,	Swinburne,
Brumm,	Hiestand,	O'Hara,	Symes,
Buck,	Hires,	O'Neill, Charles	Taylor, E. B.
Burrows,	Hiscock,	Osborne,	Taylor, I. H.
Campbell, Felix	Holmes,	Owen,	Taylor, Zach.
Campbell, J. M.	Hopkins,	Parker,	Thomas, O. B.
Campbell, T. J.	Houk,	Payne,	Thompson,
Cannon,	Jackson,	Payson,	Townshend,
Caswell,	Johnston, J. T.	Perkins,	Van Schaick,
Conger,	Kelley,	Pettibone,	Wadsworth,
Cutcheon,	Ketcham,	Phelps,	Wait,
Davenport,	La Follette,	Pirce,	Warner, William
Davis,	Laird,	Plumb,	Weaver, A. J.
Dingley,	Lehlbach,	Price,	Weaver, J. B.
Dowdney,	Libbey,	Reed, T. B.	Weber,
Dunham,	Lindsley,	Rockwell,	West,
Ely,	Little,	Romeis,	White, Milo
Evans,	Long,	Rowell,	Whiting,
Everhart,	Louttit,	Ryan,	Woodburn,
Farquhar,	Lyman,	Sawyer,	Worthington.
Felton,	Mahoney,	Scranton,

NAYS—139.

Adams, J. J.	Davidson, R. H. M.	Kleiner,	Rogers,
Allen, J. M.	Dibble,	Laffoon,	Sadler,;
Ballentine,	Dockery,	Lanham,	Sayers,
Barbour,	Dougherty,	Le Fevre,	Seymour,
Barnes,	Dunn,	Lovering,	Singleton,
Barry,	Ellsberry,	Lowry,	Skinner,
Belmont,	Ermentrout,	Martin,	Sowden,
Blanchard,	Fisher,	Matson,	Springer,
Bland,	Foran,	Maybury,	Stewart, Charles
Blount,	Forney,	McAdoo,	St. Martin,
Boyle,	Frederick,	McCreary,	Stone, W. J., Ky.
Bragg,	Gay,	McMillin,	Stone, W. J., Mo.
Breckinridge, C. R.	Geddes,	McRae,	Storm,
Breckinridge, W. C. P.	Gibson, C. H.	Merriman,	Swope,
Burnes,	Glass,	Miller,	Tarsney,
Bynum,	Green, R. S.	Mills,	Taulbee,
Caldwell,	Green, W. J.	Mitchell,	Taylor, J. M.
Campbell, J. E.	Hall,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Candler,	Halsell,	Morrison,	Trigg,
Carleton,	Hammond,	Muller,	Tucker,
Clardy,	Harris,	Neal,	Turner,
Cobb,	Hatch,	Neece,	Van Eaton,
Collins,	Hemphill,	Norwood,	Viele,
Compton,	Henderson, J. S.	Oates,	Wallace,
Comstock,	Henley,	Outhwaite,	Ward, J. H.
Cowles,	Herbert,	Peel,	Ward, T. B.
Cox,	Hewitt,	Perry,	Warner, A. J.
Crain,	Holman,	Pidcock,	Wellborn,
Crisp,	Howard,	Randall,	Wheeler,
Croxton,	Hudd,	Reagan,	Willis,
Culberson,	Hutton,	Reid, J. W.	Wilson,
Curtin,	Irion,	Reese,	Winans,
Daniel,	Johnston, T. D.	Richardson,	Wise,
Dargan,	Jones, J. H.	Riggs,	Wolford,
Davidson, A. C.	King,	Robertson,

NOT VOTING—57.

Aiken,	Cole,	Heard,	Ranney,
Anderson, C. M.	Cooper,	Hermann,	Rice,
Arnot,	Dawson,	Hill,	Scott,
Barksdale,	Dorsey,	Hitt,	Shaw,
Bayne,	Eden,	James,	Snyder,
Bennett,	Eldredge,	Johnson, F. A.	Spriggs,
Brady,	Findlay,	Jones, J. T.	Thomas, J. R.
Browne, T. M.	Ford,	Landes,	Throckmorton,
Buchanan,	Funston,	Lawler,	Wade,
Bunnell,	Gibson, Eustace	Lore,	Wakefield,
Burleigh,	Glover,	Murphy,	White, A. C.
Butterworth,	Grosvenor,	O'Ferrall,	Wilkins.
Cabell,	Hale,	O'Neill, J. J.
Catchings,	Hanback,	Peters,
Clements,	Haynes,	Pindar,

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of the members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. BRUMM and others objected.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. HEARD with Mr. WADE.

Mr. EDEN with Mr. PETTIBONE.

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. HERMANN.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. COOPER.

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. FUNSTON.

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York.

Mr. DAWSON with Mr. BUCHANAN.

Mr. HILL with Mr. RICE.
Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. BAYNE.
Mr. COLE with Mr. BRADY.
Mr. CLEMENTS with Mr. BUNNELL.
Mr. CABELL with Mr. CAMPBELL, of Pennsylvania.
Mr. LANDES with Mr. HANBACK.
Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. JONES, of Alabama.
Mr. BURLEIGH would vote "ay;" Mr. JONES "no."
Mr. ELDREDGE with Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania.
Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia.
The following-named members were announced as paired for this day:
Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. PETERS.
Mr. PINDAR with Mr. DORSEY.
Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, with Mr. HAYNES.
Mr. FORNEY with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.
Mr. LAWLER and Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, were announced as paired on this vote.
The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.
Mr. REED, of Maine. I move that the House do now adjourn.
Mr. SPRINGER. Let us pass this first. It will take only a minute. [Laughter.]
The question was taken on the motion to adjourn, and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.
Mr. BRUMM. I ask for a division.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes 113.
Mr. REED, of Maine. I demand tellers.
Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Mr. REED, of Maine, and Mr. MORRISON. Before the count was completed, the hour of 5 o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House adjourned. [Applause on the Republican side.]

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARNES: Petition of John S. E. Crawford, of Jefferson County, Georgia, asking that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BINGHAM: Petition of the owners of the schooner James L. Maloy—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, memorial in the claim of the owners of the schooner Mary G. Farr—to the same committee.

By Mr. FORD: Petition of Nicholas Arch and 133 others, of Elkhart County, Indiana, for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEMPHILL: Papers relating to the claim of George Hill, jr.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. J. S. HENDERSON: Petition of M. D. Howard, of Yadkin County, and of Lucy D. Douthit, widow of E. J. Douthit, of Davie County, North Carolina, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. T. J. HENDERSON: Petition of Emma Sanger, Josiah Little, and others, citizens of Amboy, Ill., praying that a pension be granted to Louis H. Sanger—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KETCHAM: Petition of James Peattie and 105 others, citizens of Matteawan, N. Y., for the passage of an act granting a pension of $8 per month to all surviving soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war who served sixty days—to the same committee.

By Mr. LITTLE: Petition of citizens of Springfield, Ohio, asking that a pension be granted to Mrs. Sarah Baker—to the same committee.

By Mr. McCOMAS: Petition and claim of Devolt Stottlineger, of Washington County, Maryland, for payment of his war claim—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL: Petition of physicians, and other prominent citizens of Philadelphia, asking that an appropriation be made for continuing the National Board of Health—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. PERRY: Papers relating to the claim of Elizabeth Singleton, of Pickens County; and of Ballard D. Dean, of Anderson County, South Carolina—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PIRCE: Petition of William O. Crandall for original invalid pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petition of E. B. Wade for difference of pay received by him, and that of reading clerk, from May 17, to June 13, 1886, inclusive—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. SENEY: Petition of F. M. Kelly and 33 others, ex-soldiers and citizens of Seneca County, Ohio, praying for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TUCKER: Papers relating to the claim of John R. Buchanan, of Augusta County, Virginia—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. VAN EATON: Papers relating to the claim of Henry Badon, of Pike County; of Jacob Peebles, of Maria P. Crizen, of Lyman D. Aldrich, of Adams County; of William L. Nugent, administrator of Mrs. E. A. Dunn, deceased, of Washington County; and of Martha Crane, of Claiborne County, Mississippi—to the same committee.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 23, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings; when, on motion of Mr. BUTLER and by unanimous consent, its further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a recommendation from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury that an appropriation of $96,000 be made for the ventilation of the Treasury building; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 21st instant, a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs explanatory of the delay in answering the resolution of May 10, 1886, relative to licenses of Indian traders, &c.; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. PLATT. Should not the communication be referred to the select committee on that subject?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be referred to the Select Committee on Indian Traders.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the papers accompanying the communication be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presents petitions of a large number of judges and lawyers of different States, praying Congress to provide a Federal code of procedure. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Joseph Schneider, late a private in Company B, One hundred and fourteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, praying that he be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of 54 citizens of New Concord, Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill to tax imitation butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair also presents a petition of 30 prominent citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of laws to enforce section 3328 of the Revised Statutes, taxing imitation and spurious wines. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CALL presented a petition of citizens of Key West, Fla., praying for the extension of the land grant to the Florida Railway and Navigation Company; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of merchants of Washington city, D. C., praying for the passage of Senate bill for the payment of John Pope Hodnett for services rendered as counsel to the workingmen of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FRYE presented resolutions adopted by Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, Kennebec County, Maine, favoring the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of D. G. McCullough and other citizens of Altoona, Pa., praying for the passage of the bill imposing a tax on imitation butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Mrs. S. L. Baldwin, of Chelsea, Mass., praying that she be granted leave to introduce a Chinese domestic; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2053) for the relief of Rachael J. Floyd, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2616) for the relief of M. W. Locke, deceased, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 2727) to authorize the Postmaster-General to lease premises for the use of post-offices of the first, second, and third classes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2551) granting an increase of pension to Thomas B. Shaw; and

A bill (S. 1051) granting a pension to L. A. Clark.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with the accompanying document.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon:

A bill (S. 2660) granting a pension to Annie E. Gardiner; and

A bill (S. 757) granting a pension to Helen Plunkett.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7513) granting a pension to Katharina Nickert, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

INSPECTION OF STEAM-VESSELS.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2719) to amend the laws relating to inspection of steam-vessels, to report it without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the exigency?

Mr. FRYE. It is in answer to a recommendation of the President, and it ought to be passed by both Houses at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That on and after July 1, 1886, the fees of United States marshals and witnesses for services under the steamboat-inspection laws, the compensation of clerks to steamboat inspectors, and all other expenses of steamboat inspectors provided for in section 4461 of the Revised Statutes shall be paid for under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, instead of from funds heretofore collected from the inspection of steam-vessels and the licensing of the officers of such vessels.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FRYE. The vessel-owners of the country are under obligations to the President for returning the bill known as the shipping bill with his approval, and with a recommendation for supplementary legislation. Congress ought certainly to provide for that supplementary legislation, and this bill, which has been reported by the Committee on Commerce, does so.

The bill I refer to repeals certain fees. The law which provides for inspection by steamboat inspectors in certain cases of collision and also in certain cases of neglect of inspectors provides for summoning witnesses and for the payment of marshals for that purpose to be paid out of the funds arising from the fees collected. The fees have been repealed. That leaves no fund for the payment, and this bill simply provides that those expenses shall be paid out of the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

B. S. JAMES.

Mr. COLQUITT. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to report favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 1042) to pay B. S. James for transporting the United States mails.

Mr. BUTLER. I should be very glad if that bill could be considered now. It is a very small matter and has been reported on favorably by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads two or three times. The man has written to me repeatedly in regard to his bill, and I should be very glad to have it passed and sent to the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill at this time. It will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay B. S. James, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum, not exceeding $408.03, as shall, upon reference to the proper accounting officers, be found justly due and payable to him for transportation of the mails over route numbered 5610 in the years 1869 and 1870.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask for its immediate consideration. It is a small matter.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER introduced a bill (S. 2728) granting a pension to George Fields; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 2729) granting a pension to Sophronia Horton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2730) granting a pension to Elizabeth S. De Kraft; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. VAN WYCK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2395) to authorize and empower the Union Pacific Railroad to construct branch roads; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

STATUTES HELD TO BE UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Mr. GEORGE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to report a bill repealing all statutes or parts of statutes which have been held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States.

DIGEST OF STATUTES.

Mr. GEORGE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be instructed to report a bill for a general digest and index of all the statutes of the United States up to and including the statutes passed during the present Congress.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate, as soon as is practicable, whether any permission was given by any officer of his Department to the Kentucky and Indiana Bridge Company or to any other person or corporation in Louisville to make use of any portion of the lands of the Louisville and Portland Canal; also the name of the officer giving such permission, if it has been given, and his authority for his action.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the first, second, third, fourth, seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, insisted upon by the Senate; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. BELMONT, Mr. COX, and Mr. HITT the conferees on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5866) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Knoxville, Tenn., asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, Mr. HOUK, and Mr. LAIRD the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1341) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Natchez, Miss.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7650) to remove the political disabilities of J. G. Flournoy, of Mississippi; and

A bill (H. R. 7364) authorizing the Secretary of War to allow the interment in the national cemetery at New Berne, in the State of North Carolina, of the remains of the late Mrs. Harriet B. Lehman.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Calendar is in order.

Mr. HAWLEY. Senate bill 2578 was under consideration yesterday when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived. Is not that in order now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that the order of business this morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is in order, and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] is recognized.

Mr. BUTLER. It seems to me that the railroad attorneys' bill has come up and prized out of its place the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad bill, which has been under consideration one day, and which I submit ought to be concluded one way or the other. I can not consent to the bill referred to by the Senator from Connecticut coming up morning after morning. I therefore object to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Connecticut is in order. It is for the Senate to determine whether they will take up the bill or not. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. Before the question is put I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] what time he thinks will be occupied in the discussion of the bill.

Mr. BECK. I have only to say that I consented that the motion to reconsider should be made debatable. Then the Committee on Rules changed the rule so as to make such a motion debatable. I spoke half an hour yesterday, and I had the floor when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived. I am content now, so far as I am concerned, to say no more and to stand upon what I said yesterday rather than to cause any delay. Beyond that I can promise nothing.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply desire to state that the bill (S. 980) granting the right of way to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company was under consideration day before yesterday, and I can not understand why the right of way should be given to the bill now called up. The Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad bill is a matter of just as much importance, and of a great deal more importance, it seems to me.

Mr. BECK. If the Senator will allow me to say another word, I will state that the bill which it is proposed to take up is a bill that has passed the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must remind the Senator that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. BECK. A motion to reconsider is not technically a privileged motion, but it is in the nature of a privileged motion at least. Such motions are privileged at the other end of the Capitol, and they ought to be so everywhere.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know that the railroad attorneys' bill has any special privilege over any other bill on the Calendar, and I shall object to its being taken up now as far as I can. I hope the Senate will vote down the motion and take up the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the matter in hand yesterday and finish it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2578.

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe that the question is understood. Let the question be fully stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grants of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate, and the pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I stated to the Senator from South Carolina that I did not propose to occupy much, if any, more time; because in looking over the RECORD this morning I find that I made on yesterday what I consider a fair statement of the reasons which induced me to introduce the bill which we are now asked to reconsider, and the reasons which I think induced the Senate upon a call of the yeas and nays first to refuse to refer it, and again, on a call of the yeas and nays, to pass it by a vote of 37 to 11. I do not desire to occupy any time at this late day of the session by making further remarks upon it, but I desire now to say what I find by looking over my memoranda I had started to say on yesterday when the hour of 2 o'clock cut me off, so that gentlemen who propose to answer me may have their attention called to all the facts on which I rely, that there are other provisions of the Revised Statutes which bear so directly upon the proposition now pending, and upon the great questions in which land-grant railroad companies are involved, that I think I ought to call attention to them as additional reasons why the bill we passed should not be reconsidered, and why the action of the Senate as heretofore taken should stand, and not be sent to an avowedly hostile committee.

Those railroads are required by their charters and acts and resolutions of Congress construing their charters to transport the munitions of war and troops of the United States free of charge, and yet it has been managed so that the construction has been given to the statutes and the charters that the companies are only required to allow us to use their roads so as to permit us to put on our own locomotives and our own cars upon them and do our own hauling, which is, in my opinion, a clear perversion of the spirit and intent of the law. I think that is a clear perversion of the meaning of the statute. When that question comes to be argued, even if the conclusions of the courts are controverted, as they will and ought to be, for they do not bind us, I do not want any attorney of the roads to argue their cases on this floor, concealing the fact that he is their attorney. I propose to make it impossible that any one who has an interest as an attorney with a retainer or a fee from any of these railroad companies shall be part of the legislative body when these great questions are argued and decided. They involve millions of dollars to the tax-payers of the United States, and I insist that members of Congress shall not be employed to appear in the courts of the United States against the people of the United States when these great questions come to be again adjudicated, as I hope they will be, as they involve all the questions relating to the compensation to land-grant roads for the transportation of munitions of war, troops, and everything needed in war that the United States has to transport over them, and which everybody believed we were to have transported free when their charters, subsidies, and land grants were given.

But I must hurry on. Section 5256 of the Revised Statutes provides in regard to the Union Pacific Railway and other railroads as follows:

SEC. 5256. The books, records, correspondence, and all other documents of the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall at all times be open to inspection by the Secretary of the Treasury, or such persons as he may delegate for that purpose. The laws of the United States providing for proceedings in bankruptcy shall not be held to apply to said corporation. No dividend shall hereafter be made by said company but from the actual net earnings thereof; and no new stock shall be issued or mortgages or pledges made on the property or future earnings of the company without leave of Congress, except for the purpose of funding and securing debt now existing, or the renewals thereof. No director or officer of said road shall hereafter be interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract therewith except for his lawful compensation as such officer. Any director or officer who shall pay or declare, or aid in paying or declaring, any dividend, or creating any mortgage or pledge prohibited by this act, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding two years, and by fine not exceeding $5,000.

Section 5259 provides:

SEC. 5259. Whenever, in any grant of land or other subsidies, made or hereafter to be made, to railroads or other corporations, the United States has reserved the right, or shall reserve it, to appoint directors, engineers, commissioners, or other agents to examine the roads, or act in conjunction with other officers of such company or companies, all the costs, charges, and pay of such directors, engineers, commissioners, or agents shall be paid by the respective companies. Such directors, engineers, commissioners, or agents shall be paid for such services the sum of $10 per day, for each and every day actually and necessarily employed, and 10 cents per mile for each and every mile actually and necessarily traveled, in discharging the duties required of them, which per diem and mileage shall be in full compensation for such services. In case any company shall refuse or neglect to make such payments, no more patents for lands or other subsidies shall be issued to such company until these requirements are complied with.

I desire, gentlemen, to consider these provisions in connection with what I said on yesterday in regard to carrying the mails and as to our right to have mails, troops, and munitions of war transported. It will be observed that by these sections we retain the right to provide that they shall not declare dividends to private stockholders from earnings, and shall not issue new stock or make mortgages until the United States is secured. These considerations ought to require every gentelman in both Houses of Congress to be absolutely free from any entanglement or complication with these great roads when such great public questions as these are before Congress for consideration. Common justice requires that public men shall be the representatives of the people when these railroads have millions, and perhaps hundreds of millions, involved in controversies between them and the tax-payers of the United States. Surely, when such great questions and interests are at stake in regard to the subsidies to the Union and Central Pacific roads and in regard to the land grant of the Northern Pacific and other roads, we should provide that members of Congress shall not act as their attorneys, and shall not be employed by them on any pretense so as to make them lean, either in Congress or in the courts, to their side, because these roads are their clients. The relation of attorney and client is as inconsistent, as prejudicial to public morals, as much in contravention of public policy, as it would be for a judge to have the money of one litigant in his pocket as retained counsel when he was deciding a case between him and a penniless opponent.

It has been suggested to me, and I think it was suggested yesterday in the opening argument of the Senator from Connecticut, that there was somebody I was attempting to injure by this measure. I denied it on yesterday and I deny it again. I said, in view of the statutes which have been passed in regard to other and far less important matters, the only object I have in view is to let the country understand and to enable members of both Houses to say that they are not under any pecuniary obligation, as attorneys or otherwise, to any of the land-grant or subsidized railroads whose interests, duties, and obligations are being considered, and to point to the law which makes that relation impossible for any gentleman to occupy.

An amendment was suggested yesterday by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. I knew then and I know now that if a reconsideration is had it is the last we will ever hear of this bill. Gentlemen in their zeal to defeat the measure profess to desire to carry their amendments to a point where they know it is impossible to pass any bill and where they believe it would not be right to have legislation affecting members of Congress. I will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon as illustrating what I mean. It reads as follows:

Or from any bank or other corporation, or officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter or any pecuniary aid from the United States; or from any corporation or company, its officer or agent, engaged in the business of interstate commerce, by land or water, or in the business of any interstate transportation, or in the transportation of United States mails; or from any corporation, company, firm, or person, or officer or agent thereof, engaged in the production, manufacture, or sale in the United States, or in the business of importing into the United States from any foreign country, any article whatsoever upon the importation of which any customs duty is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied—by any act of Congress; or from any corporation, company, or person, its officer or agent, engaged in the manufacture, production, consumption, or sale of butter, oleomargarine, tobacco, whisky, or wines, or any other product or article whatsoever in any manner now taxable or subject to taxation by any act of Congress; or of any company, firm, corporation, or person, its officer or agent, engaged in raising milch-cows, or beef-cattle, or hogs, or in the manufacture or sale of butter, or of the oleo oil from which is manufactured oleomargarine.

If that is not taking a lick at creation I do not know the meaning of the phrase—

I have often read the old fable of the fox whose tail was cut off advising every other fox to have his tail cut off as a useless appendage because his was gone. I think that illustrates the meaning of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Oregon. It would be as pertinent a suggestion in the face of a great proposition such as we are considering now in regard to the attorneys for these land-grant roads and the difficult questions we have to deal with in regard to their rights and obligations as the trifling amendment suggested that no member of Congress shall represent anybody in any case in any court who owns a milch-cow, as that might affect the butter question. It would be as reasonable to provide that because we punish a man who kills a human being with malice aforethought as a murderer and hang him by the neck until he is dead, we must punish in the same way a man who willfully destroys the life of any of God's creatures—for example, one who willfully kills a mouse. There are sentimental gentlemen who might take that view; I have read in poetry—Shakespeare himself said it:

> And the poor beetle, that we tread upon,
> In corporal sufferance finds a pang as great
> As when a giant dies.

I suppose the amendment is meant to illustrate the reductio ad absurdum. If it is right to say that the attorneys of these great roads, with whom we have these great questions, shall not occupy seats in either House of Congress, although they may have had the right heretofore, let us say so. When any other bill seeking to extend the prohibition comes up, it can receive the consideration to which it is entitled; but because everything can not be done at once there should not be an effort to belittle it and break it down, and to propose that men shall not occupy seats in Congress who are attorneys for a man who owns a milch-cow or a hog. That is trifling with the question.

I do not know that I have anything more to say. As to the suggestion that I am pressing this measure unjustly or improperly, without a fair chance for consideration, I can only repeat that the bill is only ten lines long. It contains a single proposition. It lay printed on the tables of Senators for ten days. It was called up after due notice given four days in advance. The yeas and nays were called upon the question of reference. I announced then that I did not care to argue it, it was so plain upon its face, unless some other gentleman did. Others did not; and when the yeas and nays were again called so as to call attention to it most emphatically, a thing that very seldom happens in regard to any bill, thirty-seven Senators voted for it and eleven against it, with full knowledge of the purpose, meaning, and effect of its provision. Every one of the thirty-seven Senators who voted for the bill insulted the Senate, if any insult was given, as much as I did. They did not vote in the dark. They knew what it meant. There can be no misunderstanding about it; and if they feel aggrieved, they are themselves guilty of perpetrating the wrong on themselves and others.

I presented it, as I had a right to do. I laid it upon the table, and announced when it was laid upon the table that no committee could throw any light upon it, and gave notice four days in advance that I would call it up when I did; therefore the pretense of surprise or undue haste is absurd. Crimination and recrimination had been going on. Suggestion after suggestion was made by other Senators, not by me, that men in Congress were interested as attorneys for these roads, until the country began to believe that some of us were. I thought it was fair to relieve every member of Congress from any imputation of that sort by the passage of a law making the relations of attorney and client impossible in regard to land-grant or subsidized railroads.

I desire to say as to gentlemen who have been the attorneys of those roads and who are the attorneys of those roads now, if there are any such, that I make no reflection upon them. They have a right to be railroad attorneys, as the law now stands, but I think the law ought to be changed, and I think they ought to be willing to consent to it themselves, in order that those great questions may be considered by the representatives of the people of the United States in the two Houses of Congress on the one side, with lawyers in no way connected with the Government on the other, and thus avoid all scandal as to the want of fairness and impartiality in the consideration of questions in which land-grant and subsidized railroads are interested, especially as millions of dollars and millions of acres of public land are involved in the controversy.

Mr. TELLER obtained the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky one question, simply, now, before the Senator from Colorado proceeds?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The question is this: Is there not the same propriety, I will ask the Senator from Kentucky, in prohibiting a member of Congress from being retained by a corporation or company engaged in the business of interstate commerce in this country that there would be in prohibiting a member of Congress from being employed by a land-grant railroad company to argue a case in one of the courts of the country? If there is not the same propriety I should like to have the Senator from Kentucky point out the difference, inasmuch as in both cases the question of legislation comes before Congress.

Mr. BECK. I do not think there is anything like the same importance in the one case as in the other. Roads are engaged in interstate commerce which are under no obligation to transport our troops or munitions of war. They are under no obligations to carry our mails upon such terms as Congress may indicate. They are under no obligations not to make dividends or issue new stock until their debts to us are paid or secured. All these questions bear upon land-grant roads that do not bear upon the other roads at all.

If it is right to pass any law preventing a great scandal or prohibiting a great evil, why not pass it? If the Senator from Oregon thinks we ought to go further he can introduce a bill for that purpose. I do not know whether he is an attorney of the Northern Pacific road or not; I have been informed that he is or has been. He has a right to be. They seek the best lawyers in the country, and they have a right to them; but I think it is due to him and due to his colleagues, if he is, that he should not be so any longer.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The object of the legislation I suppose is to prohibit members of Congress from being employed as attorneys in the courts in matters which may come before Congress for discussion and legislation.

Mr. BECK. My object is to prevent members of Congress from acting as attorneys for these land-grant roads, or to have the money of those roads in their pockets while they are transacting any public business relating to those roads in Congress, because I know that the member who is the attorney of a road is not as free to act against his client as he would be if he had no such clients.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Does not the Senator from Kentucky know that the railroad corporations engaged in interstate commerce have been here at this session protesting against the passage of the interstate-commerce bill?

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further?

Mr. TELLER. I yield for a moment longer.

Mr. BECK. I have only this to say in answer to that: If they have, it is the right of the Senator to introduce another bill, which will not be interfered with by me. If he desires in good faith to pass this bill, why does he desire to embarrass it with other and doubtful questions, by providing that a man shall not appear as attorney for anybody who owns a milch-cow? He knows whether he is the attorney of any land-grant road or not. Will he be kind enough to tell us?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not wish to embarrass the legislation——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must remind Senators that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has the floor. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. TELLER. I yield.

Mr. BECK. The Senator knows whether he is an attorney for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am attorney for no railroad company.

Mr. BECK. I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I desire the Senator from Kentucky to understand that I have never in my life, while I have been in the Senate, been employed by any railroad company to argue any case in court or out of court or to represent them in any manner. Further than that, I am not now nor have I been for over one year the attorney of any corporation or railroad company whatever. I am representing no railroad interest and no corporation interest whatever. I think that this kind of legislation is unadvisable, but I think at the same time if you propose to pass a bill on the implication that every member of Congress who is a lawyer is dishonest and the purpose of which is to make him honest, then your bill should be general, and should cover the whole case. That is what I think.

Mr. BECK. One word more. I only asked the question of the Senator to give him a chance to make the statement he has made, because it had been so said. I did not regard it as a reflection upon him, because, as I stated, the railroad companies have the right to retain the best lawyers they can select and lawyers have a right to accept their fees.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I am one of the eleven Senators who voted against this bill, and I want to say to the Senator from Kentucky, and to every other Senator on this floor, and to everybody, that I owe no apology to anybody for a vote in the Senate. I have never given a vote in the Senate that I was not willing to defend at home and abroad. I have never, myself, pandered to public clamor and been compelled to cast my vote for fear somebody would impugn my motives. I have had the courage to vote as I saw fit, and I do not now make any apology for voting against this bill.

I wish to say for the benefit of the Senator from Kentucky, who seems to be exceedingly disturbed about railroad and other corporate attorneys in this body, that I am not the attorney of any land-grant railroad company nor of any other railroad company. I want to say to the Senator also that I have not been for many years the attorney of any railroad company, and so far as I am concerned I could readily submit to the passage of the bill, including the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, without practically interfering with my legal practice.

The honorable Senator says that there has been crimination and recrimination. I do not know what may have occurred at the time that he mentioned, because I was not at that time a member of this body. I do not remember, though, in the seven years that I have served in this body to have heard any recrimination of this character, save from the Senator from Kentucky. I came into the Chamber on the day that this bill was passed by the Senate as the vote was being taken on the motion to refer it to a committee of this body. I did not even know that there was such a bill pending. I did not know the character of the bill. I knew it was a decent and orderly proceeding, that I had never seen varied from in the Senate, save it was in the case of a bill coming from the House as I recollect, to send all bills to the appropriate committees. Therefore, when I was told that the pending motion was for the reference of the bill to a committee, I voted for that reference; and when, within three minutes afterward, there came the question whether the bill should pass or not, I had had no opportunity to read it, I had had no opportunity to acquaint myself with the facts in regard to it, and I voted against the bill.

If I had acquainted myself with the facts, if I had had time for deliberation, thought, and study, with a full knowledge that but eleven men were to vote against this bill, I should have voted against it. I should have taken the chances of being placarded by demagogues in this country as anxious to serve railroad corporations before I would vote for a bill disgraceful to the American Senate and an outrage upon the most honorable profession in this country.

This bill may contain germs that are correct and proper. It may contain a correct principle. It contains a principle by which I am governed, not to engage as the attorney of anybody or of any interest that will come to this body for legislation in any shape or manner; and therefore I repeat that I am willing, if we are going into this, to go to the full extent laid down by the amendment of the Senator from Oregon. I am willing that when the tobacco interest comes here nobody shall be interested in putting upon it a tax or taking it off; I am willing when the manufacturing interests are here that nobody shall be interested in putting a tax on or taking it off if we are to go into this question at all.

Is it to be presumed that a lawyer, simply because he may have taken a fee from a corporation some time to attend to some business for it, has sold himself and can not come into the American Senate and under the obligations of his oath discharge his duty as an honorable and upright man? I believe that the legal profession as a rule can do that, and I believe that there are but few men who ever attain to the position of a member of the Senate who have not got the moral stamina to do those things.

Mr. President, this bill does not simply require that we shall refrain from doing business for a land-grant railroad company, but it goes further. It says you shall not take as a lawyer a fee from a railroad officer or railroad agent. It may be in a business entirely distinct and unconnected with legislation, but if he sustains the relation of an agent or an officer to a railroad company a Senator of the United States would have to say, "I am prohibited by law." Can the Senator from Kentucky tell me any reason why he does not extend it to the stockholders of the companies as well as to the officers and agents? Is there any end to where this thing will go if you commence it? Can he give any answer why it should not include the men who manufacture cotton cloth and woolen goods? Can he give me any reason why I should not refrain from taking a fee from the man who raises sheep and sells wool, because the wool question may come before the American Senate?

It is said that the law does not take notice of trifles, and it is beneath the dignity of the American Senate to engage in that kind of legislation. I say that, because if you commence here there is no place to stop, and you must practically declare that every man who sits upon this floor must have no business whatever in the country. I have no doubt that that would be a popular thing in this country with a certain class of men. There is a complaint now everywhere in this country that this body is filled with millionaires, with men who get their seats upon this floor not because they are entitled to them by their intelligence or by their virtue, but because they get here by devious methods. Those who make such charges are the class of men who would like to preclude an American Senator from taking any other business or doing any other business except in connection with his legislative duties.

I think that this bill ought in all order and decency to have gone to a committee, and I think it is an impugnment of the committees of this body to say that the bill would not have been reported either favorably or adversely; and the opportunity would have been given for this Senate to have voted intelligently and not hastily upon the subject. I do not complain so much of the bill as I complain of the method of procedure in connection therewith—the attempt to make it appear that this floor is occupied by the attorneys of corporations, by attorneys in their interest, who are legislating not for the country, but legislating with reference to the interests for which they have been paid.

I said that I knew when I voted just what would be said. I knew when I voted—I am at the foot of the list practically—that the bill had been passed. I knew the criticisms that would be made, and I knew that a bill of this kind invited criticism, if it was not introduced in the Senate for that purpose.

In my legislative career, which is not as long as that of the Senator from Kentucky nor as long as that of some other men here, I believe I can point to as honest votes as anybody else. I repeat that I am under no obligation to and have no connection or interest of any kind with any corporation that appears here except what every American citizen must have. I am neither connected with banks nor with corporations nor with railroads, land grant or otherwise. I have kept myself as far as possible independent and away from all such influences, and I expect to. But because I am thus independent, I am not ready to rush in and say that there are other members of this body who are not able or are not willing to pursue the course that I think every honorable Senator should, and therefore it is necessary to pass a law of this character.

Mr. President, I do not suppose there is an attorney for one of these railroads upon this floor, but if there is he has voted for the bill. If there is a man who would accept from a railroad company money and come here and vote for their interest he is the first man who rallied to the support of the bill upon the theory that the man who steals a pocket-book upon the streets is the first fellow to join in the run and shout "Stop thief!"

I am prepared to vote for any proper restriction upon the legislative department of the Government, that its members may not only be honest but that they may appear honest, that the people may have confidence in the integrity and in the virtue of their Legislature, because I understand myself that that is essential to the preservation of free government, and that it is not only necessary that the men who legislate should be honest, but that the people should believe them to be honest. But I am not ready to join in a cry to do that which is unseemly and hasty, as if there was a pressing necessity to put shackles upon members of this body and thus indorse the demagogical cry that has gone out that this is a body of corporate attorneys, that it is a body of millionaires who have no interest and no sympathy and no connection with the great mass of the American people.

I have voted against the bill. I will so vote again, at least until it has gone to a committee and come to this body in an orderly and decent manner; and then, if it commends itself to my judgment, as it might, I would vote for it.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I have no question of the disinterested zeal for the public service which induced the Senator from Kentucky to introduce this bill; but I regard it as a bill very hurtful to the interests of this country and the character of this body. The Constitution of the United States under which this body is organized contains these provisions:

ARTICLE I.

SEC. 3. * * * No person shall be a Senator, who shall not have attained to the age of thirty years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 5. Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.

* * * * * * *

Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

SEC. 6. * * * They shall in all cases except treason, felony and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other place.

If they may not be questioned in any other place for their speech and debate, much more shall they not by the letter and intendment of this provision be questioned in any other place for their votes. To make them thus responsible in other places for their votes would be to subject them to the influence of such other place and deprive them of their independence as Senators and Representatives. How does it agree with the force and effect of these provisions that they shall give their votes under penalty of fine and imprisonment at the will and discretion of "another place," or other persons?

The functions imposed upon the members of this body are perhaps the most important that have ever been filled by any public body or any character of persons in the past history of the world. To the legislative branch of this Government is confided a supervision over the executive and judicial departments of the Government. The President of the United States and all his executive officers, the judges of the Supreme Court, and the entire judiciary of the United States are amenable and responsible to the members of the National Legislature. The safety of republican government and free institutions, and with them the happiness of mankind, is confided to the Senators and the Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

In this scheme of government therefore it was important that the members of this body and the other branch of the national Congress should be protected, except in so far as they were subject as citizens to the great body of the laws, from arrest and punishment in the performance of their duties against the judicial department of the Government. They were exempted by the express provision of the Constitution, and it was not fit nor proper that the body alone to whom was confided the suspension and removal of the Executive of the United States and the judges of the Supreme Court should be amenable for offenses arising in the discharge of their legislative duties, and over which they had themselves control, to arrest and punishment and disgrace by the judges or a single judge—that members of this body to whom he was amenable and responsible should for every trivial offense be held subject to his power.

If there is danger, as doubtless there will be in the history of this Government, as there was supposed to be by those who formed the Constitution, of some attempt to subvert the liberties of the people, it will come from the judicial and executive departments of the Government and a combination between them. It may come from a system of laws which will subject the members of this body entirely to the power and control of the judicial department of the Government for the manner in which they perform their public official duties here. And the bill of the Senator from Kentucky in effect declares, contrary to the provisions of the Constitution, which say that we shall not be responsible for our legislative action to any one except ourselves and the people, that we shall be responsible for the manner in which we perform our Senatorial and Congressional duties, not to this body, not to each House of Congress, not to the people, but under criminal laws to a single judge of the United States courts, and in that respect it is an entire subversion of our whole scheme of government.

That is the first objection I have to the bill of the Senator from Kentucky. It proposes that Senators shall be indicted, tried, and punished. For what? For a crime? For something that is wrong in itself? A Senator is to be indicted, tried upon evidence the validity of which is decided by one man alone, for accepting a retainer from a railroad company that may have no business before the Senate of the United States, and in respect to a matter which the public functions here exercised can never concern, because he is forbidden from being retained for any purpose or any interest because perchance there may be some subject in which that corporation may be interested here!

The limitation of the offense to the land-grant railroads is of no force or effect, because every other railroad corporation has as much interest in the legislation of Congress as a land-grant railroad. The fact that a railroad has received a land grant, which may have been exhausted and passed to the general assets of the company, does not make it specially amenable to the legislation of Congress.

The fact that the provision cited by the Senator from Kentucky in regard to the transportation of the mails is on the statute-book does not give it more than the interest every other railroad company has in having an adequate compensation for the transportation of the mails. The interest is the same, though the circumstances differ somewhat. Therefore there is no real difference between one railroad corporation and another in the interest which they may have by possibility before the Congress of the United States; but the bill of the Senator from Kentucky assumes that railroads which have received land grants are especially dangerous to the virtue of Senators, and the great remedy which he proposes to restrain corporate power and aggression is to punish a member of Congress under a penal statute for being retained by them as lawyers in matters with which Congress has no concern.

The bill of the Senator from Kentucky declares that this body can not be trusted to prescribe and enforce rules for the members, but that a single judge of the United States courts has more virtue than a majority of the Senate of the United States chosen by States to represent the great interests of the States in this body. The affirmation of the bill is in itself an imputation on the whole Senate, and is not justified either by the history of this body or by reason.

It does not matter that other statutes have been passed conveying the like imputation. I should not have voted for them; I should vote for their repeal to-day, not because I would justify or fail to condemn any Senator who would receive a fee to advocate a proposition before any judicial tribunal upon which he was to vote as a Senator, but because the Constitution of the United States has made that Senator amenable alone to his fellow-Senators and to this body and to his State for the performance of his duties, and that to take that jurisdiction and control away and vest it in a single judge would be, if it were competent for Congress to do so, a subversion of the whole theory and principle of our Government.

If the selection by States of Senators is not a failure, why will not a rule of the Senate and the House forbidding a member of Congress from being retained by any corporation having interests to be legislated upon be equally as efficient in obtaining this result as a criminal trial in "some other place," as "being questioned in some other place," and punished in a penitentiary for it?

But what does the Constitution mean when it says that—

> Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member?

It refers to the conduct of members of Congress in their respective Houses, to the manner in which they shall discharge their functions, and it is as to the manner in which we shall discharge our functions here. It is with our Senatorial conduct here that the bill of the Senator from Kentucky deals. We shall not be amenable under the bill to the judgment of this House, but we shall be amenable in a criminal prosecution to a judge of the United States courts. That is not the great tribunal appointed by the Constitution. It is not true in theory, it is untrue to say, or this Government is a falsehood, that a single judge appointed by the executive power has more virtue than the majority of this body or two-thirds of this body, and that a Senator may with impunity violate the rules of right and integrity and be the retained attorney of a corporation in disobedience of a rule of the Senate with impunity, while before a United States judge he would be punished for it.

Why, Mr. President, if this question of purchase of Senators is to be conceded, why is it not reasonable to suppose that you could buy a dozen United States judges before you could purchase two-thirds of the Senate of the United States? The security of republican government, the protection of the rights of the people, is vested in this body, with its superintendence, with its power of impeachment over the executive and the judicial departments of the Government, the Supreme Court itself being amenable to this body. We are in the habit of belittling the Senate of the United States and its functions, but the Constitution does not belittle it. We are in the habit of depreciating the character of Senators, but the great public duties and high trusts for the country and for the world which are imposed upon it do not justify this, but properly appreciated confers honor and dignity upon the office and upon those who worthily perform these great duties.

Again, Mr. President, what necessity is there for the passage of this bill? It has been well illustrated by the vote recently taken in this body upon the forfeiture of the land grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. Here was a vote by which an empire was given to a railroad corporation composed of a few individuals. No paid attorney of any railroad company can ever vote for so vast a subsidy or for a greater interest than that which was given by that vote of the Senate or proposed to be given to that railroad corporation. Is there any suspicion that the Senators who voted for that voted under the imputation of interest or for any other reason than an honest conviction that public interests and public right required such a vote? The honorable Senator from Kentucky was among the number of those who voted for this vast subsidy and appropriation of the public domain to enrich a corporation. He did it as other Senators did it, because they conceived that the laws and the public faith and the public policy required that vote to be given.

The great power of corporations and their influence over this body and the other does not depend upon retained attorneys here. It depends upon and is caused by their hold upon the public, the business sentiment of the country—upon the votes of the people. It is caused by avenues of influence which constitute a public opinion; but when that public opinion shall be corrected and turned otherwise it may perhaps be too unfriendly to corporations. The votes in this body are not influenced, nor is there any reason for such a presumption, by the presence of any retained attorneys here.

I will go to whatever extent may be necessary to protect the people against the real evils of corporate power, namely: Land monopoly, grants of public land—with the condition that the people who live and work them shall be compelled to pay to a few persons twice the cost of a railroad which shall belong to those who have not paid for it; issues of fraudulent and watered stock, with the power to tax the people to pay for it; but I will not take part in this kind of legislation which can do no good in this direction, while it violates the Constitution, and, in my opinion, casts an imputation on the two Houses of Congress.

The whole theory is wrong. There are certainly great influences of capital which find their representation and their influence in the two bodies of Congress; but the protection of property is one of the theories of our Government. There are, perhaps, undue influences—not corrupt influences, but undue influences—exerted by virtue of the hold upon public opinion, the influences on the voters of the country which the great consolidated corporate and moneyed interests of the country may obtain or have obtained; but they are not by the individual corruption of members of this body or the other House, and if they were, the tribunal to which the member is amenable is this body, and to no other should it be intrusted. And if we are as a body so corrupt that we are unwilling to punish it by expulsion, then we may be assured that the influences which have been powerful enough to overcome our virtue, responsible as we are to the people, will also overcome a judge who is responsible only to us.

But, Mr. President, there is not only no necessity for this legislation, but it would be entirely ineffective. If there is any member of Congress that can be bought by a railroad corporation—and that is the theory of this bill—if there is any member of Congress who can be induced by a retainer or by a direct payment of money to come into this body and represent the interests of the corporation that retains him, you can not prevent it by saying that this special form of purchase shall be forbidden. There are a thousand ways by which men can be corrupted without retaining them as lawyers, and without the payment of money to them.

The judge who bends to public clamor and permits a man to be improperly imprisoned or executed is as corrupt as the judge who receives the money in his hand to do it. The public servant in the Senate or House who from any motive votes against the interests and will of the people is as corrupt as he who receives the money to do it. You can not, therefore, meet corruption, if that be the object, by intrusting it not to this body to punish it but to a single judge of a United States court.

What is to prevent the great corporations from buying the judge and the jurors? Nothing but their integrity, their personal integrity; and shall we say that, in the Senate of the United States, under a form of government giving to a sovereign State and her people the selection of the citizen in whom they have most confidence, our scheme of government has so utterly failed that a man selected by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate is guaranteed to be a more upright and honorable and incorruptible man than this Senator, than this two-thirds of the Senate chosen by these great States themselves—the guardians of the people and all their rights?

Well, if that be so, and the only security for the due performance of Senatorial and Congressional duties is the judgment of a judge, with the penitentiary in view, our institutions are a failure. I do not accept such a theory. I believe that this scheme of government is the greatest the world has ever seen. I believe the hopes of the human family are dependent upon its success. I believe that in protecting the members of Congress from the judicial power except in the three cases mentioned in the Constitution while in the performance of their duties, in making them amenable to the sentiment of the body to which they belong with the power of expulsion by a two-thirds vote of the body, it was intended to guarantee to the people of the United States and to future generations that this body should be secure from intimidation, from arbitrary arrest, from unjust punishment while acting in the performance of its duty, by any other department of this Government; and I believe it is an essential feature of the Constitution and of our institutions.

Therefore, Mr. President, I insist that in the first place there is no necessity for this legislation. I maintain that if there be corporate influence and interests in this body and in the other House, it does not result from the members of this body being retained as attorneys for corporations. I contend furthermore that if such an evil did exist, to this body alone and to its sentiment of justice and right must be referred the correction of the evil.

And for all these reasons I conceive this bill to be an erroneous one in theory; and conceding to the Senator from Kentucky the utmost zeal for the public service and acknowledging the ability with which he enforces whatever idea he may propose, I shall vote against this bill, because I do not believe that it is one that will advance even the purposes he has in view; and if I were to give a conclusive reason I would say that he has himself cited some of the statutes of the United States—if that line of action was advisable—which already cover every offense that ought to be covered, which punish the corrupt use of power, which render a man indictable if he receives a consideration directly or indirectly for his vote; and why do you wish to say then, when you have already legislation on that subject, that a man who should happen to be retained in regard to some matter which has no connection with his Congressional duties, some interest of a railroad company which can never be affected by his action here, because that railroad may have some interest here, that he shall not accept such a retainer, and if he does, so threatening is the evil that he shall be subjected to indictment upon the information of anybody whose interest may be injured by his vote?

Why, Mr. President, there was in the State which I have the honor in part to represent at one time a great struggle for the control of the Legislature in the reconstruction days. There was a majority of Democrats elected at one time. How do you suppose they avoided the force and effect of that majority? By having a United States judge arrest Democratic members of that body and having them carried before him, and held in confinement until the Legislature was organized. You may say that this can never occur under the Government of the United States. But why? Who shall guarantee it? Does this Constitution affirm that there will never be any danger of usurpation? Are its provisions based on the theory that no one will ever seek to overthrow this Government? Are its provisions worthless?

Is it declared for nothing that members of the Senate and the House shall be exempt from arrest except in the three special cases mentioned—while coming here, or remaining here, or engaged in the performance of their duty? Surely it was not to the end that they should be arrested and imprisoned under this law of the Senator from Kentucky, which does not relate to these excepted cases. It is an evidence that it was not intended to commit to the courts of the country the power to hold Senators and Members of Congress amenable for the manner in which they perform their Senatorial or Representative duties. Upon that subject I affirm the Constitution is explicit and undeniable, and the bill of the Senator from Kentucky relates alone to the manner in which these duties shall be performed here. It says that a Senator or a Member of Congress shall be subject to imprisonment and fine if he accepts a retainer from any railroad company.

Mr. President, if it be proper to do this in this way, it is proper for the Senate to do it by rule.

I have nothing further to say on the subject except that I was never the attorney of a railroad company in my life. I should regard it as a compliment to have been, as they select the best legal talent they can find, and I should probably have been glad to have accepted such retainer. It has so happened that I have been retained against corporations in my own practice. I, therefore, have no interest in this matter, and I express my own candid belief and opinion when I say that this course of legislation is not only hurtful to the reputation of this body before the people, but that it is absolutely destructive of our theory of government and of the independence which by the Constitution is guaranteed to the Senate.

If Senators wish to defend the people against corporate power let them attack their watered stock; their power of taxing the people to pay for it. Let them relieve the hard-worked settlers on the public lands from the necessity of paying twice the cost of a railroad to enrich a few men who have paid nothing, and then being subjected to an arbitrary power of taxation for travel on a railroad built with their own money and labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Before the vote is taken I desire to say a word.

I was not aware as one member of the Senate until about the time of the commencement of the roll-call on the day the bill was called up that any bill of this character was to come before the Senate. I glanced over the bill, as it contains but eleven lines, and I saw, I thought at a glance, sufficient in it to justify me in voting against it; especially as it had not been referred to a committee, and had never been considered by any committee of this body. I am, therefore, one of the eleven Senators who voted against the bill.

I believe the bill is wholly unconstitutional, to start with. I believe that if it was entirely within the power of Congress, it is a measure that never ought to be passed, and that, as stated by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] who has just taken his seat, there is no necessity for its passage. If any member of the Senate is to be influenced in his representative capacity in any action he may take or vote he may cast here by virtue of any retainer that he might be under from any railroad company to argue a case in court, then my impression is that same man can be bribed outright and direct.

But, Mr. President, I want to read this bill, as it is very short, and see what there is of it. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney at law, or payment for services of any kind, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States; and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and imprisoned not more than one year, in the discretion of the court.

It will be observed that this bill not only prohibits, under severe penalties, the employment of any member of Congress by any railroad company which has obtained a land grant or received any pecuniary aid from the United States, but it prohibits, under severe penalties, the employment of any member of Congress who happens to be a lawyer, whether Congress is in session or out of session, by any officer or agent of any railroad company which obtained its charter or any grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States, and inhibits, under severe penalties, any such member of Congress from receiving any payment from any such officer or agent for any services of any kind rendered as attorney at law.

Now, Mr. President, when Congress adjourns I, for one, return to my home for the purpose of making a few dollars honestly, if I can, in the line of my profession. A conductor of a railroad company—and there are two or three land-grant railroad companies in Oregon—or any other agent or officer of a railroad company which happens to have a land grant, comes into my office and says to me, "Here is a note of $5,000 owing to me from John Doe. I have been trying to collect it for some time; he has been putting me off from time to time, and I have come to the conclusion to sue him, and I want you to bring suit upon this note." If this bill becomes a law, what must be my reply? "Why, my dear sir, I am prohibited by law from taking this retainer. I am prohibited by a severe penal statute from becoming your attorney to collect this note."

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me? Does he understand this bill to mean, and does the Senator from Kentucky, if I may bring him into the controversy, understand it to mean that a member of Congress can not take a private employment from any person who happens to be an officer of a railroad company?

Mr. BECK. Oh, Mr. President, may I be allowed to say a word? It is plain that the meaning of the proposed statute is that he shall not take employment from the corporation or from an agent of the corporation as such. Being a penal statute, it will be construed strictly, and men might plead that they were not employed by the corporation, but employed by an agent of it.

The case given by the Senator from Oregon of the conductor of a railroad who wished to employ him in his private affairs does not require any answer. That conductor might be suing that railroad company for killing his cow or breaking his leg by reason of its negligence, or he might be suing it in any other capacity. That illustration shows to what desperate straits men are driven when they bring up such cases as the Senator from Colorado gave us a while ago, followed now by the Senator from Oregon. If any suggestion of that sort can by any possibility be conceived, it requires a first-class brain to conjecture it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not think the construction placed upon the bill by the Senator from Kentucky is the correct one. I have no kind of idea that it is a correct one. What does it say?

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress—

To do what? First—to accept employment as attorney at law—

That is one thing—

or payment for services of any kind—

Now, from whom?

from any railroad company—

That is one thing—

or any officer or agent thereof.

Mr. BECK. Acting for them.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It does not say so; and that very fact shows the impropriety of rushing a bill through here at a hop, skip, and jump speed, without having it considered by a proper committee. It must be evident to every member of the Senate that, to say the very least, there is a question in regard to the proper construction of this bill. I am quite clear in my own mind that the construction a court would give to this bill would be to exclude the Senator or Representative who was an attorney at law from accepting a retainer from any officer or agent of any land-grant railroad company, or from receiving payment from any such officer or agent for services of any kind, just as the bill states.

But suppose that is not the construction. Suppose I go home again to my office when Congress shall have adjourned and it so happens that some scoundrel in the State of Oregon puts a rail on the track and runs a passenger train off and one hundred people are killed and a great tragedy is enacted. The president of the railroad company, a citizen of my town, an honorable, respected man whom I have known perhaps for twenty-five years, comes to my office and says: "Mr. MITCHELL, this is a great outrage. Here is a man who has committed a great crime by which a hundred people have lost their lives. We as a company desire to prosecute this man to the bitter end in the courts. We desire your aid in connection with the prosecuting attorney to prosecute an indictment against this man for murder." What must I say to him if this bill becomes a law? The Senator from Kentucky will not deny, if this bill becomes a law, that my answer would necessarily have to be that I am prohibited by a penal statute from taking the retainer. I can not be employed by that land-grant railroad company to prosecute that man for murder.

Now it may be that I ought not to be permitted to do it. It is possible that the Senator from Kentucky is quite right in prescribing a rule that will prohibit me and every other member of the profession to which I belong from taking a retainer of that kind upon the theory and the implication that if I do my representative action here as a Senator is to be influenced by that retainer. But that is this bill all the same, and the Senator from Kentucky will not deny it.

I might go on and cite instance after instance to show the hardship, the injustice, the impropriety, of this bill when considered in all its various aspects.

Mr. President, I did not hear the Senator from Kentucky in the first instance a while ago, when he was addressing the Senate, when he made some allusion to my being the attorney of some company, nor do I now know just exactly what he did say.

Mr. BECK. I can tell the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I should like to hear.

Mr. BECK. The statement was that it had been said that the Senator from Oregon was the attorney for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. When?

Mr. BECK. Whether that was true or not I do not know, and it was no reflection upon him if it was true, because the railroad companies generally select the ablest attorneys; but I wish to make it impossible that gentlemen on this floor should be charging each other with having connection with any of these railroad companies as attorneys, and therefore I desired the passage of the bill. That is the substance of the statement.

I made no reflection on the Senator directly or indirectly, nor did I say I knew it to be true. I was glad to hear the Senator from Oregon so far confess the impropriety of being attorney for such a railroad company as to announce that he had dissolved all connection with it as its attorney a year ago, when he became a Senator of the United States. I think he confessed all that my bill asked by resigning his place as their attorney to take his place here.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am not in the confessional. I am not making confessions. It is not necessary that I should, and we may as well get the facts just as they are.

The Senator from Kentucky says it had been said that the Senator from Oregon was the attorney of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. Now, when did anybody say I was the attorney of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company—that is, when was it I was such attorney, now or heretofore? I want to get at the facts.

Mr. BECK. I neither know nor care. He confesses himself that he was their attorney until a year ago, and feeling the impropriety of being their attorney now he resigned because of the inconsistency of the two positions; and I honor him for doing it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator is yet quite wrong. The Senator from Oregon did not resign the attorneyship of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company when he was elected Senator because of any impropriety or for any other reason. Of course there would have been an impropriety. The Senator from Oregon dissolved his connection with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company eight months before he was elected Senator and was quietly practicing his profession in the State of Oregon for six months before he was elected Senator, and was engaged then and is now in the prosecution of several important cases against railroad companies, against land-grant railroad companies, and has no relations whatever as attorney or counsel with any land-grant railroad company.

Mr. BECK. Then the Senator from Oregon will not be deprived of any practice in the supposed case that he might go back and be asked to prosecute somebody by the railroad company and he could not take their fees. He will get a fee on the other side and will not need theirs.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am not talking about fees. I am pointing out the absurdity and the injustice of this bill; and the injustice and the absurdity of it, when carefully looked into, must be apparent to every Senator, and I think is even apparent now to the Senator from Kentucky notwithstanding all his zeal in reference to this matter.

Now, Mr. President, it has been said; the Senator says that I have been retained by a railroad company; and so a great many other things have been said. I remember the time when it was said in the newspapers throughout this country that certain members of Congress were very zealous in regard to certain whisky matters.

Mr. BECK. That was just simply a lie; that is all.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I have no doubt about it; but the Senator from Kentucky, in referring to an amendment that I suggested I would probably introduce in case there was a reconsideration of this bill, suggested that it reminded him of the fox that had lost his tail and therefore desired that every other fox should lose his tail. I might reply by saying that the implication of this bill as presented by the Senator from Kentucky is that while the whisky-ring fox and the manufacturing-ring fox and the oleomargarine and tobacco ring foxes are permitted to wear their tails the Senator from Kentucky would cut off the tail of the land-grant railroad fox alone.

Now, Mr. President, coming back again—because I have been led off by the suggestions of the Senator from Kentucky—I insist, in the first place, that the fair construction of this bill will prevent the retainer by any officer or agent of any land-grant railroad company of any attorney who is a member of Congress for the performance of any service whatever as any attorney at law; and, in the second place, it will prevent members of Congress at their homes, in their county courts, in their probate courts, in their district courts, as well perhaps as in the United States courts, from taking retainers in the ordinary practice of their profession in regard to matters that can have no possible connection whatever with legislation in Congress; and the very fact that this bill implies that such members of Congress would by such retainers be influenced or in any respect biased in legislative action here is simply preposterous, not to say outrageous.

In conclusion, I say that if the purpose of this bill is right, if it is right that there should be legislation prohibiting members of Congress who are lawyers from being retained in any capacity whatever in the courts by land-grant railroads or their officers or agents, then there is just as much reason for prohibiting their retainer by railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce, whether land-grant roads or otherwise; just as much reason for prohibiting their retainer by companies of any character that have received their charters from the Congress of the United States; just as much propriety in depriving them of receiving retainers from importers of foreign merchandise into this country, and from those engaged in manufacturing articles in this country upon the foreign products of which duties are laid. Therefore I say if we are to have legislation at all on this subject make it general and include the whole.

Therefore I insist that this motion to reconsider ought to prevail, and that this bill, with any amendments that any member of the Senate may see proper to submit, should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary or some other proper committee of the Senate, to be considered as every other bill is considered, and then when it shall come back from the committee after a proper consideration we can discuss it and act upon it intelligently.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to place on the record to-day what took place on Thursday, June 10, 1886, in regard to this bill to show that I did not call it up in any clandestine way, because the remark I made was, "I gave notice on Monday that after the morning business to-day I should ask the Senate to take a vote upon Senate bill 2578. I move to take it up for that purpose." Then a motion was made to refer the bill, and it was voted down. I then made a statement that I did not desire to argue it unless somebody else did; and thereupon the yeas and nays were taken upon it. I will hand it to the Reporter to be inserted as a part of my remarks. That is all I have to say. I present the whole record of the action on this bill that day.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

Mr. BECK. I gave notice on Monday that after the close of the morning business to-day I should ask the Senate to take a vote upon Senate bill 2578. I move to take it up for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MAHONE. I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to take up the agricultural appropriation bill at or before 2 o'clock.

Mr. BECK. The bill I have called up will take but a moment, I hope. I have not a word to say about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

"Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney at law, or payment for services of any kind, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States; and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and imprisonment not more than one year, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has that bill ever been referred?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been referred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BECK. I think it had better be voted down than go there. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I withdraw that motion and move to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. A reference to any committee amounts to a defeat of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then we will take it on the motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BECK called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Allison,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Blair,	Evarts,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Frye,	Miller,	Teller.
Chace,	Hale,	Mitchell of Oreg.,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Morrill,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Sawyer,

NAYS—24.

Beck,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Riddleberger,
Berry	Colquitt,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	Eustis,	Maxey,	Vest,
Butler,	George,	Payne,	Whitthorne,
Call,	Harris,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.

ABSENT—31.

Aldrich,	Gorman,	Logan,	Sabin,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Stanford,
Camden,	Hearst,	Morgan,	Vance,
Conger,	Ingalls,	Palmer,	Van Wyck,
Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Pike,	Voorhees,
Fair,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,	Walthall.
Gibson,	Kenna,	Plumb,

So the motion to refer was not agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HALE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. MAXEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] on political questions, but as I presume he would vote for this bill, if here, I vote "yea."

Mr. MILLER (when his name was called). I have just been asked to pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. I am quite sure my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON], if he were present, would vote "yea" on this question. So if the Senator from New York desires to vote, he can cast his vote.

Mr. MILLER. Then I vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA. I announce again that I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BECK. My colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN] is absent paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who is also absent, both under the orders of the Senate. My colleague, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is absent from the city and is sick. If he were present, my impression is that he would vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA. On that statement I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Allison,	Cullom,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Beck,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Blair,	Frye,	Mahone,	Vest,
Brown,	George,	Maxey,	Whitthorne,
Butler,	Hale,	Miller,	Wilson of Iowa,
Chace,	Harris,	Morrill,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Payne,
Coke,	Hawley,	Plumb,
Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pugh,

NAYS—11.

Bowen,	Edmunds,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Sewell,
Cameron,	Evarts,	Riddleberger,	Teller.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—28.

Aldrich,	Gorman,	Logan,	Sabin,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Call,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Stanford,
Camden,	Hearst,	Morgan,	Vance,
Conger,	Ingalls,	Palmer,	Van Wyck,
Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Pike,	Voorhees,
Gibson,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,	Walthall.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I voted for this bill without examining it. Since the motion to reconsider it has been made I have examined it, and satisfied myself that it is hasty, inconsiderate, and mischievous legislation. I thoroughly indorse all that was so well said by my friend the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. I shall vote to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and if that motion is carried I shall vote against the passage of the bill.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, this Senate comprehends, when it is full, seventy-six members, and, as now constituted, of those seventy-six members sixty-five are lawyers. We are here to give judgment as Senators, and we are to express our mind concerning the profession in which we were reared and to which it may be hoped we have done no dishonor.

No member of the Senate is here except under the single oath of the Constitution, but we lawyers are here under a double oath that we have taken as lawyers to demean ourselves correctly in all our dealings in our profession and to uphold the Constitution of the United States before we come here. Now I find, a newcomer in this body but for a long time a member of the profession of the law, a reproaching at that profession and an aspersion upon the Senate. I had never before needed criminal legislation by reason of my associations with others. I have lived under the law of this land unreproached I believe, but I never have been before in an association that needed new penal sanctions to secure propriety of conduct. I have never heard except in the vilest revilings the reproach of the great profession of the law. I have never heard outside of the Senate so deep a stigma upon this body as is included in this bill; and it may be therefore—whether in the lapse of time I may be used to these distinctions—that it comes upon me with something of a shock when I find I am thus included, under these double oaths of mine, in a special provision for the situation in which I find myself, and for the body around me.

Now, if this is a good law, I shall vote for it; if it is a bad law, I shall vote against it; but, whether it is a good law or a bad law, it is a grave, serious, far-reaching law, and is entitled to deliberate consideration under the ordinary forms of treatment of public measures in this body. When, therefore, the other day I sat by and heard this treated as if it were a light matter, as passing a pension bill or something of that kind, only knowing that it was aimed in this direction, and knowing that it was, as I thought, discreditable to the body, but not having read its terms, I imagined that at once, when the mover of this bill had taken care not to say anything about it, as a matter of routine it was to go to a committee; or as the Senator expressed himself in speaking of one of the best committees no doubt in the esteem of this body both in the gravity and the responsibilities of its duties and in the make-up of its constitution, that you might as well vote the bill down as refer it to the inspection of intelligent, accomplished, experienced legislators, what did that mean? We are all of us lawyers in the Judiciary Committee, and another stigma was aimed at that learned profession, and over again against the Senate too, that a committee of lawyers could not be trusted with the consideration of what concerns the administration of criminal law.

Where are you going to get your committee out of this body when sixty-five are lawyers? To whom are you going to refer such a bill for revision and consideration and deliberate, intelligent treatment? I am sure the honorable Senator from Kentucky has not weighed the force of these suggestions of his, and that the Senate has not comprehended the gravity of this transaction which has condemned the lawyers of the Senate, the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and the Senate itself. Still, if it is a good law, we will vote for it, but let us find out that it is a good law and why such a measure is needed.

Now, I can not think that the honorable Senator from Kentucky is right in supposing that the extreme interpretation of the reach of this bill in the topics to which it would relate and which would carry its inflictions before the courts is not possible. I think that when he says it is a penal law and that the courts will help it he is outside the mark. If we are passing a penal law about this body and the other House, and the lawyers in both bodies, I think we had better make it right ourselves and not leave it to the interpretation of the courts. What objection can the honorable Senator make to that? Suppose the review by the Judiciary Committee should confine itself to the restriction and the elucidation that belong to the subject without infringing the real provisions and reach of the proposed legislation, let us have it settled. If we are to dangle before the criminal courts of this country, let us know where the statute is and what it means.

But restricting it, as the honorable Senator no doubt thinks it should be restricted, to a relation of employment connected with the corporation and its officers and others in that relation of employment, let us see how wide that is. Undoubtedly it might be thought that it was essential to a deliberate and impartial Upper House and Commons of England that they should be made up of persons who were possessed of property and of independence and unconnected with any of the servile relations, as this bill would intimate the relations of lawyers were; but in this country such ideas do not prevail in the community at large. Nor do they find any place in the Constitution, nor have they restricted the power of suffrage to select such representatives in either House as the people think best suited to their choice, nor the power of Congress to pass upon this freedom of their suffrage and to make an additional penalty that if they choose a man to Congress he must come here with criminal legislation around his neck!

I have heard read clauses from the statute-book that are supposed to introduce or pave the way to this legislation. What I speak of now is this, that to-day it is not a crime, it is not a fault, as the honorable Senator from Kentucky has said, for the honorable Senator from Oregon, he had a right to be the lawyer of a railroad company; it was an honor to him. But if this bill is passed, then what has happened? It is on the statute-book a penal offense, called a misdemeanor to be sure, but denounced with the penalties that belong to a felony. I notice this evasive form in legislation by which things are called misdemeanors and are punished as felonies. The gravity of a crime is the measure of the interests of society in the punishments that are apportioned to it.

Then this act does not punish crimes that in nature and now are crimes. It makes that a crime which was neither immoral nor criminal before; and now it is made so. Nor is it any answer to this criticism on my part that you can imagine and suggest and without any stretch of imagination relations between lawyers and these railroad companies or other corporations or private persons that would make it inconsistent with a Senator's duty in a matter that was under the discussion and decision of the Senate to recognize and fill these engagements.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the Senator from New York will be permitted to conclude, and I hope also that the consideration of this bill may be continued. It can not take very long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest that the bill which is the unfinished business be brought up and then informally laid aside.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the understanding I asked for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is before the Senate and will be informally laid aside if there be no objection so that discussion may be continued on the motion to reconsider. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] will proceed, no objection being made.

Mr. EVARTS. I was saying that unquestionably the relations between lawyers, members of this body, and these railroad corporations, or other corporations, or private persons having interests here, might be such as would make it unsuitable to them to take part in the decision; and that might be an impropriety which might be visited by censure or whatever mode of punishment the Senate should deem proper. I am only looking at the bill as it reads, and it covers matters that are not criminal and that have no more to do with the questions which are to be determined here under the railroad legislation made or expected, than if there was no relation whatever between the corporations and the lawyers.

You must then if you take this bill, as I shall point out, find it to be a reproach on our profession at large. The proposition is that if a lawyer has sustained employment and business which has brought either the friendship or the compensation that belongs to the profession, thereafter a new situation with no other relation than that you have had that employment as a lawyer affects your right and your duty to act in other matters.

Now, for myself, at this stage at least in my profession and in my years, it can not be a matter of great importance whether I should be curtailed or entirely prohibited in the further exercise of my profession. I shall dismiss, therefore, any personal relation to the matter; and I shall speak for the profession of the law, for those that are in Congress, and for those that expect to come to Congress and that their constituents desire to send to Congress; and I ask if this is a proper provision of law that is to drive into the straits of discrimination between penury and poverty or a retirement from public service. It has not been applied to any employment except my own, that of our profession. No railroad president, no land-grant railroad president or director or other employé in such a company is pointed out by this. None of the other hundred employments of life where persons have an opportunity and universal interest as their hope, are prohibited from being acceptable to the suffrage of their friends and allowed to accept it without relinquishing the employments and hopes of life. I will not run through the scale of employments. The honorable Senator from Oregon has named many of them carefully. There is not a man who can read them with his senses about him but that will see those relations to the topics which are embraced in this description and are to be considered here—tariff, shipping, commerce, everything. Well, if this can be done for the lawyers it can be done for the rest; and under this Constitution this free people that protects itself in its suffrage by being masters of it is by the Houses of Congress to be curtailed in its selection, or its candidates are driven to the alternative of surrendering the ordinary employments and freedom that belong to our common right.

Perhaps the honorable Senator from Kentucky would not think it unsuitable to preserve at least a little impartiality in those that are connected with the employments of railroads, by inserting in the fifth line, after the word "from," the two simple words "or against" so as to prevent members of Congress being attorneys against as well as for any railroad or any of its managers. If bias is to be avoided, let us have freedom from bias on one side and the other. If the honorable Senator from Kentucky is to be swerved in his judgment here by a fee derived from a suit out in Kentucky from a railroad-grant corporation, is he not likely to be swerved if he has been employed against it, and especially if he has been beaten by it? Let our lawyers stand free, impartial, and excluded from all connection with one side and the other with these railroad corporations.

In the city of New York the profession at large have a considerable interest in a question of this kind. I mean in the abstract, in general; for there all these railroad companies have their offices and all their manifold interests between themselves and others that are non-grant railroads and are not within this proscription. The great body of the employment there of the lawyers is in the arrangements of engagements and schemes between the different railroads, giving advice as to the wisdom and the safety of the arrangements upon which invitations are sent out for funds to be furnished, and advice as to those means that are to carry them out. They have nothing whatever to do with the relations of the companies to this Government. Out in the regions that are traversed by these roads, as we all know, the range of professional employment there for the local lawyers takes in great part all the ordinary matters that belong to torts and contracts between the common people themselves and these common carriers, and do not in a large part touch any of the topics that are involved here.

Now, I think the honorable Senator from Kentucky will agree that if he be right in thinking he can plan a restriction by a judicial construction, according to his own estimate that all these wide topics I have referred to are not embraced in and denounced by this bill, what then does it come to? That a lawyer, in having given an opinion to the Central Railroad of Illinois on a contract between it, we will say, and the Central Railroad of New York, would be in a position where he would not be and should not be trusted in the disposition of a matter that touched the land-grant railroad in any form. If the instrument of agreement should be brought to me in New York, or to the honorable Senator in Kentucky, and he was asked whether this formidable instrument upon inspection would conform to all the requirements of law, was lucidly stated, and would then be operative in a manner that would be understood and usefully employed between them, he or I would be obliged to say: "Whom do you come from with this instrument? Do you come from the Central Railroad of Illinois or from the Central Railroad of New York?" The same matter, if brought from the Central Railroad of Illinois, the lawyer could not give judgment on, while if brought to him the next day from the Central Railroad of New York, the same instrument, the same duty can be discharged by him. I am not straining a point when I say that in relations of that kind even of those least likely to favor lawyers, and certainly not by any lawyer, would there be a pretense of an intention that there was a disturbance of absolute impartiality and integrity in the administration of matters that were to be reviewed here.

So with suits. The staple of a lawyer's business depends upon the staple of the business about him; and when railroad litigations and railroad contracts form the principal province of litigation and of consultation, the lawyers living in those regions find them as the ordinary food, the meat and drink of their life. But they are all to be excluded, not only while they are here, but from any aspirations to come here, unless the independence of their circumstances is such that they can part with this employment.

But what happens to the unilateral lawyers, as I would describe these proscribed members of our profession? How much would a man's employment against railroads be encroached upon if it was known that that man could not take a fee against them? You therefore have an encroachment upon what makes the intrepidity and the independence of the bar, of which the first proposition and the first duty is that I am open, under the exercise of my profession before the courts, to defend and to prosecute rights; and here a seam is run through our profession by which these unilateral lawyers are to be dotted all over the land.

This is not trivial. The very fact that anybody could think that such a bill could be introduced here must be on the ground that there is an extensive range of these relations. These being innocent things, and being a part of the common right and the common enjoyment of the lawyers and of the communities in which they live, what right is there on the part of Congress under our Constitution to encroach upon that common liberty? If they wish to restrict their legislation to what bears upon transactions here, that is very well, and they must shape their bill accordingly; but to say that lawyers in their homes and in their requirements of life shall not earn their livelihood in the ordinary employment of railroad corporations and those connected with them, is an encroachment upon common right.

This is not a general government in the sense of regulating the conduct of all the people of this country. The Constitution has said what it can do in its general legislation, and what it can do under the Constitution in respect of the political relations of the members of either House to those bodies. As the honorable Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] has well pointed out, we are here in our capacity of Senators, as in the other House the members of that body are under the constitutional and express authority over us, in addition to what governs us in the body of the law, which we are all subject to, with the exception of the protection of our security as members of these bodies.

Mr. President, I have sufficiently pointed out the far-reaching character of this proposed legislation; the unprecedented condition of it in its now attempt; and what does it rest on? Sections 1781 and 1782 of the Revised Statutes, one of which includes members of Congress and with all others having relations to the Government in brokerage in office, and the other prohibits being interested in prosecuting matters in which the United States is concerned before, and not the public tribunals of the country, but certain designated quasi courts. That is all; and it is an immoral thing that is punished.

I do not myself think very highly of that kind of penal sanctions which surround public men. I do not believe much in the notion that a handcuffed pickpocket is an honest man, and I never shall myself go into legislation of that kind. Quid leges, sine moribus. Vanæ proficiunt. And if that be a maxim that will stand us in stead as members of this great body of the Senate of the United States, and the great popular body at the other end of the Capitol, and the great profession of the law, I do not think anybody will find in this species of criminal sanctions thrown around what is not immoral any support of the moral tone which should characterize the legislative bodies.

I do not know how lawyers here may feel about it; I do not know how Senators may feel about it; I do not know what shadow there may be over the political atmosphere that environs us all; but for myself, careless of my own relations to the subject, I shall never by my vote strike upon the honor and dignity of the humblest member of my profession or the least friendly Senator or member of the other House.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I would be as far from trenching on the honor or dignity of the legal profession as the Senator from New York. I am a member of that profession, and for twenty-odd years before I came to Congress I did nothing else but practice law. I never held any office of any sort until I came here, but I must confess that since I have been here I have found employment enough in attending to public duties to occupy all my time, not being possessed of the transcendent ability that the Senator from New York perhaps has. I can not without neglect of public duties keep up my business as a lawyer.

I understood when I accepted the highly honorable position of a Representative or Senator in the Congress of the United States that I agreed not to hold any place or accept any fee or place myself under obligations to anybody inconsistent with my obligation to maintain and assert the rights of all the people and their interests against all people or corporations who asserted claims against them. I could not to-day with any proper sense of duty and obligation, holding the position I do as a Senator of the United States, accept from the president or any agent of the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific, or the Northern Pacific Railroads fees as retainers or otherwise, no matter how plausibly disguised, that would place me under obligations to them when I knew that they had matters I would have to consider and decide in this body. When a Senator of the United States can not afford to accept that position from his people and act as their representative without going home and under the guise of practicing law take fees from corporations who have important business before Congress in conflict with the people, he had better let somebody else come here who can. That is my opinion.

The Senator from New York talks about unilateral lawyers. I do not know what they are. Perhaps I am one; that is, in his opinion, I suppose we are little, one-sided fellows, not a quadrilateral lawyer, as he thinks he is, because I confess that I think that there is hardly anybody big enough to come here and learn all that is going on and do his duty to the people without thinking about public business and spending all his leisure time in vacation, instead of practicing his profession and seeking for fees from subsidized railroads. The Senator from New York may be a good deal bigger and better than anybody else; perhaps he is.

When a man is elected a judge of any court anywhere he has to give up all the fees he had contracted for as a lawyer. The positions and duties are inconsistent. When General Grant was elected President of the United States he sought to make the biggest merchant in America his Secretary of the Treasury, but the position of a great merchant in the case of Mr. Stewart was found to be inconsistent with the position of Secretary of the Treasury, and he could not and did not obtain the place, and the country was deprived of his services, because of the incompatibility of the position with the business he was engaged in, although he was then the leading merchant of New York. If he had been a lawyer, it would doubtless be contended that his constitutional rights were infringed in some way by such a prohibition as the statute imposed on the merchant.

So there are many positions which are inconsistent with other duties and obligations; the statutes are full of them. No member of either House of Congress can practice before the Court of Claims. No member of either House of Congress can take a fee, no matter how just he may think the claim is, and how much his own immediate constituent may be oppressed, if that claim is or may be against the United States. No member of Congress can be a party to any contract in which the United States is interested. No member of Congress can do anything for compensation to aid any constituent of his in obtaining any position under the United States. No member of Congress can accept an office created while he occupies that position. There are hundreds of limitations which are placed upon a man when he accepts the high trust of a representative in either House of Congress that may be inconsistent with his natural right.

I do not desire to reflect, and I never have reflected, upon the action of any gentleman in this or the other House of Congress in regard to what he has done; but I insist, from the very fact that there are sixty-odd lawyers, as the Senator from New York says, in this body out of the seventy-six, we ought to take care that we shall provide by law—and it is all the more important because we are lawyers—we shall make it impossible for any of us to hold professional relations with any of the great railroads of the country chartered by Congress, when we know that they hold empires of land given to them by Congressional legislation on conditions and under limitations requiring constant and vigilant supervision, having great subsidies given by law, which Congress must guard as best it can, with great questions in regard to our rights to transport our troops and munitions of war, to the carrying of our mails, to the payment back of the money which they agreed they would refund with interest. We have to decide the effect of their failure to complete their roads within the time limited by their charters, in regard to their land titles, and as to their liability for taxes upon their lands for which they have not taken patents, and a thousand other things in regard to their management. There ought to be no two opinions about Congressmen being in their employ or having the money of the corporations in their pockets on any pretense when they are elected to come here to vote upon those great questions. It is against common decency to insist that the position of attorney on one side and representative of the people on the other are consistent.

Suppose it were confessed on this floor that the sixty-odd lawyers in the Senate were all retained by the railroads (if one can be all may be), in matters outside of the immediate subjects coming before us, do you think our constituents would ever send us back? Ought they to do it? Do you think they would believe that the laws that were passed by us while we occupied that relation to the managers of these railroad corporations were honestly passed in the interest of the people? Do you believe they would think that they were getting their mails transported as cheaply as they ought, or that they were getting their troops or munitions of war transported as they ought, or that their great grants of land which are now untaxed were being fairly held by the corporations represented by their well-paid attorneys? Would any Senator say that the people or States ought to keep us here when we were the attorneys for these roads, or that the people would be satisfied that we would fairly consider questions of forfeiture while we had general retainers in our pockets from the roads which were thus interested against the legislation the people think they are interested in? There are, so the Senator from New York says, sixty-odd lawyers. I repeat one has as good a right to be employed by the railroad corporations as another—unilateral as well as quadrilateral lawyers.

Mr. EVARTS. Perhaps my learned friend will allow me to explain?

Mr. BECK. I do not know the meaning of the word.

Mr. EVARTS. The honorable Senator has taken exception to "unilateral," as if it were a reproachful description of a particular kind of lawyers. I only spoke of the predicament lawyers would be put in who could only take a fee on one side. It was not a reproach on lawyers at all.

Mr. BECK. We have always professed to believe, and the country believes, that the $5,000 a year which is paid to us for our services by the tax-payers of the country entitles the people of this country to our whole services. If any of us think we can not live on the salary that is paid us by them they can find others who will accept our places. We have no right to supplement it by taking money from corporations who have interests adverse to our employers. I agree with the people in that. I think that they agree with me. Perhaps that is a better way to state it. I do not mean to reflect on lawyers, and will not be placed in that position.

I think no greater boon could be given to the lawyers who are legitimately pursuing their profession as private gentlemen, the men who are not paid by the United States, who are not in either House of Congress, than to say that in all the important questions which involve the interests of the great land-grant and subsidized roads the corporations shall employ men as their attorneys who are not in the employ of the United States and who are not pretending to represent the people of the United States, and give them the fees that Senators seem now so anxious to get and so fearful that they will lose if the law which the Senate has passed is not reconsidered and rejected, for reconsideration means rejection.

The argument of the Senator from New York has demonstrated one thing, that I was wise in resisting the reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, of which he is a member, for he has declared in advance that under no circumstances would he report such a bill as this. I knew he would not. It might as well be killed here and now. I know there are other members of that committee who think the same way. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] has just admitted that although he voted for the bill he can not now support it. I suppose after the Judiciary Committee got in their rooms they agreed that it was a reflection upon them that they did not have a chance to kill it. It was submitted to the Senate upon a vote of the yeas and nays. A majority decided that it should not fall into the hands of its enemies. They said we understand this question and we will vote upon it? Thirty-seven to eleven of the members of the Senate, each and all of whom had a perfect right to debate it, decided the question.

It is no more a matter that concerns me personally than it is the personal concern of any other Senator. I have no more personal interest in it than any other man on this floor. I had heard and read in the RECORD all sorts of insinuations about the impropriety of Senators being connected with these land-grant roads. While the Senator from New York was speaking I looked up two or three of them. On the 28th of May the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] said:

I wish to speak to the pending bill as illustrating the bill that has just passed away from the consideration of the Senate. I wish to call the attention of my brother Senators to the circumstance that a bill considered by a committee and reported by that committee, by a majority (I do not know whether it was unanimous or not, probably not), which proposes to forfeit 200 miles or more of a land grant in the rich valley of the Columbia, in respect to which probably all Senators would agree that it ought to be forfeited, has been by a yea-and-nay vote (if I may use such a phrase now) bedeviled as if we were all employed by a railroad company to bedevil it and do nothing at all by the propositions of amendments and insisting upon considering them, that raise open and difficult and disturbing questions, which our former experience has shown are not likely to be decided in the six weeks that are probably yet left for the action of Congress at this session.

The people of the country understood naturally that the Senator from Vermont thought we were not looking at the question as legislators, but as lawyers who were "bedeviling," to use his expression, in regard to it, as though we were the attorneys of the roads. My friend from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], when he was sought to be interrupted by another Senator on the 12th day of June, said:

Mr. GEORGE. I am willing to yield to any reasonable length, but I can not give way to hear all the apologies and all the reasonings, and everything of that sort of a railroad company.

Mr. DOLPH. It is simply a question whether the Senator yields for me to finish my statement.

Mr. GEORGE. I believe I will not. You can reply to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no doubt the Senator from Oregon as a lawyer has had a great deal of experience in reference to railroad companies which would interest the people of this country, but as I am just now going on with the people's side of the case I ask him to wait until I get through.

When the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] the same day was speaking, he said:

Why, Mr. President, it is not for me to speak of the influence of these rich railroad corporations. I know their success in the past in repressing and preventing legislation. I will read an extract from a speech made in this body by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] which depicts in vigorous and eloquent language the power and the influence of these rich railroad corporations, not only to obtain these favors from Congress, but to preserve them against any assault by Congress. He said, among other things:

"When the greatest railroad of the world, binding together the continent and uniting the two great seas which wash our shores, was finished, I have seen our national triumph and exultation turned to bitterness and shame by the unanimous reports of three committees of Congress—two of the House and one here—that every step of that mighty enterprise had been taken in fraud."

The Senator from Louisiana proceeded:

I remember that in the celebrated contest in 1878, in that first and greatest and stormiest struggle on the part of some of the ablest and most distinguished statesmen in this country in this body to assert the rights of the Government of the United States as against the exorbitant pretensions of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] not once but repeatedly in his speeches denounced in very plain and vigorous terms the influence of the lobby operating upon this body to defeat that wise, just, and salutary legislation.

I remember that he, uniting his great talents and his great zeal with Judge Thurman, representing the interests of the people and of the Government, displaying equal devotion and equal earnestness, after many a discomfiture and many a defeat, united in a common rejoicing because they had succeeded in passing a law in this body requiring that that railroad corporation should be held to a strict accountability in its financial relations to the Government of the United States.

So not only this year but last year and every other year the suggestion has been made over and over again in this body that at every step of legislation the power and the influence of these great corporations were felt here and everywhere else in the halls of legislation. For one I want to be able to say that it is not true; that the statutes of the United States prohibit any man from having any interest in or any bias on such questions because of money paid to him by the corporations or their agents or that he had anything to do in regard to such transactions, and to answer all such insinuations by saying to his accusers, if you think that is not true there is a statute which allows you to prosecute all or any of us in the courts of the United States and convict us and fine and imprison us. That is a full and fair answer to all slanderers or whisperers.

That is what I seek; nothing more, nothing less. I charge no guilt on any one; I charge no misconduct on any one. I make no reflections on the legal profession. God knows whatever I have I owe to somewhat successful exertions in that profession, and I would be the last man to derogate from the dignity, the position, the standing of any member of the great profession to which I belong.

I want to have it distinctly understood and to have a law passed so that the world can understand it, and if they do not believe what we say they can punish us for a violation of the statute, that not one of us in dealing with these great land-grant roads, with the forfeiture of their property, with the bonds, with the issuing of their stock, with the sinking funds we have required them to set apart, or with the great questions now pending before us as to the extensions we may give to the Central Pacific, the Union Pacific, or any other railroad, the transportation of our mails and of our soldiers and munitions of war, has any connection whatever with them as the employed counsel of any of those railroad companies. That is all I seek to do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think it is perhaps a suitable time to refer to the last observations of my friend from Kentucky, in which he has done me the honor to bring in my name as illustrating the entire illusoriness of this bill. He has done me the great honor to associate me and my name with that of ex-Senator Thurman, after many defeats and many struggles, in at last accomplishing the passage of a bill which did something toward bringing the greatest of land-grant corporations to terms. It illustrates the fact which has been true in all the time I have been in the Senate, and is probably true everywhere, in every legislative body, that the gentlemen who have, like surgeons, done particular work professionally, work for corporations or other great clients or patients, are the men who when in public station those clients or those patients come to be considered are found to be perhaps quite as skillful in treating them in their political relations to the State or to the United States as they were in treating them in their private affairs.

At the time when Judge Thurman and myself were struggling against a great mass of influence that operated not upon gentlemen who had ever been retained to argue a cause for any of these companies, but who in some other way and under some other influences had been subjected to bias, the very men who had accomplished these things had been perhaps of all others the men who now and then, as the surgeon or the doctor takes a patient, had been the counsel of the gentlemen who controlled these corporations, in the courts of the United States.

I think that is true of the profession of the law everywhere, of which the Senator from Kentucky is an honored and, as he says most truly, a highly successful member. If there is any one profession and calling in this life that leads a man to be able to distinguish between one line of duty and another line of duty, and to know where he stands, and to do each duty upon its own merits and with its own consequences, I am bound to say it is the profession of the law, without any derogation of any other profession, from that of farmer down, wherever it may go, because farming is the best and highest of all professions.

That is the commentary upon this bill as a practical thing. I have been counsel for some of these railway companies now and then, in causes in the courts of the United States and in causes in courts in the States; and so having been counsel, and in those old times probably then being counsel, I did what I could and in my humble and ineffectual, but at last somewhat effectual, way—not as effectual as I wished it had been—to bring my clients, as they had been and as they were in other relations, to their duty to the other and the greater clients whom I represented, the people of the United States.

Now, the fundamental basis of this bill is the idea that gentlemen in the profession of the law having a client are under a bias in favor of that client. That is the fundamental basis of this bill; and that in order to make free and pure legislation it is necessary to exclude that bias. That would be very good, Mr. President, if this world could be made up in such a way that it should be governed by angels who come down from heaven, with no possible concern in the interests and favors of men, and who were to govern it from above—a kind of celestial aristocracy, who should have none of the weaknesses of human nature, none of the passions of human men, and none of the sympathies that belong to a common humanity.

So, applied to the favors of this world, if my friend from Kentucky and myself were to continue to be Senators (as he always will; it is not so clear about myself), I should never vote for any measure that affected the people of the State of Vermont, because of all the bias that can possibly affect what we call a right-minded man, it is the bias of neighborhood and State pride. We all feel it; we all act upon it. Every day and all the time, in spite of all our independence, in spite of all our pride to be just, and upright, and pure, and true, there is always the loving feeling for our neighbors and for our State.

I see my friend from Kentucky continually voting here for what is called free trade, because the people of whom he is one and one of the greatest, feel and think, wrongly as I believe, that what is called free trade is best for them. I vote and struggle for what is called protection, because I feel in spite of myself that the people of whom I am one, and among whom I was born and a part of whom I am, feel that their deepest interests are in that kind of law which shall encourage the building up of home industries, home productions, and all that. I need not go into it; I only use it to illustrate. The strongest bias that any man in this Chamber or in our co-ordinate branch at the other side of the Capitol can possibly have is the bias that belongs to his State and his own neighborhood and people, of whom he is one.

If we could only have a Senate and House of Representatives that should not represent any State, should not represent any district, should not have any human feeling, should not have any human sympathy, should not have any human knowledge of the interests and desires of their respective constituents, but should come down, as I said before, from heaven, and just sweep the calm hand of omnipotent justice and fair play over everybody, what would become of the tobacco of Kentucky and of the wool of Vermont? I do not know. No, Mr. President, it is impossible in this weary world of ours to undertake to eliminate from any legislative chamber or any other chamber—and I am glad that it is so—something of bias and consideration.

The least possible bias, as the history of this Government has shown in a hundred years, that exists in the mind of any man who has ever been employed as counsel, or who has ever been a stockholder or whatever in respect of any operations of the business affairs in this world, has been the mere fact that he had some connection with somebody who had an interest before Congress. The overwhelming bias, the one that sways us and almost controls us all, is the bias of locality and of State interest. I can see my friend from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] before me now, earnest, intelligent, vigorous in his belief in the doctrine of universal free trade; and yet when a tariff bill comes up here, the North Carolina resin and the North Carolina peanuts, and the South Carolina rice, his neighboring State, find in him a warm-hearted advocate; and it is right, because it is human.

One bias thus offsets another; and the general outcome is the good of the Republic. Therefore, unless we are to turn ourselves (because that is what this bill amounts to) by a system of exclusion of everybody from this Chamber and from the other who pursues any human calling, or has any human interest or any human sympathy with the people among whom he lives, you must find some other Senate and some other House of Representatives and some other world to live in.

But, Mr. President, this is apart from what I had wished to say, for the strange incongruity of this measure and its most apparent and palpable invasion of private rights may be passed by. I only rose to say that I have just been shown the speech of my honorable friend from Kentucky made yesterday, I believe (I was ill and absent), referring to another department of this Government, the Supreme Court of the United States, which is as we know under the Constitution a separate and independent department, whose judges are to continue during good behavior, whose salaries can not be diminished during their continuance in office, and who were intended to be by the fathers who built this Republic as far apart from the contentions of politics and the various biases of human nature as any tribunal could be. My friend from Kentucky said about that tribunal yesterday, referring to the effect of Senators as well as members of the other House arguing causes before them:

> Men may be employed by these railroad companies—

As they may be by anybody else who has a cause in that court—

> simply because they are members of Congress, simply because of the influence—

"Influence." That is a technical phrase in politics, you know, Mr. President, particularly under this administration—> simply because of the influence they are supposed by their clients to have over the judges who were perhaps nominated by them—> or who were confirmed by the votes of such members of Congress as are Senators.

A judge of the Supreme Court nominated by a member of Congress!—

I appeal to my friend from Kentucky to withdraw that observation. If this Republic, prosperous as it has been for a century, with the little tempests and drawbacks of civil war, and so on, but prosperous on the whole, has come to the pass that in this age of its life an independent and co-ordinate branch of the Government is to be supposed to be possibly influenced by the fact that a gentleman who may have been a member of the Senate voted for or against the confirmation of its judges (and I have done both, as my friend from Kentucky I think has also, if I do not disclose any secrets by saying that), if they are to be influenced by the fact that my friend from Kentucky appears on the opposite side of a cause in that court between a citizen of Kentucky and a citizen of Vermont, or a Kentucky railroad, or a land-grant railroad, or any other client, then I must say that the days of this Republic are numbered. If the thing has gone so far as that, I think we might as well throw up, and leave the President of the United States to run the concern in his own way without any reference to Congress at all.

Mr. BECK. If the Senator will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. EDMUNDS. With great pleasure.

Mr. BECK. I may have been a little unfortunate in my language. I read over my remarks, but not carefully. I was endeavoring to show that clients and litigants felt that way, and I think they do. That is the extent to which I said influence really extended, and that in railroad land-grant cases I thought it was best that such corporations should not be allowed to seek the employment of members of Congress, because the clients and litigants had that feeling. That is what I was endeavoring to argue. I may have missed it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then if merely confined to the matter of the clients, we are engaged in the question of determining what lawyers the citizens of the United States who wish to employ lawyers shall employ. If that is all there is to do, I think my friend from Kentucky would not really wish to press his bill. His bill was designed, as he states it, to accomplish a great public interest, not in respect of the selection by particular persons who have law cases or any other matters to do, but in respect of the effect upon the public interest of that selection. Now, the Senator from Kentucky goes on:

> The clients know that those judges are looking every day to the Senate for favors and think that they grant favors in return.

I beg to say to the Senator from Kentucky that in twenty years here I have never known the Supreme Court of the United States or any of its members to look to the Senate or to the House of Representatives for any favors whatever of any kind. If the Senator from Kentucky will look at their reported decisions he will find that as many, and perhaps more, cases in which some member of the House of Representatives or some Senator has been concerned as counsel with a private citizen on the other side as counsel have been decided against the member of the House of Representatives or the Senator as for him.

What is this favor to which the Senator from Kentucky especially alu des as an illustration? He says:

> I have before me now a bill that passed the Senate the other day, for which, no doubt, the judges of the Supreme Court are very much obliged to the Senate of the United States, and would look very kindly on any suggestion that would come from that direction.

What does that mean, Mr. President? He states what it means. He reads an act that passed this body without any visible dissenting vote, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, the Senator from Kentucky, who is always in his place, doubtless being present, thus:

> That for the purpose of facilitating the dispatch of business in the Supreme Court of the United States, said court be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a law clerk for the Chief-Justice and one for each of the associate justices thereof, with an annual salary, to be fixed by the court, not to exceed the sum of $2,000, &c.

That is the favor, Mr. President, that the Senate of the United States has extended to the various judges of the Supreme Court of the United States. How many of these seventy-six Senators have been counsel in that court in the last five years? Not a great many in the very nature of things. What is the favor? The Supreme Court of the United States has a jurisdiction that we fix, except its original jurisdiction which is very small and does not comprise ten cases a year, probably much less; all its other jurisdiction the Congress of the United States fixes. For years and years that court has been overrun with the mass of business that has kept its calendar three years behind keeping up with it; so that every suitor who appeals from a lower court to that one for justice and redress is obliged to wait three years before his case can be even heard. It had been suggested, and so far as I now remember (very possibly I may be wrong) without coming from any judge of that court, that it was desirable to give the court the best possible means of facilitating the dispatch of its business; and as we all know here, with a private clerk for every Senator, and with our committee clerks for every chairman of a committee and for the committee, that it is impossible to carry on the public duties we have to perform without the aid of such people as the bill that passed this body without any dissenting vote describes, it was proposed that for the public interest and the dispatch of the administration of justice the court should be authorized to employ that particular kind of technical assistance.

Is that a favor to the members of that court? Is it not a much better and nobler thing to say that it is a wise and beneficent measure to endeavor to promote the public interest by enabling the court to do more with this assistance than it could do without it? So thought the Senate, and so the bill passed this body, as I said before, without any dissent whatever. And that the Senator from Kentucky, in his eagerness and zeal about his bill, has brought forward as an argument to show that any member of Congress, any member of the House of Representatives, or any Senator whose calling in life it may have been before he came here to practice law, if heard before that court would be a special pet and favorite of that great body, who are beyond our reach, once appointed, even in respect of the compensation that they are to have.

I am bound to say, not for that court, for I have no right to speak for it, but I am bound to say of it that its history in this hundred years repudiates any such suggestion as a calumny upon it; and I may say for the members of this body, and for the members of the other House, if I may allude to them, that although not intended as such it is a calumny upon the gentlemen of either House who for their clients in their respective States go before that great tribunal to state the law as they believe it is for the advantage of their clients.

To come to another part of this affair, for I must be very brief, are you, Mr. President, to say that bias is a disqualification for a Senator or a member of the other House? The Constitution has fixed our qualifications in both Houses. It has not said that we shall not be lawyers; it has not said that we shall not be farmers interested in the protection of our products and in the making of laws that will promote our industries, but it has said that we shall be of a certain age, that we shall be citizens of the United States, and inhabitants of the States from which we come. No law of Congress has created the Senate or the House of Representatives. A law higher than any act of Congress has done that; and that law, the Constitution, has provided as to us and as to the House of Representatives that each State and the people of each State shall within these qualifications select the gentlemen of their respective States who are to represent them according to their will and not according to ours when we have come here. That is where we stand.

Congress may by law create, as it has by law created, Departments, and provide the qualifications of the officers of those Departments. It has said wisely and rightly from the beginning that no person shall be Secretary of the Treasury who is engaged in commerce, &c., that no members of Congress shall be engaged in the prosecution of claims against the United States in whatever form. It has said that no member of Congress shall be engaged in any contract obligation with the United States in any form. That is all easy and simple, because in every such respect the Congress of the United States in creating these Departments and establishing these laws has declared what shall not be done with those Departments and in the execution of those laws. That is easy enough; but if the Congress of the United States were to undertake to say (which this bill does as to one single calling of all the thousand in this Republic of ours), that no member of Congress shall be a stockholder in any railway that has received a land grant from the United States, it is equally entitled to say that no person shall be a member of Congress who is a member of any corporation that has any contract with the United States, that carries its mails, that administers its finance through national banks, that transports its troops or munitions of war; or that no person shall be a member of Congress who is engaged in the importation of merchandise, because if he were he would have a bias for or against a tariff.

There you have gone entirely wide of the solid and substantial principle upon which the laws we have passed rest, and have come to undertake to declare a qualification among the representatives of the people and the States which the Constitution has not imposed, and which no constitution could impose without paralyzing every operation of the Government; for no man can be a Representative or a Senator who is not under some bias of some kind in respect of the operations of the Government as manifested by its laws.

But, Mr. President, the state of my health is such that I can not go on to elaborate the suggestions I have made. I only rose to defend, so far as I might, the Supreme Court of the United States from what appeared to be, undoubtedly the unintentional, imputation that the Senator from Kentucky made upon it.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, this bill struck me from the moment I heard it read as presenting a question of morals and of propriety so plain that I did not think it would admit of debate. I was not at all surprised therefore when it was adopted by an overwhelming majority of this body without debate. I am a little surprised now at the unsober second thought which has come upon a portion of this body at least, and the line of argument which is adopted to prove that the bill is bad legislation.

We hear a great deal of reform nowadays, though we see very little. In my opinion the reform which the country really demands is a greater and a more important and a more vital one than that which regulates a $900 clerk. I coincide with the tenets of our religion on this subject. When the Gospel was ordered to be preached those who were charged with that duty were commanded to begin at Jerusalem; and the apostle in another portion of the Scriptures says that judgment should begin at the house of the Lord. If there is any reform attempted in the political methods of this country I submit that it should begin right here, in the Congress of the United States.

Whether or not there be need of reform in the Congress of the United States it would not be becoming in me to say; but we can not shut our eyes to the fact that there is an impression throughout the country which we see manifested in the public prints almost every day that we open the newspapers, and which we hear expressed upon the street corners and on the hustings and everywhere that men discuss politics—there is an impression I say that there is a great deal of jobbery and improperly procured legislation emanating from the Congress of the United States.

Whether that be true or not, it is the part of wise men to avoid as far as possible any occasion for such imputations upon this body and the corresponding one that sits at the other end of this Capitol. If a man finds that he is losing reputation by association in public places with an improper character, the most natural as well as the wisest course is for him immediately to abandon that association, to give the public evidence of the fact that he is desirous to avoid at least the appearance of evil.

Now, sir, a bill has been introduced into this body by the Senator from Kentucky and passed, not alleging that there is improper legislation procured by the attorneys of great corporations in this body, but providing against the possibility of such a thing occurring. That is held to be an imputation and a slander upon members of this body. I do not so regard it. I do not believe that it was so intended. I do not believe that the public will so construe it. But I do believe this, and I prophesy this, that if in the face of these generally unfavorable impressions to which I have alluded in regard to the purity of our legislation we refuse to apply legislation that will prevent its possibility it will be accepted by a great portion of the American people as proof that such imputations were not unfounded, and then the slander upon this body will come from its own action in refusing to protect itself by proper laws.

Amidst all this extraordinary argument to which I have listened, amidst the special pleading and pathetic appeals and the platitudinous philosophy that has been poured out on this subject, it has been said that it is impossible in the constitution of human nature to secure absolute impartiality and freedom from bias. Of course it is. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] did me the kindness to twit me about the bias of a local nature which I was suspected to have exhibited for the people of North Carolina in my vote some three years ago on the subject of rice when the tariff was under consideration.

The value of such an argument as that, if it can be called an argument, is at once made apparent when you reflect upon the difference between a Senator or Representative standing up here and voting in the interest of those whose attorney he is, whose agent or representative he is, and the Senator who stands up here, if there be such a one, and votes in the interest of a client whose money he has in his pocket. There is a very wide difference, that will be obvious to any one who will look at it for a moment.

It is our business to represent the interests of our constituents, it is our duty and honor to show bias in their favor, but it is not the business of any representative in the American Congress or in any other legislative body known among the American people to represent private interests when they come in conflict with public interests.

Why, Mr. President, there is not a man in North Carolina where that rice is grown whose sense of honor and propriety is not keen enough to enable him to despise an attorney who is accused of taking a fee on both sides. You must confine yourself to the plaintiff or to the defendant, one or the other. And now when a bill comes before the Congress of the United States asking for a benefit to be granted to a private man or to a corporation of men which is in conflict with the interests of the public, how can a Senator or Representative accept a fee from the private interest and vote as a representative of the public interest without having been open to the accusation of being employed by both sides and without being untrue to one or the other? It seems to me, sir, that it is impossible to reconcile a nice sense of honor with such a proceeding as that, and all that this bill proposes to do is to put it out of the power, if it were in the inclination, of any member of the Congress of the United States to place himself in such a position.

I think it has been successfully shown by the Senator from Kentucky that this is not new legislation, that time and again Congress has undertaken to surround not only all the members of the various departments of the Government but Congressmen themselves from the dangers of appearing in one capacity for a portion of the public and in another capacity for the general public. I do not think that it is new legislation. I do not think that it is hasty legislation. On the contrary I think it is very slow legislation, for this ought to have been the law twenty-five years ago, and we ought to adopt it now and place it upon the statute-book; and no honest man can feel himself aggrieved thereby. No man should feel that there is any imputation cast upon him by the attempt to surround himself with the ordinary safeguards of law in the service of his country.

A great lawyer should pride himself not only on the extent of his learning but on the high character of his profession, and most of all upon that high, keen, and exquisite sense of honor which has made the great lawyer the friend of liberty and of pure government all the world over; and when such a man, enjoying the lucrative practice which his great talents have enabled him to obtain among his own countrymen, sees proper to seek further and other honors at their hands by a seat in the Congress of the United States, his pride should be to say to them, "Sirs, I surrender all the profits of my profession, I surrender all of its emoluments and honors, and I take upon myself these new duties divorced from every other and encumbering duty, and my country, so long as I am in this capacity, shall have my sole and exclusive talents and exertions."

If it comes, in other words, to a choice between his client at home and his country, he should say, "I surrender my client, and I serve my country and nothing else." He should at least be as honorable as Dugald Dalgetty, the soldier of fortune, was, who was ready to fight for any commander who saw proper to hire him, but made it a scrupulous point of honor that he would not render the slightest service to his new master until his contract with the old one was fulfilled. I think we should at least have that much honor. I believe we have it now; but for our own protection and for the protection of those who are to come after us, I believe that this law ought to be upon the statute-book of the country, so that when lawyers come to the United States Senate or to the House of Representatives it should be understood that they have and can have but one client, and that one our common country.

Mr. HAWLEY. Just a word or two before the vote is taken.

When this bill passed without reference or debate, though I was somewhat surprised, I voted for it, because I fancied that there was an object we might justly aim to reach. Upon a little further reflection I decided that the bill was hasty, needed consideration by the proper committee, and I therefore entered a motion to reconsider. I think the event has justified my supposition that the bill was worthy of debate. It has occupied certainly much more time than I expected. My object has been largely gained anyhow, and I now hope that the motion to reconsider will be carried. I shall follow it, if nobody else does, with a motion to refer this bill to the Judiciary Committee. I have no such dread of it as the Senator from Kentucky seems to indulge in. I am told that by the record six members of that Judiciary Committee voted for the bill upon its passage, and yet one of those distinguished gentlemen, a very able lawyer, has said here to-day that he thought it deserved further consideration. But, deducting him, the committee appears to be evenly divided. I am perfectly willing to leave a deliberate consideration and revision of the bill to that committee. I do not vouch for those figures, but I am so told. I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have already been ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of discussing this bill, but only to say a word or two in the nature of an explanation, and then, perhaps, to add a suggestion.

When the proposition was voted upon in the Senate to refer this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary I voted against it. I believe I was the only Senator on this side of the Chamber who did so. The Senator from Kentucky, perhaps a week before, had introduced the bill; it had been read at the desk, and he had announced his purpose to call it up on a particular day for action and to put it upon its passage. At the time named the bill was called up by him. A vote of the Senate was taken, and the bill was taken up for consideration. Up to that time no motion had been made by any one to give it a reference to a committee. I had never read it; I had heard it read at the desk simply, and in that way gathered the general scope of the bill; I had not given it that careful or critical attention which every Senator should give to such legislation, and especially to a bill which had not had the supervision of any committee of the Senate.

I have thought since that the vote I gave against this reference, especially in view of a remark made by the Senator from Kentucky at the time, was liable to misconstruction and involved perhaps some disrespect to the Committee on the Judiciary. I desire to say now that nothing was further from my thoughts at the time I gave that vote. There is certainly no committee of this body—I go further and say there is no equal number of men that I know anywhere, to whose intelligence, wisdom, and integrity I would sooner commit any measure of public or private interest than to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

I thought at the time that we should have the advantage of some discussion upon the bill upon its passage from those whose attention had been called to its terms. It did not turn out that way, but for some reason or other, without a word being said on either side of the Chamber, the bill was put upon its passage, and the affirmative vote was very large. It has been stated by the Senator from Colorado that only 11 votes were recorded in the negative.

I voted for the passage of the bill. In doing so I voted for what seemed to me to be a principle that was right and without reference to the special phraseology of the bill. I take it for granted that every Senator who voted for it did so for the same reason. I am not prepared to say that this legislation is not needed—I am prepared to say that there is a principle in the bill that we should support and that I shall support; and in saying this I desire to add a word. If I were asked by any one in or out of this Chamber whether during my service here I had seen in the case of any Senator on either side of this Chamber any bias or prejudice in dealing with any questions connected with the land-grant railroads of this country growing out of any supposed relation or any actual relation which he had held as attorney toward any of these roads, I should unhesitatingly answer that no such thing had come under my observation, nor had I seen anything that led me to suspect the existence of such a state of affairs.

On the other hand, while I am not as sensitive as some members of the profession have expressed themselves to be here to-day, I do very highly appreciate the honorable record and high personal and official character which the bar of this country has maintained. I believe that the instruction which every member of the bar well taught in his profession has in the principles of equity, in the duties and obligations of trustees, makes him peculiarly sensitive to the duties of any trust, public or private. I should rather expect in the case of a conscientious man that if he had had such a prior relation to any one of these corporations as is indicated in the bill, that instead of a resulting prejudice in favor of the corporation, the bias in his public action would be against it. I know to-day many judges who under the laws of our States are disqualified to sit in any case where a relative is a party before whom I would be more than willing to try a case against such a relative. I would be willing that he should try it because his relation to my opponent, so far from operating in his favor, would be very apt to incline the judge to give the decision against him lest he might be suspected of being influenced in his decision by this relationship. But the law does not proceed upon that basis; it disqualifies, and properly, too.

I for one am in favor of this bill. If there are here or outside of this Chamber honest, well-meaning, even though misinformed, people who believe that such professional relations are likely to influence the mind of the legislator, then we should disabuse that prejudice, and pass some appropriate and well-regulated law against it.

But, Mr. President, we have here to-day, from lawyers who have no superiors in this Chamber if anywhere in this country, heard the question raised as to the constitutionality of the proposed law. We have from another Senator a proposition to enlarge its scope. Under these circumstances I desire to suggest whether the friends of the bill can not by consent reconsider this vote and let the bill go to some proper committee for consideration. I can not myself feel that any Senator here, upon cool reflection, would be willing to assert that due consideration would not be given to this measure in committee or that we should not have at an early and appropriate day an opportunity to pass upon it after it has had the careful and deliberate attention of a committee, and after they have had an opportunity to submit to the Senate in the form of a report their views upon the constitutionality as well as upon the advisability of this legislation.

So that, without at all desiring or intending to withdraw or modify the assent I gave in my previous vote to what I understand to be the simple proposition of the bill, I shall vote for its reconsideration, and I hope we shall have consent that this action may be taken and that the bill may have its due and orderly and appropriate consideration in the proper committee.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to make one or two observations with reference to the vote which I shall cast on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut.

This is very important legislation; I do not know of a more important bill that has been introduced for the consideration of this body than the one which we are now considering. It is true also that this very important bill was not referred to a committee and that it passed this body without debate.

I desire to say, however, that this bill is a very short one. There is not an ambiguous or a doubtful phrase in it. Its meaning is plain to the comprehension of any lawyer or of any citizen of good common sense. We have heard it debated now on a motion to reconsider. I have listened to that debate with that care and attention which were due to the importance of the subject and to the distinguished character of the speakers who have participated in it. I have heard nothing said which tends to change my first impression in reference to the bill. All that has been said confirms me in, if I may use the expression, my impressions at first blush; and allow me to say on that point right here, that on questions of honor, questions of that delicate character, the first impressions of the mind are nearly always correct.

It appears that upon the mere reading of this bill thirty-seven members of this body against eleven thought it ought to be passed without even a reference to a committee. I think the impressions, that the honorable impressions first coming upon the minds of Senators upon the reading of the bill are the best, and are those which we ought to stand by; and for that reason I see no propriety in a further consideration of the measure by a reference to a committee.

It is true the bill might be enlarged; I think I would vote to enlarge it, but this enlargement can come from a separate and independent bill. The Senate by a very large majority has given its sanction to this bill; the Senate by a majority refused to commit this bill to one of its committees for consideration, and now after we have done that, and after the lapse of a week on this short bill, without a single doubt or ambiguity as to its meaning, if we should turn around and undo what we have done the impression would not be very favorable to the Senate.

For these reasons and for the reasons urged by the Senator from Kentucky and by the Senator from North Carolina I feel bound to vote against the reconsideration of this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). Mr. President, I have but a word to say about this matter.

The universal rule of the Senate is always to refer every measure to which any objection is made to a committee. Committees are organized for the purpose of considering proposed legislation; and it is very rare in the Senate that any proposition, however plain and simple, that is presented here, if any Senator demands it, is not referred as a matter of course. That is the ordinary mode of proceeding, which ought never to be departed from in my judgment where there is a single objection.

When this bill was introduced and the motion was made to refer it I supposed that that course would be adopted; and if Senators had then pointed out any objections to the bill no doubt the motion to refer would have carried as a matter of course, as I think it ought to have been. I voted to refer it simply upon a doubt whether any bill ought to pass except upon a reference to a committee. However, the Senate decided not to refer it, and now a motion to reconsider is made by a Senator who voted for the bill.

Here again is a familiar rule of the Senate. A motion to reconsider is carried almost as a matter of course. I have seen a motion to reconsider carried by a unanimous vote when the Senate was most decidedly against it. If a Senator at any stage of a bill moves to reconsider it, it has been the established custom of the Senate, with very rare exceptions, to reconsider pro forma and take the vote over again if necessary.

This bill meets with my hearty approval. I have listened to most of the debate, and I do not see any objection to the bill itself. It seems to me that when a Senator comes here, having been previously employed by a railroad company whose interests are involved in our consideration, he would naturally ordinarily dissever that connection, so as to be entirely free and unbiased. But there may be times and there may be occasions when that is impossible to be done. A man is elected a Senator of the United States, known to be an attorney for a corporation, or, as I am, a trustee for a corporation, a director. In such cases he is known to have that interest, and it does not prevent his election. Almost every man who has a seat in the Senate has more or less interests that may be directly or indirectly passed upon by the body itself. In such a case if he has a direct interest he should refrain from voting on the question.

Under the circumstances it does seem to me—and I shall vote in accordance with that idea—that as a motion to reconsider has been made it should be allowed, although I would vote for the identical bill if brought back at any stage just as it is. I shall vote for this bill whenever it is brought before the Senate, because I believe the principle of the bill is right; but under the circumstances I think it would be wise for the Senate, if possible by general consent, to refer the bill to a committee, with the certainty that there will be no delay in reporting upon it. If there are any objections to it in details, if there are any doubtful questions of constitution or law involved, they will be reported to us, and then we can deliberately vote upon the measure.

There is no danger that this bill will be smothered. On the contrary, any committee to which it is referred would probably act upon any objections that were made to it and would pass upon them according to their judgment and report the result promptly back to the Senate.

Mr. KENNA. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. KENNA. Suppose the bill should be referred to a committee a majority of whom were against it, what chance should we have of securing its consideration?

Mr. SHERMAN. They would be bound to report, and no committee would dare fail to report a bill that a majority of the Senate wanted, for it is the easiest thing in the world for any Senator to move to discharge the committee from its further consideration.

Mr. KENNA. If he can get the floor and get consideration of the motion; but does not the Senator know that the committee-rooms of the Senate are loaded down to-day with bills that have lain there the whole of this session, because the majority of the committee do not choose to consider them?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator rises and says that a certain bill which he believes a majority of the Senate are in favor of is not reported by any committee, a motion to discharge the committee is not an unusual motion. I have made it half a dozen times, and whenever that motion is submitted and a majority are in favor of a committee acting upon a measure promptly, they will always vote that way and always recall the bill and then pass it.

Therefore we must not suppose that because a committee is opposed to a bill they will not report it. If we are suspicious of each other so much as that, if we can not trust each other, still the Senate has the power at all times to discharge a committee. It is an ordinary motion which can be made at any time pending any question, for you can move to discharge a committee from the consideration of a bill at any stage. Committees are the mere organs, the mere agents of the body, convenient agencies for the transaction of business. Under the circumstances I shall vote to reconsider the vote on the passage of this bill although I am in favor of the bill, and I think that the criticisms which have been made upon it are rather too fine. I can not myself appreciate their justice or correctness. At the same time I will vote to reconsider on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut and send this bill to any committee of the body that may be chosen, with the expectation that that committee will promptly report it in a reasonable time, and when it is brought back to us we shall vote according to our convictions.

That is the course I shall pursue, although I have seen no reason to doubt the correctness of my vote on the passage of the bill. I shall vote for it again. I shall vote, however, for the motion to reconsider, to give to those who are opposed to the bill an opportunity of presenting their objections to one of the standing committees, with the expectation that that committee will do its duty and return the bill in due time to the Senate for its action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. The roll will be called.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. CAMDEN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] was paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and I was paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. In order to enable us to vote I have transferred the respective pairs, so that my colleague is now paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). My colleague [Mr. BROWN] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. HOAR (when the name of Mr. DAWES was called). My colleague [Mr. DAWES] is absent in Massachusetts. I am not informed, but I presume if he were present he would vote "yea." I infer that from his general course.

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I announce that I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BUTLER (when Mr. HAMPTON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN] on this question.

Mr. BOWEN. In connection with the announcement of that pair, I desire to say that I should vote in favor of the reconsideration if at liberty to do so.

Mr. BUTLER, Perhaps I ought to have stated that.

Mr. EDMUNDS (when Mr. MORRILL'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. MORRILL] is absent from illness; I believe he is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. As his colleague has stated he would vote "yea" if he were here, and as I would vote the same way, I cast my vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER], who is absent, but as I am assured that he would vote "yea" if present, I vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is detained at home by sickness. His pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] has been announced.

Mr. GRAY (when Mr. SAULSBURY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SAULSBURY] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). Since I cast my vote I have been requested to pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who is unavoidably absent from the Chamber; I therefore withdraw my vote. [After a pause.] I ask whether a pair has been announced for the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No pair has been announced for him.

Mr. MANDERSON. If that be so, I will announce a pair between the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. I therefore will record my vote in the affirmative. I am told that the Senator from Virginia was called away by illness.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Allison,	Frye,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Gray,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Sewell,
Call,	Harrison,	Palmer,	Sherman,
Chace,	Hawley,	Payne,	Spooner,
Conger,	Hoar,	Platt,	Stanford,
Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,	Teller,
Edmunds,	Logan,	Ransom,	Wilson of Iowa.
Evarts,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,

NAYS—21.

Beck,	Colquitt,	Kenna,	Walthall,
Berry,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Whitthorne,
Blackburn,	George,	Maxey,	Wilson of Md.
Butler,	Harris,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Hearst,	Van Wyck,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vest,

ABSENT—24.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Morrill,
Bowen,	Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Pike,
Brown,	Gibson,	Mahone,	Plumb,
Camden,	Gorman,	Miller,	Sabin,
Cameron,	Hale,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Saulsbury,
Dawes,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Voorhees.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BECK. I do not think we have got that far back yet. The bill has passed, and the motion to reconsider just acted on was a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I take it the bill can be referred at any stage of the proceedings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill can be referred at this stage. It is in order to move to refer it at any stage before its passage.

Mr. BECK. After its third reading?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is so advised. The question is on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays on that. It might as well go to the tomb of the Capulets at once.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VANCE. Let us have the bill read once more; I should like to take a farewell of it. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to state to the Senator from North Carolina, as I happen to be chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, that so far as any effort of mine can accomplish it, if this bill should be referred to that committee, the Senator from North Carolina shall have the pleasure of having the bill back again within eight days.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). My colleague is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. BECK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. CAMDEN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If my colleague were present, and not paired, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The roll-call having being concluded, the result was announced—yeas 30, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—30.

Allison,	Frye,	Manderson,	Sewell,
Blair,	Gray,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Sherman,
Call,	Harrison,	Palmer,	Spooner,
Chace,	Hawley,	Payne,	Stanford,
Conger,	Hoar,	Platt,	Teller,
Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa.
Edmunds,	Logan,	Ransom,
Evarts,	McMillan,	Sawyer,

NAYS—21.

Beck,	Colquitt,	Kenna,	Vest,
Berry,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Walthall,
Blackburn,	George,	Maxey,	Whitthorne.
Butler,	Harris,	Riddleberger,
Cockrell,	Hearst,	Vance,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Van Wyck,

ABSENT—25.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Mahone,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Gibson,	Miller,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	Gorman,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Voorhees,
Cameron,	Hale,	Morgan,	Wilson of Md.
Camden,	Hampton,	Morrill,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Pike,
Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,

So the bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8023) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a bridge by the municipalities of Menominee, Mich., and Marinette, Wis., over Menominee River; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1016) granting an increase of pension to Abel Comstock;

An act (S. 1382) for the relief of Lydia O. Hutchings;

An act (S. 1466) granting an increase of pension to Stephen R. Smith;

An act (S. 1467) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret Smith; and

An act (S. 2078) for the relief of Coronna, Taussig & Co., and others.

ALFRED DENNY—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the unfinished business which is now before the Senate, the Chair will lay before the Senate messages from the President of the United States.

The Chief Clerk read the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate:

I return herewith without approval Senate bill No. 1192 entitled "An act granting a pension to Alfred Denny."

It appears that the claimant entered the United States military service as captain and assistant quartermaster of volunteers on the 12th day of June, 1863. After remaining in such position for less than a year he resigned to accept a civil position.

The short record of his military service discloses no mention of any accident or disability. But twenty years after his resignation and on the 12th day of March, 1884, he reappears as an applicant for a pension, and alleges in his declaration filed in the Pension Bureau that in August, 1863, while in the line of duty he was, by a sudden movement of the horse he was riding, thrown forward upon the horn of his saddle and thereby received a rupture in his right side, which at some time and in a manner wholly unexplained subsequently caused a rupture in his left side also.

The number of instances in which those of our soldiers who rode horses during the war were injured by being thrown forward upon their saddles indicate that those saddles were very dangerous contrivances.

I am satisfied there is not a particle of merit in this claim, and no facts are presented to me which entitle it to charitable consideration.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 22, 1886.

The message was ordered to be printed and lie on the table.

WILLIAM H. BECK—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate:

I hereby return without approval Senate bill No. 1400 entitled "An act granting a pension to William H. Beck."

This claimant enlisted in 1861. He re-enlisted as a veteran volunteer January 1, 1864, and was finally mustered out April 20, 1866. In all this time of service his record shows no medical treatment or claim of disability. Indeed an abstract of his re-enlistment January 1, 1864, shows a medical examination and perfect soundness.

Notwithstanding all this, he filed his declaration on the 4th day of April, 1879, nearly thirteen years after his discharge, alleging that in June, 1863, he incurred epilepsy, to which he has been subejct since, and that his fits have been from one to ten days apart. To connect this in some way with his military service he stated that the doctor at a hospital said his epilepsy was caused "by jar to the head from heavy firing."

Six months after this alleged "jar" and his consequent epilepsy he re-enlisted upon a medical certificate of perfect soundness and served more than two years thereafter.

Every conceded fact in the case negatives the allegations of his declaration, and the rejection of his claim necessarily followed.

If this disease can be caused in the manner here detailed, its manifestations are such as to leave no doubt of its existence, and it seems to me simply impossible under the circumstances detailed that there should be any lack of evidence to support the claim upon which this bill is predicated.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 22, 1886.

MARY J. NOTTAGE—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate:

I hereby return without approval Senate bill No. 2005, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mary J. Nottage."

The beneficiary named in this bill is the widow of Thomas Nottage, who enlisted in August, 1861, and was discharged for disability September 17, 1862. The assistant surgeon of his regiment upon his discharge certified the cause to be "disease of the urinary organs," which had troubled him several years.

He died of consumption January 8, 1879, nearly seventeen years after his discharge, without ever having made any application for a pension.

In 1880 his widow made an application for pension, alleging that he contracted in the service "malarial poisoning, causing remittent fever, piles, general debility, consumption, and death," and that he left two children, both born after his discharge, one in 1866 and the other in 1874.

The only medical testimony which has been brought to my attention touching his condition since his discharge is that of a single physician, to the effect that he attended him from the year 1873 to the time of his death in 1879. He states that the patient had, during that time, "repeated attacks of remittent fever and irritability of bladder with organic deposits;" that "in the spring of 1878 he had sore throat and cough, which resulted in consumption, of which he died.

The claim of the widow was rejected in July, 1885, on the ground that "the soldier's death was not the result of his service."

I am satisfied that this conclusion of the Pension Bureau was correct.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 22, 1886.

MARRILLA PARSONS—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith without approval Senate bill No. 342, entitled "An act granting a pension to Marilla Parsons, of Detroit, Mich."

No claim has ever been made for a pension in this case to the Pension Bureau, probably for the reason that there is no pretext that the beneficiary named is entitled to a pension under any general law.

Daniel P. Parsons was her step-son, who enlisted in 1861 and died of consumption on the 13th day of August, 1864.

There are no special circumstances to distinguish this case from many others whose claims might be made by step-parents, and there are no facts stated in support of the conclusion embodied in the committee's report that the soldier was taken sick from exposure incident to the service.

To depart from all rules regulating the granting of pensions by such an enactment as is proposed would establish a precedent which could not fail to cause embarrassment and perplexity.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 22, 1886.

HARRIET WELCH—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 1383, entitled "An act granting a pension to Harriet Welch."

The beneficiary named in this bill asks for a pension as the widow of Syraneous Welch, who was wounded in 1864 while in the service and was pensioned therefor in 1867. In 1876 his rate of pension was increased. In 1877 he appears to have applied to have his pension again increased. It is alleged that upon such application he was directed to appear before an examining board or a surgeon at Green Bay, Wis., for examination, and in returning to his home from that place on the 7th day of September, 1877, he fell from the cars and was killed, his remains having been found on the track the next morning.

No one appears to have seen the accident, but it is claimed that he could not depend upon his wounded leg, and that it "gave way many times and caused him to fall." From this statement the inference seems to have been indulged that his death was attributable to the wound he had received thirteen years before.

The widow's claim, based upon this state of facts, was rejected by the Pension Bureau, on the ground that the accident resulting in death was not the result of his military service; and on an appeal taken to the Secretary of the Interior from that determination the same was sustained.

Though this widow admits that prior to her marriage with the deceased soldier she had married another man whom she could only say she believed to be dead, I believe her case to be a pitiable one, and wish that I could join in her relief. But, unfortunately, official duty can not always be well done when directed solely by sympathy and charity.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 22, 1886.

JAMES BUTLER—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate:

I hereby return without approval Senate bill No. 2025, entitled "An act granting a pension to James Butler."

This claimant was enrolled as a private in a New Hampshire regiment August 23, 1864, but on the organization of his company, on the 12th day of September, 1864, he was discharged on account of a fracture of his leg which happened on the 11th day of September, 1864.

It appears that before the organization of the company to which he was attached, and on the 10th day of September, he obtained permission to leave the place of rendezvous for the purpose of visiting his family, and was to return the next day. At a very early hour in the morning, either while preparing to return or actually on his way, he fell into a new cellar and broke his leg. It is said that the leg fractured is now shorter than the other.

His claim for pension was rejected in December, 1864, by the Pension Bureau, and its action was affirmed in 1871, upon the ground that the injury was received while the claimant was on an individual furlough, and therefore not in the line of duty.

Considering the fact that neither his regiment nor his company had at the time of his accident been organized, and that he was in no sense in the military service of the United States, and that his injury was received while on a visit, and not in the performance of duty, I can see no pretext for allowing a pension in this case.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 22, 1886.

ROBERT HOLSEY—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 1288, entitled "An act granting a pension to Robert Holsey."

This claimant enlisted in 1862, and, though he appears to have been sick on two occasions during his term of service, he remained with his company until it was mustered out in 1865.

This soldier was really sick during the time he remained in the Army, and in this respect his claim for a pension has a better origin than many that are presented. But the fact must be recognized, I suppose, that every army ailment does not necessarily result in death or disability.

In 1882, seventeen years after his discharge, this soldier filed his declaration for a pension, alleging that in 1863 he contracted intermittent fever, affecting his lungs, kidneys, and stomach.

A board of surgeons, upon an examination made in 1882, find disease of kidneys, but no indication of lung and stomach trouble; and a medical referee reported in 1885 that there had been no disease of the stomach and lungs since the filing of the claim, and that the difficulty affecting the kidneys had no relation to the sickness for which the claimant had been treated while in the Army.

I am of the opinion that a correct conclusion was reached when the application for pension in this case was denied by the Pension Bureau.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 22, 1886.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives insisting on its disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK.

NATIONAL CEMETERY AT KNOXVILLE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5866) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Knoxville, Tenn., and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. LOGAN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendment to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. LOGAN, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. COCKRELL.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8033) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a bridge by the municipalities of Menominee, Mich., and Marinette, Wis., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, inviting attention to Senate bill No. 2620, to repeal so much of the act of June 20, 1878, as provides for the appointment of second lieutenants in the Signal Corps, and giving reasons why the same should not become a law; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

POSTAGE ON FOURTH-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Mr. CHACE. Last week I gave notice that I should ask the Senate to indulge me in a few remarks to-day on the bill (S. 1079) to regulate the rate of postage on fourth-class matter, but I perceive it is the desire of Senators to get through with the land bill, and I will postpone my remarks until some day early next week.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of citizens of Independence, Mo., praying that a pension be granted to Claiborn Webb, a private in Capt. James Chiles's company, in the Florida war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Lathrop, Mo., and a petition of citizens of Saint Joseph, Mo., respectfully urging the passage of what is known as the "oleomargarine bill," with all the provisions embraced in the same as it recently passed the House of Representatives; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GRAY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 821) for the relief of James M. Wilbur, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2024) for the relief of Thomas Smith, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

VETOES OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. LOGAN. Have the bills returned by the President been referred to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have not been. They are lying on the table. A motion to refer would be in order.

Mr. LOGAN. Prior to their reference there is one remark I wish to make. One of the grounds stated for a veto in one case at least is that the party was absent on an individual furlough. The furlough of a soldier from the Army is as much an order and is as much in the line of duty as if he was in the presence of the enemy, and I have never known such a construction given before to an order of that character as that a person on such furlough was not in the line of duty. I merely wish to say that much.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall not say anything to lead to any general discussion of this matter of the vetoes of the President in which he so extensively indulges in pension cases. It would seem to be a congenial labor; and certainly if his sense of duty inclines him not only to veto these bills, but to indulge himself in the most extraordinary terms of expression toward the two Houses of Congress, it is a matter of official propriety with reference to which he must judge for himself. But many of the cases which have been passed upon adversely by the President I have since examined with such care and impartiality as I am capable of, and I desire now to say that the President vetoes indiscriminately as meritorious cases as the average of those we have been accustomed to pass by the action of both Houses of Congress after careful investigation and by the approval of the Chief Magistrate for so long a time as I have known anything of the allowance of private pension claims by the action of the Government.

We are endeavoring to get on as well with this business as we can. No bill has been reported, so far as I know, without careful scrutiny and without an earnest desire simply to do justice rather than to do only mercy.

I think that the cases which have been reported to this Congress and acted upon by the Senate at this session have been as carefully considered as they ever were. From such examination as I have made I can say that unless in one or two instances where there have been clerical mistakes, such as occur in the transaction of all business everywhere, no one has been returned to us where there is any evidence or taint of fraud as far as the testimony indicates or in my belief where there was lack of substantial merit in the bill itself. The committee will as soon as possible report these cases, or some of them, back to the Senate.

The whole amount of money that would be called for by all the pension cases that have passed Congress at the present session can not be over two or three hundred thousand dollars annually; and the complaint that there is being any general raid upon the Treasury, or the revenues, and the power of the country to bear taxation on this account is entirely without foundation.

There has been a good deal of criticism of the Pension Office in our time, and so far as I know very just criticism. I believe that the Pension Office is not only now but has for a long time been organized and managed to reject claims when it possibly could be done. I know no such infamous court of chancery in existence in any civilized nation as I believe that Pension Office has come to be in its practical dealings with the cases of the soldiers of this country. Here is one instance that came to my knowledge only very lately. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] investigated the case, and he informed me in the course of the session of the committee yesterday in regard to it, where, in the instance of a soldier admitted to be sick from disability contracted in the service, his wife went to a druggist to have a prescription filled and by accident the druggist filled the prescription with poison instead of the remedy which was meant to be administered in the ordinary course of treatment of this man for a disease contracted in the service, and he died. An application was made for a pension on the ground that the man died of disease contracted in the service, and the Pension Office in the administration of the pension law rejected that claim on the ground that the disease of which the man died was not contracted in the service.

It may be said, by a refinement of technicality, that that was strictly correct. I only speak of it as illustrative of the spirit in which the law has been in many cases administered.

More than once both Houses of Congress have passed an act expressive of the sense of the legislative power that the action of the United States in mustering in after medical examination soldiers to the service of the United States should be conclusive evidence on the question of physical soundness at the date of muster-in. Acting upon that presumption as the general sentiment of Congress and the country, the Committee on Pensions has been less exact than the Pension Office has been in requiring evidence over and over explicit beyond the mere fact of muster-in as to the soundness of the soldier at that date, and we have oftentimes treated in the report of cases the fact of service, especially if it was long service, as conclusive evidence against the Government that the man was fit to render the service which he did render, and have not gone behind that time to ascertain whether there was any headache or possible dizziness or liability to disease before. We may, perhaps, have been too liberal.

But without specifying the kind of hardship we have had occasion to relieve against to any extent, I think the general assertion that the somewhat unusual activity of the committees of both Houses of Congress at the present session—the House of Representatives having passed at least, I think, three times as many original bills as the Senate—is due to the fact that there has been from various reasons during many years, especially on account of the spirit in which the Pension Office has been administered, an accumulation of cases for which remedy should be granted under special acts, and we have tried to do it. But many of the assertions of the President, or at least some of them, in his veto messages are incorrect as matters of fact. We have in the present Congress passed only about six hundred cases, when in a former session of Congress we passed almost four hundred, and the President will see by examining the records that many of his statements are inaccurate as to matters of fact.

These things, or some of them, so far as it is worth while to take the public time, will be developed further on. But what I say now I enter as a protest against any accusation upon Congress from any source whatever, so far as I can judge, of any heedlessness in the consideration of these cases or any disposition to palter with the sacredness of the public treasure.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from New Hampshire connected with his explanation. I think he must be mistaken—at any rate I wish to give him an opportunity to correct himself if he be—in giving the annual value of the pensions granted by this Congress. He said two or three hundred thousand dollars. How much does he think the average is?

Mr. BLAIR. I do not believe the pensions that may have been granted can average $200 apiece.

Mr. HAWLEY. That would make $120,000 a year.

Mr. BLAIR. I reckoned it I thought liberally in my own mind; I thought $200,000 would cover the entire amount we have voted. There is a general pension expenditure of the country which we hear charged over and over as being from sixty to seventy million dollars annually. This is petty, trifling, contemptible work. That is not stigmatizing this performance with any too great severity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No motion has yet been made for the reference of the veto messages.

On motion of Mr. BLAIR, it was Ordered, That the messages received from the President of the United States on the 21st instant vetoing the following bills be printed and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 2223) granting a pension to Elizabeth S. De Krafft;
A bill (S. 226) granting a pension to Margaret D. Marchand;
A bill (S. 183) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins, late of Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers; and A bill (S. 1584) for the relief of Cornelia R. Schenck.

Ordered, That the messages received from the President of the United States this day vetoing the following bills be referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 1192) granting a pension to Alfred Denny;
A bill (S. 1400) granting a pension to William H. Beck;
A bill (S. 2005) granting a pension to Mary J. Nottage;
A bill (S. 342) granting a pension to Marilla Parsons, of Detroit, Mich.;
A bill (S. 1383) granting a pension to Harriet Welch;
A bill (S. 2025) granting a pension to James Butler; and
A bill (S. 1288) granting a pension to Robert Holsey.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 209) for the relief of the legal representatives of John M. Robeson, deceased, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GEDDES, Mr. RICHARDSON, and Mr. LYMAN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2281) granting to railroads the right of way through the Indian reservation in Northern Montana; and

A bill (H. R. 1341) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Natchez, Miss.

PUBLIC LAND LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendmeni proposed by Mr. PLUMB, in section 1, line 20, of the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands, before the word "made" to insert the word "heretofore;" so as to read:

That all entries made under the pre-emption laws, on which final proof and payment may have been heretofore made and certificates issued, and to which there are no adverse claims originating prior to final entry, and which may have been sold, after final entry, to bona fide purchasers, for a valuable consideration, shall be confirmed and patented upon presentation of satisfactory proof to the Land Department of such sale.

Mr. PLUMB. Before that is voted upon I desire to change the amendment to a different form, which will accomplish the same purpose, by withdrawing the amendment in line 20 and inserting in line 22, after the word "sold," the words "prior to the passage of this act," so that the amendment will relate to sales made prior to the passage of this act and after final entry. That I think will not only better accomplish the purpose I have in view, but meet the views of many Senators who have spoken to me about it better than the amendment which I before proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 22, after the word "sold," it is proposed to insert "prior to the passage of this act;" so as to read:

That all entries made under the pre-emption laws, on which final proof and payment may have been made and certificates issued, and to which there are no adverse claims originating prior to final entry, and which may have been sold prior to the passage of this act after final entry, to bona fide purchasers, for a valuable consideration, shall be confirmed and patented upon presentation of satisfactory proof to the Land Department of such sale.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator from Kansas will concede, I presume, that the amendment as now modified by him changes the existing law.

Mr. PLUMB. I think myself it does change the existing law, but about that matter there is a dispute.

This bill is to accomplish certain specific things, which I think are in the line of this amendment. It is a bill for peace, for quiet, to prevent people being tripped up unwarily, and to preserve as far as we can the right which by lapse of time might be disturbed by unwise action on the part of the Land Department.

While I believe with the Senator from Oregon that the law is now precisely as we declare it to be in this bill—believe it because it has been so decided by a judge of the Supreme Court as I think; believe it because it is fairly nominated in the section of the Revised Statutes which provides for pre-emptions—at the same time, inasmuch as the Department disputes that point and as Congress can not settle it except in some such way as this, I propose that we shall settle it and limit ourselves to transactions which have heretofore taken place, leaving those who enter land hereafter under any of the statutes of the United States to be governed by their own views of what the law is and take their own chances.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator from Kansas admits that this proposition is to make a radical change in the law as it has existed on this subject since the passage of the pre-emption act in 1841. That is what it amounts to. If Congress ought to do that, of course they will do it; but I insist that it is a very important matter. It is a radical change in the existing law. It is a change in the law, as I said, as it has stood on the statute-book since 1841 in reference to the rights of parties who have completed their entries under any of the land laws of the United States and in regard to the rights of purchasers who may purchase lands from parties who have thus completed their entries.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] yesterday in referring to this matter insisted that I was wrong in the construction given to the statute and to existing law on this subject, and he quoted from a case in the Supreme Court of the United States, a very old case, decided over a quarter of a century ago I presume, as it is reported in 20 Howard—a long time ago—in which something of that kind was asserted. But that has been entirely changed by numerous decisions of the Supreme Court since then, and I have before me any number of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which lay down the doctrine that when a party has made his entry and received his certificate he is the owner of the land. The land is then segregated from the public domain, and he is the owner of it just as much as he is the owner of it after he has received his patent, and he has then a right to sell it, a right to mortgage it, and any purchaser acting in good faith has the right to purchase it. Now the proposition is to change that whole business.

I will call attention to one or two of the later decisions of the Supreme Court on that point. I call the attention of the Senator from Florida to the case of Quinby vs. Conlon, reported in 104 United States Reports, page 420, in which the Supreme Court of the United States, in discussing this very question, referred to a former decision of that court, reported in 14 Wallace, the case of Myers vs. Croft, and in this late case, reported in 104 United States Reports, the Supreme Court said this:

> The act of Congress (section 2263 of the Revised Statutes) forbids the sale of pre-emption rights to the public lands acquired by settlement and improvement. The law declares that all transfers and assignments of rights thus obtained prior to the issuing of patents shall be null and void. This court held, in Myers vs. Croft, looking at the purpose of prohibition, that it did not forbid the sale of the land after the entry was effected; that is, after the right to a patent had become vested, but did apply to all prior transfers. When the land has been purchased and paid for and a final certificate issued it is no longer the property of the United States, but of the purchaser.

There have been several decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States since that time indorsing the doctrine laid down in Myers vs. Croft and in Quinby vs. Conlon. There is a provision of the Revised Statutes that no transfer shall be made, prior to patent issued, of a pre-emption right. The Supreme Court held that that related simply and purely to the transfer of a right of pre-emption and not to the transfer of the land after final entry had been made, the money paid, and a certificate issued, and that rule has been followed ever since by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, where does that leave matters? Simply here, that when a man has lived his time under the homestead law or under the pre-emption law or under any other of the land laws, paid his money, made his final proof before the register and receiver, and received his certificate, then he has a right to sell the land.

Now the proposition is to change that and to say that he can not sell the land; or, in other words, that whatever good faith may characterize the transaction in a purchase made at any time before patent issued, yet the purchaser is to be held in terror all the years that the entryman is waiting for his patent. The effect of this change in the law would be to prevent any transfer of lands from the owner, because he is the owner after he has complied with the law and received his certificate, until he has received the evidence of ownership, the patent. This he may not receive, and it is not received as a rule for years and years after he has made his final entry. The proposition is to continue the rule as to all past entries, and to change the law and apply a new rule as to future entries.

I call attention to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Carroll vs. Safford, 3 Howard's Reports, where the Supreme Court said, even at that early day:

> When the purchaser of land from the United States has paid for it, and received a final certificate, it is taxable property, although a patent has not yet issued for it.
>
> Taxation upon lands so held is not a violation of the ordinance of 1787, as "an interference with the primary disposition of the sale by Congress," nor is it a tax on the lands of the United States.

And further:

> It was competent for the State to assess and tax such lands at their full value as the absolute property of the holder of the final certificate, and in default of payment to sell them as if he owned them in fee.

Again:

> When the land was purchased and paid for it was no longer the property of the United States, but of the purchaser. He held it for a final certificate, which could no more be canceled by the United States than a patent.
>
> It is true, if the land had been previously sold by the United States or reserved from sale, the certificate or patent might be canceled by the United States as having been issued through mistake. In this respect there is no difference between the certificate holder and the patentee. (Cornelius vs. Kessell, 58 Wis., 241.)

These decisions of the Supreme Court have been followed by decisions of all the Western State courts, every one of them, there is not a single exception; and to adopt the provision now proposed in the bill is to change the whole order of things in the Western country, where the public domain has been taken up and will be taken up in the future by settlers, and to the disadvantage, I think, of the settlers. It seems to me that it is imposing a restriction upon settlers that ought not to be imposed on them, by providing that they can not sell their lands or mortgage their lands and raise a few dollars with which to improve them until the patent has actually issued, and that is precisely the effect of this proposition.

In this connection I should like to ask my friend from Kansas what is meant by section 8 of the bill. I desire to know to what the first provision of that section applies. The first part of section 8 provides:

> That in all cases under the pre-emption and homestead laws, and under this act, all contests or protests on the part of the Government, or any individual, concerning the land entered, shall be instituted within ninety days after final entry and issue of the duplicate receiver's receipt, and not afterwards.

What I wish to know is whether that applies only to entries made in the past, or does it apply generally?

Mr. PLUMB. That will apply, I think, to future cases.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is what I supposed.

Mr. DOLPH. I think that has been the practice of the office. They not only allow contests, but send out agents to make reports.

Mr. PLUMB. The idea is to have some time within which the matter can be settled.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Another clause farther down in section 8 provides:

> That after final proof of the claimant and the issuing of the duplicate receiver's receipt, if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that fraud has entered into the title so acquired by the claimant, unless it shall appear that the land has been sold or conveyed to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, the Commissioner shall suspend the issuing of the patent for the same, and file with the United States Attorney-General notice of such suspension of the patent, with his reasons therefor.

Does that apply to the past only or to the future?

Mr. PLUMB. I think that is made to apply to suspensions heretofore made so far as the latter clause is concerned in regard to the bringing of suits. It would be prospective except for the clause commencing in line 23.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The clause commencing in line 23 reads as follows:

> This section shall apply to all cases of suspended entries heretofore made under the United States pre-emption and homestead acts.

That limits the operation of the whole section.

Mr. PLUMB. That applies the section to cases which have heretofore occurred.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Then the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas is not in harmony with the rest of the bill. I think the clause commencing in line 23 simply makes the section retroactive, whereas without that clause it would not be retroactive but prospective.

It seems to me that we ought not to do this simply because the Secretary of the Interior, or some clerk in the Land Office, or somebody else, has made a suggestion to the Committee on Public Lands, to which the committee of course feels disposed to defer, and the effect of which suggestion if we adopt it here is to make this radical change in the law. We ought to hesitate before we adopt it. The Senator from Kansas himself, the chairman of the committee, has indicated by what he has said that he is inclined to believe that I am right about this matter. He admits certainly that I am right in the construction I have given to the existing law, and he expresses somewhat of a doubt as to the propriety of this proposed legislation, and suggests that it is simply out of deference to some suggestion which was made from the Land Department. I insist that it is wrong.

I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate any further. I thought it my duty in justice to the people whom I in part represent here to call attention to the matter, and I have nothing more to say.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I am very anxious that the bill should be brought to a vote and I do not care to detain the Senate; but it is proper that I should say something in regard to the provisions which have been commented on by the Senator from Oregon.

I believe myself that the law is now exactly as the Senator from Oregon says he thinks it is; that is to say, that any one who has bought a pre-emption claim, after final entry, innocently and for a valuable consideration, the land having been subject to entry, takes a good title of estoppel against the Government, no matter if the original entry was conceived in fraud. I believe that to be the logic of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Myers vs. Croft, from which I quoted the other day, and I shall now quote the last paragraph of that decision for the purpose of showing that the Supreme Court of the United States do not now hold the opinion that they appear to have held at the date of the rendition of the decision quoted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] yesterday.

Mr. CALL. In what volume is the case found?

Mr. PLUMB. The volume is 13 Wallace, the case of Myers vs. Croft, decided in the December term, 1871. This decision is in regard to the effect of a succeeding section of the pre-emption law, which prohibited the sale of the pre-emption right at any time before the issuance of the patent. I shall read the preceding paragraph also. Judge Davis, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

> The inquiry is, what did the Legislature intend by this prohibition? Did it mean to disqualify the pre-emptor who had entered the land from selling it at all until he had obtained his patent, or did the disability extend only to the assignment of the pre-emption right? Looking at the language employed, as well as the policy of Congress on the subject, it would seem that the interdiction was intended to apply to the right secured by the act, and did not go further. This was the right to pre-empt a quarter-section of land by settling upon and improving it at the minimum price, no matter what its value might be, when the time limited for perfecting the pre-emption expired. This right was valuable and, independently of the legislation of Congress, assignable. The object of Congress was attained when the pre-emptor went, with clean hands, to the Land Office and proved up his right and paid the Government for his land. Restriction upon the power of alienation after this would injure the pre-emptor, and could serve no important purpose of public policy.

It is well known that patents do not issue in the usual course of business in the General Land Office until several years after the certificate of entry is given, and equally well known that nearly all the valuable lands in the new States admitted since 1841 have been taken up under the pre-emption laws, and the right to sell them freely exercised after the claim was proved up, the land paid for, and the certificate of entry received. In view of these facts we can not suppose, in the absence of an express declaration to that effect, that Congress intended to tie up these lands in the hands of the original owners until the Government should choose to issue the patent.

If it had been the purpose of Congress to attain the object contended for, it would have declared the lands themselves unalienable until the patent was granted. Instead of this, the legislation was directed against the assignment or transfer of the right secured by the act, which was the right of pre-emption, leaving the pre-emptor free to sell his land after the entry, if at that time he was, in good faith, the owner of the land, and had done nothing inconsistent with the provisions of the law on the subject."

In that case the court say fairly, as an inevitable deduction from the decision upon the preceding section, that if a man so entered land in good faith he was the owner of it, and if he was the owner of it, then the fee could not have been in the United States Government. If he was the owner of the land, of course he had a perfect right, being the owner of the land, to sell it. There can be no question that if the man had entered without fraud he would have been entitled in due time to a patent, and that the Government could not successfully attack his claim to the patent, no matter whether he had sold the land or not. But an estoppel had been set up, provided by statute, and that is to the effect that the land will not be forfeited, although the pre-emptor has sworn falsely, provided in the mean time the land has passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser for a valuable consideration. That is an estoppel which was created by the words of the statute itself. It is not left to implication nor to the application of any of the doctrines that obtain in regard to title by estoppel against private parties.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that a decision has been made to the effect that even where the title has not passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser the power of the Land Office to cancel the entry is gone.

Mr. PLUMB. I have been trying for two days to get the decision of Judge Deady, of the district court of the United States for Oregon, which I have seen and which was before the committee at the time this bill was under consideration, in which the judge holds that once the certificate has been issued the Land Office is entirely without power either to recall it or to affect it as a muniment of title; that no proceeding which can affect it can be instituted other than a proceeding in court in the name of the United States for the purpose of setting it aside.

It would not be of any value to this discussion for me to say that I believe that to be good law. The point is that here is contention. The Land Office, naturally jealous of its own jurisdiction, and especially so at this particular time, desires to hold all these cases in its grasp, and to have the power continued in it, if it ever existed, to send out special agents—Tom, Dick, and Harry, anybody whom it can hire at a dollar and a half a day, or a greater or less sum, as the case may be—to report facts upon which the Land Office may set aside the entry, no matter whether the lands had passed out of the hands of the original entryman or not.

As I said, that is a domain of contention. The committee desire to keep out as far as possible from all of these contentions and not to decide or to be called on to decide these cases, that is to say, upon the construction of law as it now is, but seek to apply a certain rule in regard to entries heretofore made which shall result in the confirmation of proper entries inevitably, not to establish a rule for the future. We deemed that course to be best, wisest, most conservative, and least calculated to get up an unnecessary debate, and to extend the discussion of the bill in the late hours of the present session of Congress.

Therefore, we have proposed in regard to a class of occurrences which have already taken place, that out of them should grow certain rights, and that the Government should be estopped in a certain way, and the committee I think unanimously believe in a way provided already by existing law. But, as Congress has the power to put that into shape in regard to past transactions, we endeavored to put it into such a shape that hereafter it would not be the subject of cavil, leaving all future entries to be governed by the law as it may hereafter be determined to be. I have no objection as far as I am concerned without speaking at all for the committee, but I think there will not be an objection there to say that it shall not be construed to affect in any way the existing statutes on the subject of pre-emption entries.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. But your amendment does have that effect.

Mr. PLUMB. Then if you disclaim it it will not have.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. What is the use of it?

Mr. PLUMB. What is the use of having a tribunal to decide a case where two men differ about it? My friend from Oregon and myself think one way about this, and the Land Office thinks the other way. Somebody has got to resolve the difficulty. The committee think that it is wiser to resolve the difficulty in regard to past entries than it is to enter the domain of future entries. This amendment is for that purpose alone. We simply submit that as to all entries heretofore made, where sales have heretofore been made to innocent purchasers for a valuable consideration, the persons who made the purchases shall have the right to have their titles perfected by the issuance of patents. In regard to the objection which is made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office upon that subject, as found in the letter addressed to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], printed in the RECORD of this morning, it will be observed that he himself is to be the judge at every single step of the proceeding whereby the rights of these persons are to be settled.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PLUMB. With pleasure.

Mr. DOLPH. Does the Senator from Kansas understand that the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior has any power under existing law to pass upon the facts except to review the evidence in the case of a homestead or pre-emption claim, new evidence taken before the local register and receiver?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know. It seems to me that that is the logic of Judge Deady's decision, as I said, because they are concluded by that evidence, of course, according to that decision.

Mr. DOLPH. Does not section 8 enlarge the powers of the Commissioner?

Mr. PLUMB. Section 8 undoubtedly does. It authorizes him to make an independent inquiry, which, according to the decision I have quoted, he can not now do.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I ask the Senator as chairman of the committee if he will agree to insert a provision that nothing herein contained shall be construed as changing the existing law as to all future cases?

Mr. PLUMB. I would have no objection to something of that kind.

Mr. DOLPH. Naming the section of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. PLUMB. To make it specific, naming section 2262 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The effect of the amendment, unless something of that kind is inserted, would be to change the law.

Mr. PLUMB. Whatever the law is now I desire it to continue to be. I believe that is the law. I believe that the law as we here declare it to be is the law already, but in order that a great mass of cases may be taken out of a controversy which would not be settled probably for generations, in order that the people all over the Western country may be relieved of the incubus, the destruction of lawsuits endless and costly, the committee said that they would apply the rule to those cases which they believe now exist as a direction to the executive officers of the Government over whom we have power. As the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] says, it is a bill of peace.

It is not the purpose at all to reflect upon any one anywhere. Claiming myself to act from proper motives, to be governed in my official actions by considerations of public policy and public interest, to know no person and no private interest of any kind whatever in the discharge of public duty, I accord to everybody else precisely what I claim for myself in that regard. Therefore I have not deemed it to be a part of my duty to reflect upon the motives of any one; but I will say that if there be not some change in the management of the General Land Office as now carried on, the litigations which will inevitably ensue will not only outlast the lifetime of any person now in the Senate Chamber who hears me, but will exhaust in the inevitable costs and expenses more than the entire value of all the lands.

The obnoxious part of it is that it will be litigation which will grow, not incidentally but directly, out of private inquiry as opposed to public inquiry, out of malicious, interested, careless, indifferent suggestions on the part of special agents having no responsibility and yet being invested with absolute power. I have a letter in my hand, which I received this morning from the clerk of the district court in Dakota, a gentleman I do not know, but I will read his letter as a sample of the cases of which I personally know—cases in my State, as affecting the actions of special agents and the general action of the Department on the question of entries which have already been made. He writes me from Lakota, Dak. The printed heading, with the date, is as follows:

[W. S. Tallant, clerk of district court, Nelson County.]

LAKOTA, DAK., June 18, 1886.

After a little introductory paragraph, which it is not necessary to read, the writer says:

The special agents of the Land Office have been causing almost every settler here trouble and expense, which they can not afford, and not doing the Government any good. Now, I speak from personal knowledge when I say that I do not think that any part of the public domain has ever been proved up with better intent and a better compliance with the laws. Yet we are told that ninety-nine out of every hundred proofs made will be canceled.

I can cite you my own case for one. I made a homestead entry on June 26, 1884, and moved on the land June 27, 1884, and made proof in October, 1885—

Procured evidently in that case under what is called the commutation clause of the homestead law, which provides that a person who has made an entry under the homestead law may change his entry to a pre-emption entry at any time after six months, and instead of getting the land for nothing, as he otherwise would at the expiration of five years, by paying a dollar and a quarter an acre for it getting a final-entry certificate at the time he makes his payment and his proofs—having when I proved up 40 acres broken and cropped, and a good house thereon.

Since that date I have built a barn that will cost me about $500, and have had the whole claim broken up and gotten ready for crop next year. I also have another claim which joins my homestead on the west, giving me 320 acres, all of which is now broken up and ready for crop, out of which I have in crop on the land this year about 170 acres, and have buildings on the land that altogether cost me nearly $2,000. Every cent that I have made for the last three years has gone on the place and I have refused at least half a dozen offers to sell at good figures.

Now at this late day comes a special agent, and says that he has reported my homestead for cancellation for the reason that I am not now living on the land.

But I am keeping men there to work the place for me, and it is the only land that I own in the world, and I have had to undergo great hardships to get these claims and have acted in every way in good faith and intent.

Yours, &c.,

W. S. TALLANT.

I know a case in my own State which will illustrate a great body of cases now pending in the General Land Office, and where cancellation will be made under the construction the Commissioner of the General Land Office puts upon the law. A person entered a quarter-section of the Osage Indian lands, which were settled only under the pre-emption law. Some five or six months after his entry that person sold to another person by deed. Two or three months later, and more than eight months after the date of the original entry, the purchaser from the entryman sold to a gentleman who came into that country with his family from New York, necessarily entirely ignorant of any fraud, if any fraud had been committed, in regard to that entry. The person who purchased went into possession of the land and he is living there now, making it his home.

Whatever may be said about the original entryman and his intention, or about the improvement that he made upon the land, we find in the case of the second purchaser an exact and literal compliance with the law in the fact that he has settled upon the land, and thus the motive of the law has been abundantly accomplished; and yet that entry is held for cancellation, the Commissioner holding that this new purchaser had no right to come in and set up a claim under an innocent purchaser, and not only must he get off the land, if this decision be enforced, but he is not even permitted to enter it in his own name, notwithstanding he is occupying it, but that right is devolved by the statute upon the person who contests with him, that is to say, upon the person who shows to the Land Office according to its view that the original entry was fraudulent.

I do not speak of this, as I said, for the purpose of making any reflection whatever upon the Commissioner of the General Land Officef I concede that that is his belief of what the law is, but it is a belie. which if carried out in the merciless way in which he seems determined it shall be carried out, I have no doubt according to his sense of public duty will result in dispossessing thousands and tens of thousands of men who purchased in perfect innocence of any wrong having been done to the Government, and who are so far removed from the original entry that it is not in their power ever to make proof to contradict the report of the special agent that the origiual entry was fraudulent.

Senators will remember that in that country population is more or less shifting. For hundreds of causes, as I showed the other day at some length, men leave that country, change their occupation from farmers to dwellers in towns, and so on, and the improvement of to-day gives way to the more ambitious structure of to-morrow, or perhaps disappears altogether under the influence of the elements, fire and the weather. A special agent comes along a year or two later and, not finding anything there or finding something there which he assumes was not there at the date of the original entry, mercilessly sits down and writes to the Department that the entry ought to be canceled, and on that report it is canceled, and the rights of the original entryman and all who succeeded him in interest and possession disappear with him; that is to say, if that be the law. I do not believe that is the law.

I believe the Commissioner is mistaken about it, honestly mistaken I have no doubt, but still a mistake which will bring unnumbered woes to as meritorious people as there are on this continent, the men who have done the pioneering, who have gone to the outposts of civilization, the men who have opened the great wastes to production, who have carried if not their lives in their hands at all events have carried their fortunes and everything that was dear to them along with them and put them at risk in the endeavor to make new homes in that remote region of country.

It was for the purpose of remedying cases of this kind, for the purpose of establishing a rule which should give effect to the good faith of men who had purchased land that had been entered, they having no knowledge of any irregularities or frauds, that this provision has been inserted in the bill.

For myself I believe the law to be as we here declare it to be. At the same time I have not cared to encumber the bill with any provision in regard to the future, leaving those who are to enter hereafter, and who are to deal with the present Commissioner of the General Land Office or with those who do as he does about the matter, to take their own chances and their own risks as to what may be the effect of their action in entering upon those lands or their subsequent action in selling them if they ever become possessed of the certificate of entry.

I have no objection, as I said, to such an amendment as the Senator from Oregon has suggested. I have stated the case, not as fully perhaps as I would wish, but still perhaps as fully as the necessities of the case will call for, and certainly more than I had expected to state at all in the debate upon this bill. This general question was debated at the last Congress, and near the close of the last session the Senate passed a bill very much as this bill is, in all its essential particulars I think about the same, and the committee had not supposed that any very great debate would be necessary. I do not speak of that as asserting the propriety or the necessity or the obligation to defend the bill here and everywhere. Of course if any doubt remains upon any point it ought to be discussed. It is a very important measure of public policy, a very important measure affecting the future of what public lands are left. It restricts in a very material way the acquisition of public lands hereafter, and in my judgment it will not only be, as the Senator from Wisconsin suggested, a bill of peace and of immense importance to the entries already existing of the public domain, but will be the means whereby hereafter what remains of the public domain will be reserved for an occupancy of a more permanent character, and which I think on the whole will be exceedingly useful from a public standpoint.

Mr. MAXEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. MAXEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. I had hoped that the Senate would sit longer this evening; and while I do not anticipate that the bill can be closed this evening, at the same time I am very desirous, and I know all of the Senate are, that the matter may be disposed of in order that there may be room for other important public measures which are pending. I would therefore ask if there can be unanimous consent that at some time to-morrow and at some early hour there may be a final vote on this bill—at all events a vote without any further debate on the amendment and subsequently on the bill itself.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Senator from Kansas will understand that the bill known as the Fitz-John Porter bill was made the special order for to-morrow.

Mr. PLUMB. I would suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that I spoke to his colleague [Mr. SEWELL] a moment ago, and he understood, or at least I thought he did, that the Fitz-John Porter bill was to come up after this bill is through. I desire myself that the Fitz-John Porter bill may be entered upon to-morrow, and, of course, concluded to-morrow if possible, so as to be out of the way. It will be settled before we adjourn, I have no doubt; and if we can have an agreement to vote on this bill at 3 o'clock to-morrow we might get through with the Fitz-John Porter bill to-morrow; if not, we can at all events get it to-morrow under consideration, and only a short time of the next day will be necessary for it.

Half past 2 is the hour I suggest, and I will ask unanimous consent that at half past 2 o'clock to-morrow——

Mr. SAWYER. Say three.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to submit some objections to this bill at some time or other before the vote is taken. I think that there are very important features in this amendment, and it ought not to become the law of the land, especially that part of it which confirms the fraudulent entries which have been made. I desire to present some information to the Senate on that portion of the bill as reported by the Senate committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Mississippi as having the floor.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask at all events unanimous consent that at 3 o'clock to-morrow the vote may be had upon the pending amendment and that the debate thereafter may be limited to five minutes on other amendments to the bill and on the bill itself.

Mr. MCPHERSON. And that its consideration begin immediately after the morning business.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, and that its consideration begin immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposition of the Senator from Kansas? The Senator from Kansas asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that at 3 o'clock to-morrow the vote be taken upon the pending amendment and that on all other amendments after that the five-minute rule of debate shall be applied. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. That order is made.

Mr. ALLISON. And the bill is to be entered upon immediately after the conclusion of the morning business. ["Yes."]

INDIAN TRADERSHIPS.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. The Chair did me the honor some days ago to appoint me a member of the committee to investigate the subject of Indian traderships. In all probability that committee will hold its first session in the course of a day or so, and there may be a probability also of its sessions after the adjournment of Congress and at a distance from the capital. I desire to say that circumstances beyond my control will prevent me from attending the sessions of that committee under such circumstances, and therefore I desire to be relieved from any service on the committee at all. It will be utterly impossible for me even if I commence service to follow it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland asks to be excused from service upon the select committee in regard to Indian traderships. If there be no objection leave will be granted, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] in his place.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MAXEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After nineteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned till to-morrow, Thursday, June 24, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 23d day of June, 1886.

CONSUL OF THE UNITED STATES.

David W. Burk, of New York, to be consul of the United States at Puerto Cabello, to fill a vacancy.

REGISTERS OF LAND OFFICES.

J. L. Camp, of Gilmer, Tex., to be register of the land office at Prescott, Ariz., vice Thomas Wing, commission expired.

Pierce H. Ryan, to be register of the land office at Eureka, Cal., vice Charles F. Roberts, resigned.

Richard McCloud, of Silverton, Colo., to be register of the land office at Durango, Colo., vice Daniel L. Sheets, commission expired.

W. E. Copeland, of Gold Hill, Nev., to be register of the land office at Carson City, Nev., vice Charles A. Witherell, resigned.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Edmund T. Pittman, to be receiver of public moneys at Durango, Colo., vice Willard S. Hickox, commission expired.

INDIAN AGENT.

Samuel L. Gilson, of Erie, Pa., to be agent for the Indians of the Fort Peck agency, in Montana, vice Burton Parker, who was suspended during the recess of the Senate.

The nomination of Henry R. West for the above office, delivered to the Senate December 15 last, is this day withdrawn.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Mathias V. Buckey, of the District of Columbia, to be a justice of the peace in said District, to be assigned to the city of Georgetown. Justice Buckey's commission expired June 20, 1886.

POSTMASTERS.

Frederick A. Edwards, to be postmaster at Webster City, Hamilton County, Iowa, vice John D. Hunter, suspended, the nomination of George W. Bell, who was designated and afterward nominated to the Senate, having been rejected.

Thomas H. Perrin, to be postmaster at Alton, Madison County, Illinois, vice Charles Holden, jr., commission expired.

James A. Able, to be postmaster at Auburn, Sangamon County, Illinois, vice W. W. Lowdermilk, commission expired.

James E. McDonald, to be postmaster at Ligonier, Noble County, Indiana, vice Hiram M. Goodspeed, resigned.

Henry D. Linsley, to be postmaster at Branford, New Haven County, Connecticut, vice Philo Hall, resigned.

Joseph J. Topliff, to be postmaster at Longmont, Boulder County, Colorado, vice Royal M. Hubbard, resigned.

John J. Ankeny, to be postmaster at Minneapolis, Hennepin County, Minnesota, vice Orlo M. Laraway, commission expired.

Nicholas J. Macklin, to be postmaster at Stapleton, Richmond County, New York, vice Sarah Bale, whose commission expires July 1, 1886.

Lewis C. Holmes, to be postmaster at Cobleskill, Schoharie County, New York, vice Lewis Hess, whose commission expires July 6, 1886.

James H. Mudey, to be postmaster at Pottsville, Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, vice Elizabeth H. Sillyman, commission expired.

Fannie D. Porter, to be postmaster at El Paso, El Paso County, Texas, vice Mrs. Fannie D. Porter, whose commission expires July 1, 1886.

S. Curtis Symonds, to be postmaster at Hudson, Saint Croix County, Wisconsin, vice Frank D. Harding, commission expired.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate June 16, 1886.

George M. Helms, of Virginia, to be collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Virginia.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Finance; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Finance have had under consideration the nomination (No. 310) of George M. Helms, of Virginia, to be collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Virginia, in place of John B. Raulston, suspended, and, so far as they have been able to obtain the information, they find that Mr. Helms is a fit and proper person to discharge the duties of the office, and that there are no charges or papers on file reflecting upon the character of Mr. Raulston, suspended, as will appear from the following letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 17, 1886.

SIR: Your communication on behalf of the Finance Committee of the Senate, dated March 16, 1886, asking whether or not "there are any charges on file against the official or moral character of John B. Raulston, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Virginia, suspended," is received.

In reply thereto I have the honor to state that, so far as this inquiry relates to a suspension from office, I feel bound by the rules laid down in the President's recent message to the Senate upon the general subject of such suspensions.

But in order that I may surely act within the requirements of the statute relating to the furnishing by this Department of information to the Senate, I beg leave to remind the committee that the office referred to has no fixed term attached to it, and to further state that the President is satisfied that a change in the incumbency of said office will result in an improvement of the public service, and that the policy of the present administration will be better carried out by such change.

Except as the same may be involved in these considerations, no papers containing charges reflecting upon the official or moral character of the suspended officer mentioned in your communication are in the custody of this Department.

Respectfully, yours,

D. MANNING, Secretary.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance.

A resolution, as follows, was unanimously adopted by the Committee on Finance, April 6, 1886, in relation to this and all similar letters to the foregoing:

"Resolved, That the letters of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Committee on Finance, dated March 16, 1886, or subsequently, in relation to the suspension of collectors of internal revenue, should be received and held as honest declarations made in good faith that there are no charges or papers on file in the Department reflecting in any manner against their moral or official conduct or character."

Under this statement of facts, and the fact that there is no fixed term attached to the office of collector of internal revenue, the committee recommend the confirmation of Mr. Helms.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate, June 18, 1886.

REGISTER OF LAND OFFICE.

C. F. M. Niles, of Garden City, Kans., to be register of the land office at Garden City, Kans.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Richard L. Cropley, of the District of Columbia, to be collector of customs for the district of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia.

CONSUL OF THE UNITED STATES.

E. H. Bryan, of California, to be consul of the United States at Lyons.

POSTMASTERS.

Leslie E. Brooks, to be postmaster at Mobile, Mobile County, Alabama.

John B. Christian, to be postmaster at Uniontown, Perry County, Alabama.

L. R. Davis, to be postmaster at Athens, in the county of Limestone and State of Alabama.

Harrison W. Clark, to be postmaster at Jacksonville, in the county of Duval and State of Florida.

Christian T. Georgia, to be postmaster at Unionville, in the county of Hartford and State of Connecticut.

A. E. Blakeslee, to be postmaster at Thomaston, Litchfield County, Connecticut.

William F. Avera, to be postmaster at Camden, Ouachita County, Arkansas.

Albert A. Sparks, to be postmaster at Mount Vernon, Posey County, Indiana.

Cyrus S. Stoy, to be postmaster at Butler, De Kalb County, Indiana.

Philip E. Brady, to be postmaster at Attleborough, in the county of Bristol and State of Massachusetts.

William W. Slawson, to be postmaster at Greenville, in the county of Montcalm and State of Michigan.

Prior B. Mayo, to be postmaster at North Springfield, Greene County, Missouri.

Lee Beall, to be postmaster at Rich Hill, Bates County, Missouri.

William M. Hunnewell, to be postmaster at Exeter, Rockingham County, New Hampshire.

David Lutz, to be postmaster at Slatington, Lehigh County, Pennsylvania.

B. S. Martin, to be postmaster at Terrell, Kaufman County, Texas.

Frank T. Forbes, to be postmaster at Fredericksburg, Spottsylvania County, Virginia.

L. W. Caldwell, to be postmaster at Warrenton, in the county of Fauquier and State of Virginia.

George B. Head, to be postmaster at Leesburg, in the county of Loudoun and State of Virginia.

Gardner A. Wilder, to be postmaster at Circleville, in the county of Pickaway and State of Ohio.

H. B. Linney, to be postmaster at Gordonsville, in the county of Orange and State of Virginia.

Thomas R. McDearman, to be postmaster at Danville, in the county of Pittsylvania and State of Virginia.

Alexander S. Haller, to be postmaster at Wytheville, in the county of Wythe and State of Virginia.

A. P. Bibb, to be postmaster at University of Virginia, in the county of Albemarle and State of Virginia.

William H. Cullingworth, to be postmaster at Richmond, in the county of Henrico and State of Virginia.

William H. Ritenour, to be postmaster at Harrisonburg, in the county of Rockingham and State of Virginia.

Robert E. Austin, to be postmaster at Tama City, in the county of Tama and State of Iowa.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the nomination of Robert E. Austin, to be postmaster at Tama City, Tama County, in the State of Iowa, reports that—

The said nomination was made vice J. M. Wonser, suspended, but no cause for such suspension has been officially communicated to the committee. Unofficial information, however, discloses that the suspension was made on the ground of "offensive partisanship," and an alleged informality in the accounts of the officer. Undoubtedly the suspended officer was an "offensive partisan" as that term is defined in the celebrated letter of the Postmaster-General; but the committee find from the sworn statements of the suspended officer and other sources of information in support thereof, that the charge relative to the accounts of his office has no substantial foundation upon which to rest. The real support of the case rests on the other charge. Mr. Wonser was a Republican in office. His place was wanted for a Democrat. He was suspended and the Democrat designated to take charge of the office is now in possession thereof, and is nominated to the Senate for its advice and consent to his appointment. The evidence before the committee indicates that he is a man of good standing in the community in which the office is located, and that he is competent to discharge the duties devolved on him. The nomination, therefore, is reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it be confirmed.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Hambleton Sheppard, of Virginia, to be collector of internal revenue for the sixth district of Virginia.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Finance; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Finance have had under consideration the nomination (No. 1311) of Hambleton Sheppard, of Virginia, to be collector of internal revenue for the sixth district of Virginia, in place of William E. Craig, suspended, and, so far as they have been able to obtain the information, they find that Mr. Sheppard is a fit and proper person to discharge the duties of the office, and that there are no charges or papers on file reflecting upon the character of Mr. Craig, suspended, as will appear from the following letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 17, 1886.

SIR: Your communication on behalf of the Finance Committee of the Senate, dated March 16, 1886, asking whether or not "there are any charges on file against the official or moral character of William E. Craig, late collector of internal revenue for the sixth district of Virginia, suspended," is received.

In reply thereto I have the honor to state that, so far as this inquiry relates to a suspension from office, I feel bound by the rules laid down in the President's recent message to the Senate upon the general subject of such suspensions.

But in order that I may surely act within the requirements of the statute relating to the furnishing by this Department of information to the Senate, I beg leave to remind the committee that the office referred to has no fixed term attached to it, and to further state that the President is satisfied that a change in the incumbency of said office will result in an improvement of the public service, and that the policy of the present administration will be better carried out by such change.

Except as the same may be involved in these considerations, no papers containing charges reflecting upon the official or moral character of the suspended officer mentioned in your communication are in the custody of this Department.

Respectfully yours,

D. MANNING, Secretary.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance.

A resolution, as follows, was unanimously adopted by the Committee on Finance, April 6, 1886, in relation to this and all similar letters to the foregoing:

"Resolved, That the letters of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Committee on Finance, dated March 16, 1886, or subsequently, in relation to the suspension of collectors of internal revenue, should be received and held as honest declarations made in good faith that there are no charges or papers on file in the Department reflecting in any manner against their moral or official conduct or character."

Under this statement of facts, and the fact that there is no fixed term attached to the office of collector of internal revenue, the committee recommend the confirmation of Mr. Sheppard.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 23, 1886.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

John R. Rankin, of Texas, to be marshal of the United States for the western district of Texas.

POSTMASTER.

S. Curtis Symonds, to be postmaster at Hudson, Saint Croix County, Wisconsin.

REJECTION.

Executive nomination rejected by the Senate June 18, 1886.

POSTMASTER.

John Seeman, nominated to be postmaster at Denison, Crawford County, Iowa.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 23, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

VENTILATION OF TREASURY BUILDING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Supervising Architect and recommending an appropriation for the ventilation of the Treasury building; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN SERVICE IN CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Interior of deficiency in the appropriation for incidental expenses of Indian service in California for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SIGNAL CORPS OF THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with inclosure, a petition from officers in the Signal Corps of the Army asking that opportunities of promotion be extended to them; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY AND NAVY HOSPITAL, HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Surgeon-General of the Army and recommending an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill providing for the maintenance of the Army and Navy hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RICHARD H. PARHAM.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copy of order in the case of Richard H. Parham vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

NATIONAL CEMETERY, NATCHEZ, MISS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1341) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Natchez, Miss., returned from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. VAN EATON. I ask that the amendments of the Senate be taken up and concurred in.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 3, after "macadamized," insert "or gravel."
In line 5, strike out "75" and insert "50."

There being no objection, the amendments of the Senate were considered and concurred in.

Mr. VAN EATON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN M. ROBESON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 209) for the relief of the legal representatives of John M. Robeson, deceased.

The following message accompanying the bill was read:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 21, 1886.

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 209) for the relief of the legal representatives of John M. Robeson, deceased, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. HOAR, Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, and Mr. GRAY be conferees on the part of Senate.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House will insist on its amendment and agree to the request of the Senate for a conference.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce during the day the conferees on the part of the House.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate bills; which were read twice, and referred as indicated:

The bill (S. 2292) to provide for the settlement of a certain Cherokee claim under the treaty of February 14, 1833—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 2661) touching the grade of commander in the Navy and to correct an error in relation to an appointment therein—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

NICARAGUAN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Whereas the following resolution was passed in the Senate on March 10, 1882, and in the House of Representatives on the 16th March, 1882:

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to bring to the attention of the Government of Nicaragua the necessity of arranging by a convention for final settlement of all unadjusted claims existing between the Government of the United States and the Government of Nicaragua and claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Nicaragua;"

And whereas no information has been given to Congress of any practical progress that has been made in the adjustment of the claims of the citizens of the United States against the Republic of Nicaragua:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be requested to bring this subject to the attention of the Government of Nicaragua, with a view to securing the prompt and full satisfaction of the just claims of the citizens of the United States against the Government of Nicaragua.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. HEMPHILL, for fifteen days from to-day, on account of professional business.

To Mr. SHAW, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

WORLD'S PASTIME EXPOSITION COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. SPRINGER, referred to the Committee on Rules:

CHICAGO, ILL., June 17, 1886.

DEAR SIR: The World's Pastime Exposition Company, of Chicago, Ill., as represented by the undersigned citizens committee and exposition officials, extends to your honorable body an invitation to attend the exposition at Chicago on the 3d day of July next, or at any time during the one hundred days of its continuance.

Inasmuch as this is the first exposition of national importance that has been created in this country without financial aid from the national Legislature, we trust you will not hesitate to give the enterprise such recognition as the acceptance of this invitation may imply.

Very respectfully, yours,

T. Z. COWLES,
Chairman Citizens' Committee.
THE WORLD'S PASTIME EXPOSITION CO.
MALCOLM MCNEILL, President.
J. W. RYCKMAN, Manager.
A. F. DEXTER, Treasurer.
H. WINSTON WALKER, Secretary.

To the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives of the United States.

NATIONAL CEMETERY, KNOXVILLE, TENN.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 5866) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Knoxville, Tenn., Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio, Mr. HOUK, and Mr. LAIRD.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. BELMONT, the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and agreed to a conference asked for by the Senate thereon.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BELMONT, Mr. HITT, and Mr. COX as managers at the conference on the part of the House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. Senate bill No. 2428, to grant certain seal rocks to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, in trust for the people of the United States, was erroneously referred to the Committee on Commerce. It should have gone to the Committee on the Public Lands; and if there be no objection the change of reference will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

BRIDGE OVER MENOMINEE RIVER.

Mr. MOFFATT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8023) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a bridge by the municipalities of Menominee, Mich., and Marinette, Wis., over Menominee River.

The SPEAKER. Is this bill on the Private Calendar?

Mr. MOFFATT. It should be on the Private Calendar, but was erroneously referred to the House Calendar.

Unless there be objection I move to dispense with the reading of the bill. It is a common bridge bill, reported unanimously by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BEACH. I shall insist upon the reading of the bill. I do not think we ought to pass these bills without reading.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do I understand this bill is reported from the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. MOFFATT. Yes, sir; unanimously.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read at length.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

In section 4, line 8, strike out the words "and one mile below" and insert in line 9, after the word "location," the words "and below said location to the shore of Green Bay, at the mouth of said river."

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendments agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MOFFATT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request, made on Monday last, to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill which I now send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the regular order to be demanded. Unless that is withdrawn the Chair must recognize the demand.

Mr. SPRINGER. I must insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER. That, of course, is in the nature of an objection.

The regular order is the call of the standing and select committees for reports.

THEODORE W. TALLMADGE.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. 1905), with Senate amendments, erroneously referred to the Committee on Claims, and moved that said committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill for the present lie on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

ALEXANDER SWIFT & CO.

Mr. LYMAN, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, the bill (S. 208) for the relief of Alexander Swift & Co., partners, and Alexander Swift & Co. and the Niles Works; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HENRY MARTIN.

Mr. DORSEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 1418) for the relief of Henry Martin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. DORSEY. Would it be in order to ask concurrence in the Senate amendments at this time?

The SPEAKER. That could not be done under this call.

REPORT ON ALASKA BY L. M. TURNER.

Mr. FARQUHAR, from the Committee on Printing, reported back favorably the Senate concurrent resolution providing for the printing of the report on Alaska, by L. M. Turner; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES D. RYAN.

Mr. TRIGG, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back a resolution for the relief of James D. Ryan; which was referrred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed.

STENOGRAPHIC WORK FOR COMMITTEES.

Mr. TRIGG, from the Committee on Accounts, also submitted a report upon claims for stenographic work for the standing and select committees of the House; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HARRIET W. SHACKLETT.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 8965) for the relief of Harriet W. Shacklett; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendment and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS WILLAMETTE RIVER.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 1937) authorizing the city of Salem to construct a bridge across the Willamette River, in the State of Oregon; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GREENSBOROUGH, N. C.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina (by Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania), from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 9438) appropriating money for the completion of a public building at Greensborough, N. C.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANT ENGINEERS UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. WISE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported, as a substitute for H. Res. 150, a joint resolution (H. Res. 191) for the purpose of temporarily increasing the number of assistant engineers in the United States Navy by restoring certain cadet-engineers named therein to their legal rights and to their proper office and rank in the United States Navy, authorizing and directing the President to appoint such cadet-engineers (graduates) assistant engineers, to commission them as such, and to antedate their commissions; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HAYES NITRO-GLYCERINE SHELL.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with an adverse recommendation the House resolution directing an inquiry what arrangements, if any, can be made to secure for the United States absolute control of the Hayes nitro-glycerine shell; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LOW BRIDGE AT SAINT LOUIS, MO.

Mr. DUNHAM. I submit the views of the minority of the Committee on Commerce on the bill (H. R. 8745) for low bridge at Saint Louis, Mo.

The views of the minority were ordered to be printed with the report of the majority.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. MORRISON. I call up the privileged question which was under consideration at the adjournment on yesterday.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now proceed to the further consideration of the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I should like the House to go on with the consideration of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Can the question of consideration be raised when the demand for the previous question is pending?

The SPEAKER. If the House had ordered the previous question on the adoption of the resolution the Chair thinks the resolution would come up under the practice of the House necessarily. But the previous question was not ordered; it was only demanded.

Mr. SPRINGER. Was not the vote being taken on the demand for the previous question at the time the House adjourned?

The SPEAKER. Not at all; the vote was being taken on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HISCOCK. What course can we take, what motion will be in order now, to enable the House to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the sundry civil bill?

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged matter, and pending it the motion to go into Committee of the Whole is not in order. But if the House sustains the objection to the consideration of the resolution a motion to go into Committee of the Whole would then be in order.

Mr. RANDALL. I will take care of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Thank you.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now proceed to the consideration of the resolution?

The question being put, the Speaker stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 91.

Mr. MORRISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 132, nays 116, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—132.

Allen, J. M.	Compton,	Glass,	Lore,
Ballentine,	Comstock,	Green, R. S.	Lovering,
Barbour,	Cowles,	Green, W. J.	Lowry,
Barksdale,	Cox,	Hall,	Martin,
Barnes,	Crisp,	Halsell,	Matson,
Barry,	Croxton,	Hammond,	Maybury,
Belmont,	Culberson,	Harris,	McCreary,
Bennett,	Curtin,	Hatch,	McMillin,
Blanchard,	Daniel,	Henderson, J. S.	McRae,
Bland,	Dargan,	Herbert,	Miller,
Blount,	Davidson, A. C.	Hewitt,	Mills,
Bragg,	Davidson, R. H. M.	Holman,	Mitchell,
Breckinridge, C. R.	Dibble,	Howard,	Morgan,
Breckinridge, W C P.	Dunn,	Hudd,	Morrison,
Bynum,	Ellsberry,	Hutton,	Neal,
Cabell,	Ermentrout,	Irion,	Norwood,
Caldwell,	Fisher,	Jones, J. H.	Oates,
Campbell, J. E.	Foran,	King,	Outhwaite,
Candler,	Forney,	Kleiner,	Peel,
Carleton,	Frederick,	Laffoon,	Perry,
Clardy,	Gay,	Lanham,	Pidcock,
Cobb,	Geddes,	Lawler,	Pindar,
Collins,	Gibson, C. H.	Le Fevre,	Randall,
Reagan,	Scott,	Storm,	Viele,
Reed, T. B.	Seymour,	Swope,	Ward, J. H.
Reid, J. W.	Singleton,	Tarsney,	Ward, T. B.
Reese,	Skinner,	Taulbee,	Warner, A. J.
Richardson,	Sowden,	Taylor, J. M.	Wellborn,
Riggs,	Springer,	Tillman,	Wheeler,
Robertson,	Stewart, Charles	Trigg,	Wilson,
Rogers,	St. Martin,	Tucker,	Winans,
Sadler,	Stone, W. J., Ky.	Turner,	Wise,
Sayers,	Stone, W. J., Mo.	Van Eaton,	Wolford.

NAYS—116.

Allen, C. H.	Felton,	McKenna,	Seney,
Atkinson,	Fleeger,	McKinley,	Sessions,
Baker,	Fuller,	Merriman,	Smalls,
Beach,	Gallinger,	Millard,	Spooner,
Bingham,	Goff,	Milliken,	Stahlnecker,
Bliss,	Grout,	Moffatt,	Steele,
Bound,	Guenther,	Morrill,	Stephenson,
Boutelle,	Harmer,	Morrow,	Stewart, J. W.
Brown, C. E.	Hayden,	Muller,	Strait,
Brumm,	Henderson, D. B.	Nelson,	Swinburne,
Buck,	Hepburn,	O'Donnell,	Taylor, E. B.
Burrows,	Hiestand,	O'Neill, Charles	Taylor, Zach.
Butterworth,	Hires,	Osborne,	Thomas, J. R.
Campbell, Felix	Hiscock,	Parker,	Thomas, O. B.
Campbell, J. M.	Holmes,	Payne,	Thompson,
Cannon,	Hopkins,	Payson,	Townshend,
Caswell,	Jackson,	Perkins,	Van Schaick,
Conger,	Johnston, J. T.	Peters,	Wade,
Cutcheon,	Kelley,	Pettibone,	Wadsworth,
Davenport,	Ketcham,	Phelps,	Wait,
Davis,	Lehlbach,	Pirce,	Warner, William
Dingley,	Libbey,	Plumb,	Weaver, A. J.
Dorsey,	Lindsley,	Price,	Weaver, J. B.
Dowdney,	Little,	Rockwell,	Weber,
Dunham,	Long,	Romeis,	West,
Ely,	Louttit,	Rowell,	White, Milo
Evans,	Lyman,	Ryan,	Whiting,
Everhart,	Markham,	Sawyer,	Woodburn,
Farquhar,	McComas,	Scranton,	Worthington.

NOT VOTING—75.

Adams, G. E.	Cooper,	Henderson, T. J.	O'Hara,
Adams, J. J.	Crain,	Henley,	O'Neill, J. J.
Aiken,	Dawson,	Hermann,	Owen,
Anderson, C. M.	Dockery,	Hill,	Ranney,
Anderson, J. A.	Dougherty,	Hitt,	Rice,
Arnot,	Eden,	Houk,	Shaw,
Bayne,	Eldredge,	James,	Snyder,
Boyle,	Findlay,	Johnson, F. A.	Spriggs,
Brady,	Ford,	Johnston, T. D.	Stone, E. F.
Browne, T. M.	Funston,	Jones, J. T.	Struble,
Brown, W. W.	Gibson, Eustace	La Follette,	Symes,
Buchanan,	Gilfillan,	Laird,	Taylor, I. H.
Bunnell,	Glover,	Landes,	Throckmorton,
Burleigh,	Grosvenor,	Mahoney,	Wakefield,
Burnes,	Hale,	McAdoo,	Wallace,
Campbell, T. J.	Hanback,	Murphy,	White, A. C.
Catchings,	Haynes,	Neece,	Wilkins,
Clements,	Heard,	Negley,	Willis.
Cole,	Hemphill,	O'Ferrall,

So the House decided to consider the resolution.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. If I were not paired, I would vote "ay" on this question.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. THROCKMORTON] is absent on account of sickness. If he were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. COWLES. I desire to announce, Mr. Speaker, that my colleague [Mr. JOHNSTON] is detained from the House by sickness. If he were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. HAMMOND. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names of members voting.

Several members objected.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I find myself paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. O'FERRALL, upon all political questions and questions pertaining to the tariff, and if this should be construed to be a question of either character, I am paired; but if not, I do not regard myself as paired.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must determine that question for himself.

Mr. HERMANN. Then I suppose it may be considered that I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. O'FERRALL.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. COLE with Mr. BRADY. If Mr. BRADY were present, he would vote "no." Mr. COLE, if present, would vote "ay."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, with Mr. FUNSTON.

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. HERMANN.

Mr. DAWSON with Mr. BUCHANAN.

Mr. HILL with Mr. RICE.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. CABELL with Mr. WAKEFIELD.

Mr. CLEMENTS with Mr. BUNNELL.

Mr. HEARD with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.

Mr. LANDES with Mr. HANBACK.

Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. JONES, of Alabama.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. COOPER.

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York.

Mr. ELDREDGE with Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSVENOR and Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, were announced as paired until June 23, inclusive.

Mr. NEECE and Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, were announced as paired on the resolution to change the rule. Mr. NEECE, if present, would vote for the resolution; Mr. ADAMS against it.

Mr. THROCKMORTON and Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, were announced as paired on all political questions. If present, Mr. THROCKMORTON would vote for the resolution to amend the rules; Mr. HENDERSON against it.

The following-named members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. BOYLE with Mr. NEGLEY.

Mr. HEMPHILL with Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania.

The following-named members were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. MCADOO with Mr. LA FOLLETTE.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. STRUBLE.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote from no to ay.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Speaker, I am announced as paired, but I have voted on this call because on yesterday I was informed by Mr. PRICE, who has charge of the pairs, that I was not paired.

The SPEAKER. Then the pair will not be announced. The Chair will suggest to gentlemen who have signed pairs "until further notice" that they always give notice to the Clerk of the time when the pairs are to terminate.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House has decided to consider the resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House do now adjourn; and pending that I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. MORRISON. I move to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has moved to reconsider.

Mr. MORRISON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from New York has intervened.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has moved that the House do now adjourn——

Mr. HISCOCK. And pending that I have moved that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that Friday is rather early. [Laughter.] I therefore move to amend by striking out "Friday" and inserting "Saturday;" and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER. Before putting the question the Chair will lay before the House a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7650) to remove the political disabilities of J. G. Flournoy;

A bill (H. R. 7364) authorizing the Secretary of War to allow the interment in the national cemetery at New Berne, in the State of North Carolina, of the remains of the late Mrs. Harriet B. Lehman; and

A bill (H. R. 4498) authorizing an additional appropriation of $25,000 for the court-house at Keokuk, Iowa, to make the same fire-proof.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] has moved to amend the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] by striking out "Friday" and inserting "Saturday;" and upon that he demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. BURROWS. I withdraw that demand.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BURROWS, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Several MEMBERS. A division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 70.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. Tellers are demanded.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. A sufficient number have risen to order tellers. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. BURROWS, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MORRISON.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 120.

Mr. BURROWS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yea 1, nays 136, not voting 186; as follows:

YEA—1.

Allen, C. H.

NAYS—136.

Adams, J. J.	Barry,	Bliss,	Campbell, Felix
Allen, J. M.	Beach,	Blount,	Campbell, J. E.
Ballentine,	Belmont,	Breckinridge, C. R.	Candler,
Barbour,	Bennett,	Breckinridge, WCP.	Carleton,
Barksdale,	Blanchard,	Bynum,	Clardy,
Barnes,	Bland,	Caldwell,	Cobb,
Compton,	Halsell,	Miller,	Springer,
Comstock,	Hammond,	Mills,	Stahlnecker,
Cowles,	Harris,	Mitchell,	Stewart, Charles
Cox,	Hatch,	Morgan,	St. Martin,
Crain,	Henderson, J. S.	Morrison,	Stone, W. J., Ky.
Crisp,	Herbert,	Neal,	Stone, W. J., Mo.
Croxton,	Hewitt,	Neece,	Swope,
Culberson,	Holman,	Norwood,	Tarsney,
Curtin,	Howard,	Oates,	Taulbee,
Dargan,	Hudd,	Peel,	Taylor, J. M.
Davidson, A. C.	Hutton,	Perry,	Tillman,
Davidson, R. H. M.	Irion,	Pidcock,	Townshend,
Dibble,	Jones, J. H.	Pindar,	Trigg,
Dowdney,	King,	Randall,	Tucker,
Dunn,	Kleiner,	Reagan,	Turner,
Eldredge,	Laffoon,	Reid, J. W.	Van Eaton,
Ellsberry,	Lanham,	Reese,	Wallace,
Ermentrout,	Lawler,	Richardson,	Ward, J. H.
Fisher,	Le Fevre,	Riggs,	Ward, T. B.
Forney,	Lovering,	Robertson,	Warner, A. J.
Frederick,	Lowry,	Rogers,	Weaver, J. B.
Gay,	Mahoney,	Sadler,	Wellborn,
Geddes,	Martin,	Sayers,	Wheeler,
Gibson, C. H.	Matson,	Scott,	Wilson,
Glass,	Maybury,	Seymour,	Winans,
Green, R. S.	McCreary,	Singleton,	Wise,
Green, W. J.	McRae,	Skinner,	Wolford,
Hall,	Merriman,	Sowden,	Worthington.

NOT VOTING—186.

Adams, G. E.	Ely,	La Follette,	Rockwell,
Aiken,	Evans,	Laird,	Romeis,
Anderson, C. M.	Everhart,	Landes,	Rowell,
Anderson, J. A.	Farquhar,	Lehlbach,	Ryan,
Arnot,	Felton,	Libbey,	Sawyer,
Atkinson,	Findlay,	Lindsley,	Scranton,
Baker,	Fleeger,	Little,	Seney,
Bayne,	Foran,	Long,	Sessions,
Bingham,	Ford,	Lore,	Shaw,
Bound,	Fuller,	Loutitt,	Smalls,
Boutelle,	Funston,	Lyman,	Snyder,
Boyle,	Gallinger,	Markham,	Spooner,
Brady,	Gibson, Eustace	McAdoo,	Spriggs,
Bragg,	Gilfillan,	McComas,	Steele,
Browne, T. M.	Glover,	McKenna,	Stephenson,
Brown, C. E.	Goff,	McKinley,	Stewart, J. W.
Brown, W. W.	Grosvenor,	McMillin,	Stone, E. F.
Brumm,	Grout,	Millard,	Storm,
Buchanan,	Guenther,	Milliken,	Strait,
Buck,	Hale,	Moffat,	Struble,
Bunnell,	Hanback,	Morrill,	Swinburne,
Burleigh,	Harmer,	Morrow,	Symes,
Burnes,	Hayden,	Muller,	Taylor, E. B.
Burrows,	Haynes,	Murphy,	Taylor, I. H.
Butterworth,	Heard,	Negley,	Taylor, Zach.
Cabell,	Hemphill,	Nelson,	Thomas, J. R.
Campbell, J. M.	Henderson, D. B.	O'Donnell,	Thomas, O. B.
Campbell, T. J.	Henderson, T. J.	O'Ferrall,	Thompson,
Cannon,	Henley,	O'Hara,	Throckmorton,
Caswell,	Hepburn,	O'Neill, Charles	Van Schaick,
Catchings,	Hermann,	O'Neill, J. J.	Viele,
Clements,	Hiestand,	Osborne,	Wade,
Cole,	Hill,	Outhwaite,	Wadsworth,
Collins,	Hires,	Owen,	Wait,
Conger,	Hiscock,	Parker,	Wakefield,
Cooper,	Hitt,	Payne,	Warner, William
Cutcheon,	Holmes,	Payson,	Weaver, A. J.
Daniel,	Hopkins,	Perkins,	Weber,
Davenport,	Houk,	Peters,	West,
Davis,	Jackson,	Pettibone,	White, A. C.
Dawson,	James,	Phelps,	White, Milo
Dingley,	Johnson, F. A.	Pirce,	Whiting,
Dockery,	Johnston, J. T.	Plumb,	Wilkins,
Dorsey,	Johnston, T. D.	Price,	Willis,
Dougherty,	Jones, J. T.	Ranney,	Woodburn.
Dunham,	Kelley,	Reed, T. B.
Eden,	Ketcham,	Rice,

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia (when the roll-call was concluded). Mr. Speaker, I understand that no quorum has voted. My pair authorizes me to vote in such a case. I desire, therefore, to have my name called.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is too late, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia states that his pair authorized him to vote in case there should be less than a quorum voting. The Chair thinks that the proper course in such cases is for the gentleman to vote when his name is called, and then if it turns out that there is a quorum without his vote to withdraw the vote.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will ask the Chair how I could possibly know whether——

The SPEAKER. The usual course is for the member to vote and then afterward to withdraw his vote if he discovers there is a quorum without it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Under the circumstances I ask leave to vote.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine objects.

Mr. JACKSON. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Several members on the Republican side objected.

The names having been read, the following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, until further notice.

Mr. FORAN with Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR, for this day.

Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. EVERHART, on this vote.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that I was absent in the Senate on business when my name was called. If I had been able to return in time, I would have voted "no."

The SPEAKER. On this question the affirmative vote is 1, the negative 137. No quorum has voted.

Mr. MORRISON. I move a call of the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I hope the gentleman will permit us to go on with the sundry civil bill. We are ready to do it, all of us.

Mr. MORRISON. We will take care of the sundry civil bill without any of your help.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I am afraid the sundry civil bill is having too much care.

The question being taken on the motion that there be a call of the House, there were—ayes 77, noes 83. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MORRISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I ask unanimous consent that we now go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the sundry civil bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MORRISON. I thought the gentleman from Maine wanted to pay our pensioners.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 142, nays 91, not voting 90; as follows:

YEAS—142.

Adams, J. J.	Dockery,	Le Fevre,	Scott,
Allen, J. M.	Dougherty,	Lore,	Seymour,
Ballentine,	Dowdney,	Lovering,	Singleton,
Barbour,	Eldredge,	Lowry,	Skinner,
Barksdale,	Ellsberry,	Mahoney,	Sowden,
Barnes,	Ermentrout,	Martin,	Springer,
Barry,	Fisher,	Matson,	Stahlnecker,
Beach,	Ford,	Maybury,	Stewart, Charles
Belmont,	Forney,	McCreary,	St. Martin,
Bennett,	Frederick,	McMillin,	Stone, W. J., Ky.
Bland,	Gay,	McRae,	Stone, W. J., Mo.
Bliss,	Geddes,	Merriman,	Storm,
Breckinridge, C. R.	Gibson, C. H.	Miller,	Swope,
Breckinridge, WCP.	Glass,	Mills,	Symes,
Bynum,	Glover,	Mitchell,	Taulbee,
Cabell,	Green, R. S.	Morgan,	Taylor, J. M.
Caldwell,	Green, W. J.	Morrison,	Tillman,
Campbell, Felix	Hale,	Muller,	Townshend,
Campbell, J. E.	Hall,	Neal,	Trigg,
Candler,	Halsell,	Neece,	Tucker,
Carleton,	Hammond,	Norwood,	Turner,
Catchings,	Harris,	Oates,	Van Eaton,
Clardy,	Hatch,	Outhwaite,	Wallace,
Cobb,	Henderson, J. S.	Peel,	Ward, J. H.
Collins,	Herbert,	Perry,	Warner, A. J.
Comstock,	Hewitt,	Pidcock,	Weaver, J. B.
Cowles,	Holman,	Pindar,	Wellborn,
Crain,	Howard,	Randall,	Wheeler,
Crisp,	Hudd,	Reagan,	Willis,
Croxton,	Hutton,	Reese,	Wilson,
Culberson,	Irion,	Richardson,	Winans,
Daniel,	Jones, J. H.	Riggs,	Wise,
Dargan,	King,	Robertson,	Wolford,
Davidson, A. C.	Laffoon,	Rogers,	Worthington.
Davidson, R. H. M.	Lanham,	Sadler,
Dibble,	Lawler,	Sayers,

NAYS—91.

Allen, C. H.	Goff,	McKinley,	Sessions,
Atkinson,	Grout,	Millard,	Smalls,
Baker,	Guenther,	Moffatt,	Spooner,
Bound,	Harmer,	Morrill,	Stephenson,
Boutelle,	Hayden,	Morrow,	Stewart, J. W.
Brown, C. E.	Hepburn,	O'Donnell,	Stone, E. F.
Brown, W. W.	Hiestand,	O'Neill, Charles	Strait,
Brumm,	Hires,	Osborne,	Struble,
Buck,	Hiscock,	Owen,	Taylor, E. B.
Burrows,	Hopkins,	Parker,	Taylor, Zach.
Butterworth,	Houk,	Payne,	Van Schaick,
Cannon,	Jackson,	Payson,	Wade,
Caswell,	Johnston, J. T.	Perkins,	Wadsworth,
Conger,	Kelley,	Peters,	Wait,
Cutcheon,	Lehlbach,	Pirce,	Warner, William
Dorsey,	Lindsley,	Plumb,	Weaver, A. J.
Dunham,	Little,	Reed, T. B.	Weber,
Ely,	Long,	Rockwell,	West,
Everhart,	Louttit,	Romeis,	White, A. C.
Farquhar,	Lyman,	Rowell,	White, Milo
Fleeger,	Markham,	Ryan,	Whiting,
Fuller,	McComas,	Sawyer,	Woodburn.
Gallinger,	McKenna,	Scranton,

NOT VOTING—90.

Adams, G. E.	Campbell, J. M.	Foran,	Johnson, F. A.
Aiken,	Campbell, T. J.	Funston,	Johnston, T. D.
Anderson, C. M.	Clements,	Gibson, Eustace	Jones, J. T.
Anderson, J. A.	Cole,	Gilfillan,	Ketcham,
Arnot,	Compton,	Grosvenor,	Kleiner,
Bayne,	Cooper,	Hanback,	La Follette,
Bingham,	Cox,	Haynes,	Laird,
Blanchard,	Curtin,	Heard,	Landes,
Blount,	Davenport,	Hemphill,	Libbey,
Boyle,	Davis,	Henderson, D. B.	McAdoo,
Brady,	Dawson,	Henderson, T. J.	Milliken,
Bragg,	Dingley,	Henley,	Murphy,
Browne, T. M.	Dunn,	Hermann,	Negley,
Buchanan,	Eden,	Hill,	Nelson,
Bunnell,	Evans,	Hitt,	O'Ferrall,
Burleigh,	Felton,	Holmes,	O'Hara,
Burnes,	Findlay,	James,	O'Neill, J. J.
Pettibone,	Seney,	Tarsney,	Viele,
Phelps,	Shaw,	Taylor, I. H.	Wakefield,
Price,	Snyder,	Thomas, J. R.	Ward, T. B.
Ranney,	Spriggs,	Thomas, O. B.	Wilkins.
Reid, J. W.	Steele,	Thompson,
Rice,	Swinburne,	Throckmorton,

So the motion was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. MURPHY with Mr. HITT, on all political questions, until further notice, not to break a quorum.

Mr. WISE with Mr. LIBBEY, on all political questions, for this day, not to break a quorum.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A call of the House having been ordered, the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Adams, G. E.	Davis,	James,	Rice,
Aiken,	Dawson,	Johnson, F. A.	Robertson,
Anderson, C. M.	Eden,	Johnston, T. D.	Shaw,
Anderson, J. A.	Findlay,	Jones, J. T.	Snyder,
Arnot,	Funston,	Ketcham,	Spriggs,
Bayne,	Gilfillan,	Kleiner,	Steele,
Bragg,	Grosvenor,	Landes,	Taylor, I. H.
Browne, T. M.	Hanback,	McAdoo,	Throckmorton,
Buchanan,	Haynes,	Murphy,	Viele,
Bunnell,	Heard,	Negley,	Wakefield,
Clements,	Hemphill,	O'Ferrall,	Wilkins.
Cole,	Hill,	O'Neill, J. J.
Cooper,	Hitt,	Ranney,

The SPEAKER. The doors of the House will now be closed.

Mr. MORRISON. I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its members as are absent without leave of the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I move that all further proceedings under the call of the House be dispensed with.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 108.

Mr. REED, of Maine, demanded tellers.

Mr. MORRISON demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED, of Maine. My object is to proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. MORRISON. And I want to provide a way for the payment of the pensions granted by the two Houses of Congress.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 95, nays 146, not voting 82; as follows:

YEAS—95.

Allen, C. H.	Gallinger,	McKinley,	Smalls,
Baker,	Goff,	Millard,	Spooner,
Bound,	Grout,	Moffat,	Stephenson,
Boutelle,	Guenther,	Nelson,	Stewart, J. W.
Brown, C. E.	Harmer,	O'Donnell,	Stone, E. F.
Brown, W. W.	Henderson, D. B.	O'Hara,	Strait,
Brumm,	Hermann,	O'Neill, Charles	Struble,
Buck,	Hiestand,	Osborne,	Swinburne,
Burrows,	Hires,	Owen,	Symes,
Butterworth,	Holmes,	Parker,	Taylor, E. B.
Campbell, J. M.	Hopkins,	Payne,	Thomas, O. B.
Cannon,	Houk,	Payson,	Thompson,
Caswell,	Jackson,	Peters,	Van Schaick,
Conger,	Johnston, J. T.	Pettibone,	Wade,
Cutcheon,	Kelley,	Phelps,	Wadsworth,
Dingley,	La Follette,	Pirce,	Wait,
Dorsey,	Laird,	Plumb,	Warner, William
Dunham,	Lehlbach,	Price,	Weaver, A. J.
Ely,	Lindsley,	Reed, T. B.	Weber,
Evans,	Little,	Rockwell,	West,
Everhart,	Louttit,	Romeis,	White, A. C.
Farquhar,	Lyman,	Sawyer,	Whiting,
Fleeger,	McComas,	Scranton,	Woodburn.
Fuller,	McKenna,	Sessions,

NAYS—146.

Adams, J. J.	Catchings,	Geddes,	Lovering,
Allen, J. M.	Clardy,	Gibson, C. H.	Lowry,
Atkinson,	Cobb,	Glass,	Mahoney,
Ballentine,	Collins,	Glover,	Martin,
Barbour,	Compton,	Green, R. S.	Matson,
Barksdale,	Cowles,	Green, W. J.	McCreary,
Barnes,	Cox,	Hall,	McMillin,
Barry,	Crisp,	Halsell,	McRae,
Beach,	Croxton,	Hammond,	Merriman,
Belmont,	Culberson,	Harris,	Miller,
Bennett,	Curtin,	Hatch,	Mills,
Blanchard,	Daniel,	Henderson, J. S.	Mitchell,
Bland,	Dargan,	Henley,	Morgan,
Bliss,	Davidson, A. C.	Herbert,	Morrison,
Blount,	Davidson, R. H. M.	Hewitt,	Muller,
Boyle,	Dibble,	Holman,	Neal,
Breckinridge, C. R.	Dockery,	Howard,	Neece,
Breckinridge, WCP.	Dougherty,	Hudd,	Norwood,
Burnes,	Dowdney,	Hutton,	Oates,
Bynum,	Dunn,	Irion,	Outhwaite,
Cabell,	Eldredge,	Jones, J. H.	Peel,
Caldwell,	Ermentrout,	King,	Perry,
Campbell, Felix	Fisher,	Laffoon,	Pidcock,
Campbell, J. E.	Ford,	Lanham,	Pindar,
Campbell, T. J.	Forney,	Lawler,	Reagan,
Candler,	Frederick,	Le Fevre,	Reid, J. W.
Carleton,	Gay,	Lore,	Reese,

Richardson,	Stahlnecker,	Tillman,	Wellborn,
Riggs,	Stewart, Charles	Townshend,	Wheeler,
Robertson,	St. Martin,	Trigg,	Willis,
Rogers,	Stone, W. J., Ky.	Tucker,	Wilson,
Sadler,	Stone, W. J., Mo.	Turner,	Winans,
Sayers,	Storm,	Van Eaton,	Wise,
Scott,	Swope,	Wallace,	Wolford,
Seymour,	Tarsney,	Ward, J. H.	Worthington.
Skinner,	Taulbee,	Warner, A. J.
Sowden,	Taylor, J. M.	Weaver, J. B.

NOT VOTING—82.

Adams, G. E.	Eden,	Johnson, F. A.	Rice,
Aiken,	Ellsberry,	Johnston, T. D.	Rowell,
Anderson, C. M.	Felton,	Jones, J. T.	Ryan,
Anderson, J. A.	Findlay,	Ketcham,	Seney,
Arnot,	Foran,	Kleiner,	Shaw,
Bayne,	Funston,	Landes,	Singleton,
Bingham,	Gibson, Eustace	Libbey,	Snyder,
Brady,	Gilfillan,	Long,	Spriggs,
Bragg,	Grosvenor,	Markham,	Springer,
Browne, T. M.	Hale,	Maybury,	Steele,
Buchanan,	Hanback,	McAdoo,	Taylor, I. H.
Bunnell,	Hayden,	Milliken,	Taylor, Zach.
Burleigh,	Haynes,	Morrill,	Thomas, J. R.
Clements,	Heard,	Morrow,	Throckmorton,
Cole,	Hemphill,	Murphy,	Viele,
Comstock,	Henderson, T. J.	Negley,	Wakefield,
Cooper,	Hepburn,	O'Ferrall,	Ward, T. B.
Crain,	Hill,	O'Neill, J. J.	White, Milo
Davenport,	Hiscock,	Perkins,	Wilkins.
Davis,	Hitt,	Randall,
Dawson,	James,	Ranney,

So the House refused to suspend further proceedings under the call during the roll-call.

Mr. WHEELER said: I am engaged to attend a conference committee at 2 o'clock, and I want to know—— [Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The House is voting.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. MCADOO with Mr. OWEN, for the rest of the day.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. HISCOCK, for the remainder of the day.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask by unanimous consent leave of absence to attend a conference committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. OWEN. I ask leave of absence for the remainder of the day on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. DARGAN. I also ask leave of absence to attend a conference committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask leave of absence for my colleague [Mr. THROCKMORTON] on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the roll-call disclose the presence of a quorum?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I ask the gentleman from Illinois why the necessity for further proceedings under the call? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. REED, of Maine. We might go on with the appropriation bill.

Mr. MORRISON. Yes; or the pension bill.

The question being taken on the resolution of Mr. MORRISON, the House divided; and there were—ayes 110, noes 61.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let us have tellers. This is in the interest of economy.

Mr. MORRISON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 143, nays 100, not voting 80; as follows:

YEAS—143.

Adams, J. J.	Cowles,	Hall,	Merriman,
Allen, J. M.	Cox,	Halsell,	Miller,
Ballentine,	Crain,	Hammond,	Mills,
Barbour,	Crisp,	Harris,	Mitchell,
Barksdale,	Croxton,	Hatch,	Morgan,
Barnes,	Culberson,	Henderson, J. S.	Morrison,
Barry,	Curtin,	Herbert,	Muller,
Beach,	Daniel,	Hewitt,	Neal,
Belmont,	Dargan,	Holman,	Neece,
Bennett,	Davidson, A. C.	Howard,	Norwood,
Bland,	Davidson, R. H. M.	Hudd,	Oates,
Blount,	Dibble,	Hutton,	Outhwaite,
Boyle,	Dockery,	Irion,	Peel,
Breckinridge, C. R.	Dougherty,	Jones, J. H.	Perry,
Burnes,	Dunn,	Laffoon,	Pidcock,
Bynum,	Eldredge,	Lanham,	Pindar,
Cabell,	Ellsberry,	Lawler,	Reagan,
Caldwell,	Ermentrout,	Le Fevre,	Reid, J. W.
Campbell, Felix	Fisher,	Lore,	Reese,
Campbell, J. E.	Ford,	Lovering,	Richardson,
Campbell, T. J.	Forney,	Lowry,	Riggs,
Candler,	Frederick,	Mahoney,	Robertson,
Carleton,	Gay,	Martin,	Rogers,
Catchings,	Geddes,	Matson,	Sadler,
Clardy,	Gibson, C. H.	Maybury,	Sayers,
Cobb,	Glass,	McCreary,	Scott,
Collins,	Green, R. S.	McMillin,	Seney,
Compton,	Green, W. J.	McRae,	Seymour,
Singleton,	Stone, W. J., Mo.	Trigg,	Wellborn,
Skinner,	Storm,	Tucker,	Willis,
Sowden,	Swope,	Turner,	Wilson,
Springer,	Tarsney,	Van Eaton,	Winans,
Stahlnecker,	Taulbee,	Ward, J. H.	Wise,
Stewart, Charles	Taylor, J. M.	Ward, T. B.	Wolford,
St. Martin,	Tillman,	Warner, A. J.	Worthington.
Stone, W. J., Ky.	Townshend,	Weaver, J. B.

NAYS—100.

Atkinson,	Fuller,	Lyman,	Rowell,
Baker,	Gallinger,	McComas,	Ryan,
Bingham,	Gilfillan,	McKenna,	Sawyer,
Bound,	Goff,	McKinley,	Scranton,
Boutelle,	Grout,	Millard,	Smalls,
Brown, C. E.	Guenther,	Milliken,	Spooner,
Brown, W. W.	Hale,	Moffatt,	Stephenson,
Brumm,	Harmer,	Morrill,	Stone, E. F.
Buck,	Hayden,	Morrow,	Strait,
Burrows,	Henderson, D. B.	Nelson,	Struble,
Butterworth,	Hermann,	O'Donnell,	Symes,
Campbell, J. M.	Hiestand,	O'Hara,	Taylor, E. B.
Cannon,	Hires,	O'Neill, Charles	Thomas, J. R.
Caswell,	Holmes,	Osborne,	Thomas, O. B.
Cutcheon,	Hopkins,	Parker,	Thompson,
Davenport,	Houk,	Payne,	Van Schaick,
Davis,	Jackson,	Payson,	Wade,
Dingley,	Johnston, J. T.	Perkins,	Wait,
Dorsey,	La Follette,	Pettibone,	Warner, William
Dunham,	Laird,	Pirce,	Weaver, A. J.
Ely,	Lehlbach,	Plumb,	Weber,
Evans,	Lindsley,	Price,	West,
Everhart,	Little,	Reed, T. B.	White, A. C.
Farquhar,	Long,	Rockwell,	White, Milo
Fleeger,	Louttit,	Romeis,	Woodburn.

NOT VOTING—80.

Adams, G. E.	Cooper,	Hitt,	Randall,
Aiken,	Dawson,	James,	Ranney,
Allen, C. H.	Dowdney,	Johnson, F. A.	Rice,
Anderson, C. M.	Eden,	Johnston, T. D.	Sessions,
Anderson, J. A.	Felton,	Jones, J. T.	Shaw,
Arnot,	Findlay,	Kelley,	Snyder,
Bayne,	Foran,	Ketcham,	Spriggs,
Blanchard,	Funston,	King,	Steele,
Bliss,	Gibson, Eustace	Kleiner,	Stewart, J. W.
Brady,	Glover,	Landes,	Swinburne,
Bragg,	Grosvenor,	Libbey,	Taylor, I. H.
Breckinridge, WCP.	Hanback,	Markham,	Taylor, Zach.
Browne, T. M.	Haynes,	McAdoo,	Throckmorton,
Buchanan,	Heard,	Murphy,	Viele,
Bunnell,	Hemphill,	Negley,	Wadsworth,
Burleigh,	Henderson, T. J.	O'Ferrall,	Wakefield,
Clements,	Henley,	O'Neill, J. J.	Wallace,
Cole,	Hepburn,	Owen,	Wheeler,
Comstock,	Hill,	Peters,	Whiting,
Conger,	Hiscock,	Phelps,	Wilkins.

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the names of those not present on the call for excuses. Gentlemen who are present can respond as their names are called.

The Clerk called the names of the absentees for excuses, as follows:

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois: No excuse offered.

Mr. AIKEN: No excuse offered.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio: No excuse offered.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas: No excuse offered.

Mr. ARNOT.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Mr. ARNOT be excused on account of sickness.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAYNE: No excuse offered.

Mr. BRAGG: Absent on conference.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana: Absent with leave.

Mr. BUCHANAN.

Mr. PHELPS. My colleague is absent by reason of sickness, and I ask that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUNNELL.

Mr. OSBORNE. I ask that my colleague be excused. He is detained at home on important business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLEMENTS.

Mr. CRISP. My colleague is absent by leave of the House.

The SPEAKER. The record so states.

Mr. COLE, of Maryland.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. The gentleman from Maryland is absent sick.

The SPEAKER. The chair is informed that the gentleman from Maryland is absent with leave.

Mr. COOPER: Absent with leave.

Mr. DAWSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. EDEN: Absent with leave.

Mr. FINDLAY: No excuse offered.

Mr. FUNSTON: No excuse offered.

Mr. GILFILLAN:

Mr. GILFILLAN. I have been ill all night and to-day, but came to the House as soon as I could. I now ask to be excused for the remainder of the day.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GROSVENOR: Absent with leave.

Mr. HANBACK: No excuse offered.

Mr. HAYNES: No excuse offered.
Mr. HEARD: No excuse offered.
Mr. HEMPHILL: No excuse offered.
Mr. HILL: No excuse offered.
Mr. HITT: No excuse offered.
Mr. JAMES: Absent with leave.
Mr. JOHNSON, of New York: Absent with leave.
Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina.
Mr. REID, of North Carolina. My colleague is detained from the House by sickness.
The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the gentleman is absent with leave.
Mr. JONES, of Alabama: Absent with leave.
Mr. KETCHAM: No excuse offered.
Mr. KLEINER: No excuse offered.
Mr. LANDES.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask that my colleague be excused on account of sickness.
The motion was agreed to.
Mr. MCADOO.
Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MCADOO, was called home on account of important business. I move that he be excused.
The motion was agreed to.
Mr. MURPHY.
Mr. HALL. Up to this moment I had supposed my colleague had leave of absence, but am informed that it has expired. I ask that he be excused.
The request was agreed to.
Mr. NEGLEY: No excuse offered.
Mr. O'FERRALL: No excuse offered.
Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri: Absent on leave.
Mr. RANNEY: No excuse offered.
Mr. RICE: No excuse offered.
Mr. ROBERTSON: No excuse offered.
Mr. SHAW: Absent on leave.
Mr. SNYDER: No excuse offered.
Mr. SPRIGGS: No excuse offered.
Mr. STEELE: Absent on conference.
Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR: No excuse offered.
Mr. THROCKMORTON: Absent on leave.
Mr. VIELE: Absent on conference.
Mr. WAKEFIELD: Absent on leave.
Mr. WILKINS: Absent on leave.
Mr. DAVIS. When my name was reached in the call of the House I was absent acting on a conference committee.
The SPEAKER. The name of the gentleman from Massachusetts has been entered as present.
Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to inquire if my colleague, Mr. HAYNES, has leave of absence?
The SPEAKER. His leave of absence has expired.
Mr. GALLINGER. My colleague is unavoidably detained at his home. I ask that he be excused.
There was no objection.
Mr. BEACH. I ask that my colleague, Mr. SPRIGGS, who is absent, be excused. He went home to attend the marriage of his daughter, which takes place to-day.
There was no objection.
Mr. OSBORNE. I ask that my colleague, General NEGLEY, be excused.
Mr. MORRISON. Why?
Mr. OSBORNE. He is detained attending a commercial convention.
The SPEAKER. Is he absent from the city?
Mr. OSBORNE. I believe he is in the city.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that his colleague, Mr. NEGLEY, be excused. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. HATCH. My colleague, Mr. HEARD, has left the city for Missouri, and I understand has an application on the Speaker's desk for leave of absence. I ask that he be excused.
There was no objection.
Mr. CLARDY. I understand my name was called among the absentees. I was absent attending a conference committee.
The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be recorded as present.
There was no objection.
Mr. ROCKWELL. I ask that my colleague [Mr. RANNEY], who is absent from the city, be excused.
There was no objection.
Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I ask leave of absence. I have an important engagement to which I desire to attend this afternoon. I ask to be excused from further attendance to-day.
There was no objection.
Mr. NEECE. I ask that my colleague, Mr. G. E. ADAMS, be excused. He is absent from the city, and is paired.
There being no objection, Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, was excused.
Mr. WADE. I ask that Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, be excused. He is paired with Mr. HEARD, of Missouri.
The SPEAKER. Is he absent from the city?
Mr. WADE. Yes, sir.
There being no objection, Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, was excused.
Mr. CUTCHEON. As there seems to be nothing occupying the attention of the House at this time, I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill (S. 2056) to increase the pensions of one-armed and one-legged soldiers and that the same be put upon its passage.
The SPEAKER. The House can not transact other business while a call of the House continues.
Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask unanimous consent for the purpose I have indicated.
Mr. MORRISON. I call for the regular order.
Mr. BRUMM. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill S. 1886. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I wish to make a statement.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not make a statement when the regular order is demanded.
Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BRUMM. Would it be in order at this time to move to suspend further proceedings under the call of the House, and in that motion to state the reason why I wish to have the proceedings suspended? [Cries of "Regular order!"]
The SPEAKER. It would be in order to move to suspend further proceedings under the call, but debate would not be in order.
Mr. BRUMM. No debate—simply to state to the House the reason—— [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of absence for the remainder of this day on account of important business.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks leave of absence for the remainder of this day on account of important business.
Mr. REED, of Maine. Which gentleman from Illinois?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. PAYSON.
Mr. REED, of Maine. If the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] would consent to take up the sundry civil bill we could go on with the business of the House.
Mr. MORRISON. Let us take up the pension bill with this amendment.
Mr. REED, of Maine. You can take up the pension bill if you want to under the rules of the House.
There was no objection, and the leave of absence was granted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit some remarks upon the subject of the tariff.
Mr. MORRISON and others. Regular order.
Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I would engage to made the remarks as soothing to the nerves and as soporific as possible.
Mr. MORRISON. When you want to consider the tariff bill vote to take it up.
Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I do not want to take up the tariff bill; I want to submit some remarks.
Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Speaker, I am in receipt of a petition addressed to the Congress of the United States by citizens of my district, asking that Senate bill No. 1886 be passed without amendment. I ask unanimous consent to have the same read to the House now. [Cries of "Regular order!"] It is very short. It will not take much time. [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"] I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. GUENTHER. Would it be in order now to send this petition from citizens of Adams County, Wisconsin, for the passage of Senate bill 1886 to the petition-box?
The SPEAKER. It is in order, under the rules of the House, to place it in the petition-box. [Laughter.]
Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up from the Speaker's table report No. 2993, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and rerefer it to that committee, there having been two reports made on the same bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]
The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.
Mr. LONG (at 3.45 p. m.). I move that the House do now adjourn.
The question was taken; and there were—ayes 80, noes 93.
So the House refused to adjourn.
Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a conference report. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, was excused from further attendance to-day on account of sickness.
Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, as the House is disinclined to allow me to discuss the tariff, I would be very much obliged if they would excuse me for the remainder of this afternoon.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, be excused for the remainder of the day.

A MEMBER. I object.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be excused for the rest of the day. I can do nothing here, and I have some important business to attend to outside.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

On motion of Mr. WORTHINGTON, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. RIGGS.

Mr. WAIT. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be excused for the remainder of the day.

Mr. COBB. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up and consider the bill for the forfeiture of the Northern Pacific land grant, involving 27,000,000 acres of the public domain. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I see the objection comes from the Republican side. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. STRUBLE. We are willing on this side.

Mr. HENLEY. No, you are not. The objection comes from your side.

Mr. DUNHAM. Bring it up. We consent.

Mr. CANNON. You have got a majority here; why do you not go on with the business of the House?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, as forty minutes still remain before 5 o'clock, I renew my request for unanimous consent to take up the one-armed and one-legged soldier bill and pass the same. [Cries of "Regular order!"] It would take only a few minutes to pass it. [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. REED, of Maine. Would it not be in order to choose an efficient Sergeant-at-Arms? [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I am advised that all the members now in the city are now present in the House, and I therefore move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 92, noes 5.

So the motion was agreed to, and further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to strike out Friday and insert Saturday, and upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered by the House. Before the roll-call begins the Chair will announce a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill (H. R. 1341) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Natchez, Miss.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill (S. 2281) granting to railroads the right of way through the Indian reservation in Northern Montana.

COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as managers on the part of the House in the conference of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill 209 the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GEDDES, the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. RICHARDSON, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. LYMAN.

The question was taken on Mr. BURROWS's motion; and there were—yeas 2, nays 145, not voting 176; as follows:

YEAS—2.

	Brumm,	Hepburn.

NAYS—145.

Adams, J. J.	Compton,	Glass,	Lowry,
Allen, J. M.	Comstock,	Glover,	Mahoney,
Ballentine,	Cowles,	Green, R. S.	Martin,
Barnes,	Cox,	Green, W. J.	Matson,
Barry,	Crisp,	Hale,	Maybury,
Beach,	Croxton,	Hall,	McCreary,
Belmont,	Culberson,	Halsell,	McMillin,
Blanchard,	Curtin,	Hammond,	McRae,
Bland,	Daniel,	Harris,	Merriman,
Bliss,	Dargan,	Hatch,	Miller,
Blount,	Davidson, R. H. M.	Henderson, J. S.	Mills,
Bragg,	Dibble,	Henley,	Mitchell,
Breckinridge, C. R.	Dockery,	Herbert,	Morgan,
Breckinridge, WCP.	Dougherty,	Hewitt,	Morrison,
Burnes,	Dunn,	Holman,	Muller,
Bynum,	Eldredge,	Howard,	Neal,
Cabell,	Ellsberry,	Hudd,	Neece,
Caldwell,	Ely,	Hutton,	Norwood,
Campbell, Felix	Ermentrout,	Irion,	Oates,
Campbell, J. E.	Fisher,	Jones, J. H.	Peel,
Campbell, T. J.	Foran,	Kleiner,	Pidcock,
Candler,	Ford,	Laffoon,	Pindar,
Carleton,	Forney,	Lanham,	Reagan,
Catchings,	Frederick,	Lawler,	Reid, J. W.
Clardy,	Gay,	Le Fevre,	Richardson,
Cobb,	Geddes,	Lore,	Robertson,
Collins,	Gibson, C. H.	Lovering,	Rogers,
Sadler,	Stewart, Charles	Trigg,	Wellborn,
Sayers,	St. Martin,	Tucker,	Wheeler,
Scott,	Stone, W. J., Mo.	Turner,	Willis,
Seney,	Storm,	Van Eaton,	Wilson,
Seymour,	Swope,	Viele,	Winans,
Singleton,	Tarsney,	Ward, J. H.	Wolford,
Skinner,	Taulbee,	Ward, T. B.	Worthington.
Sowden,	Taylor, J. M.	Warner, A. J.
Springer,	Tillman,	Weaver, A. J.
Stahlnecker,	Townshend,	Weaver, J. B.

NOT VOTING—176.

Adams, G. E.	Evans,	Lehlbach,	Riggs,
Aiken,	Everhart,	Libbey,	Rockwell,
Allen, C. H.	Farquhar,	Lindsley,	Romeis,
Anderson, C. M.	Felton,	Little,	Rowell,
Anderson, J. A.	Findlay,	Long,	Ryan,
Arnot,	Fleeger,	Louttit,	Sawyer,
Atkinson,	Fuller,	Lyman,	Scranton,
Baker,	Funston,	Markham,	Sessions,
Barbour,	Gallinger,	McAdoo,	Shaw,
Barksdale,	Gibson, Eustace	McComas,	Smalls,
Bayne,	Gilfillan,	McKenna,	Snyder,
Bennett,	Goff,	McKinley,	Spooner,
Bingham,	Grosvenor,	Millard,	Spriggs,
Bound,	Grout,	Milliken,	Steele,
Boutelle,	Guenther,	Moffatt,	Stephenson,
Boyle,	Hanback,	Morrill,	Stewart, J. W.
Brady,	Harmer,	Morrow,	Stone, E. F.
Browne, T. M.	Hayden,	Murphy,	Stone, W. J., Ky.
Brown, C. E.	Haynes,	Negley,	Strait,
Brown, W. W.	Heard,	Nelson,	Struble,
Buchanan,	Hemphill,	O'Donnell,	Swinburne,
Buck,	Henderson, D. B.	O'Ferrall,	Symes,
Bunnell,	Henderson, T. J.	O'Hara,	Taylor, E. B.
Burleigh,	Herman,	O'Neill, Charles	Taylor, I. H.
Burrows,	Hiestand,	O'Neill, J. J.	Taylor, Zach.
Butterworth,	Hill,	Osborne,	Thomas, J. R.
Campbell, J. M.	Hires,	Outhwaite,	Thomas, O. B.
Cannon,	Hiscock,	Owen,	Thompson,
Caswell,	Hitt,	Parker,	Throckmorton,
Clements,	Holmes,	Payne,	Van Schaick,
Cole,	Hopkins,	Payson,	Wade,
Conger,	Houk,	Perkins,	Wadsworth,
Cooper,	Jackson,	Perry,	Wait,
Crain,	James,	Peters,	Wakefield,
Cutcheon,	Johnson, F. A.	Pettibone,	Wallace,
Davenport,	Johnston, J. T.	Phelps,	Warner, William
Davidson, A. C.	Johnston, T. D.	Pirce,	Weber,
Davis,	Jones, J. T.	Plumb,	West,
Dawson,	Kelley,	Price,	White, A. C.
Dingley,	Ketcham,	Randall,	White, Milo
Dorsey,	King,	Ranney,	Whiting,
Dowdney,	La Follette,	Reed, T. B.	Wilkins,
Dunham,	Laird,	Reese,	Wise,
Eden,	Landes,	Rice,	Woodburn.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, with Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, for the remainder of this day.

Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. EVERHART, on this vote.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 2 and the nays 145. No quorum has voted.

Mr. MORRISON. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER (having put the question). The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I call for a division.

Mr. MORRISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 131, nays 70, not voting 122; as follows:

YEAS—131.

Adams, J. J.	Curtin,	Irion,	Rogers,
Allen, J. M.	Daniel,	Jones, J. H.	Sadler,
Ballentine,	Dargan,	King,	Sayers,
Barbour,	Davidson, A. C.	Kliner,	Seney,
Barksdale,	Davidson, R. H. M.	Laffoon,	Seymour,
Barnes,	Dibble,	Lanham,	Singleton,
Barry,	Dougherty,	Lawler,	Sowden,
Beach,	Dunn,	Le Fevre,	Stahlnecker,
Belmont,	Eldredge,	Lore,	Stewart, Charles
Bland,	Ellsberry,	Loveering,	St. Martin,
Bliss,	Ermentrout,	Lowry,	Stone, W. J., Mo.
Blount,	Fisher,	Martin,	Storm,
Boyle,	Foran,	Matson,	Swope,
Bragg,	Ford,	McCreary,	Taulbee,
Breckinridge, C. R.	Forney,	McMillin,	Taylor, J. M.
Breckinridge, WCP.	Frederick,	McRae,	Tillman,
Bynum,	Gibson, C. H.	Miller,	Townshend,
Cabell,	Glass,	Mills,	Trigg,
Caldwell,	Green, R. S.	Morgan,	Tucker,
Campbell, J. E.	Green, W. J.	Morrison,	Turner,
Campbell, T. J.	Hall,	Muller,	Van Eaton,
Candler,	Halsell,	Neal,	Viele,
Catchings,	Hammond,	Norwood,	Ward, J. H.
Clardy,	Harris,	Oates,	Warner, A. J.
Cobb,	Hatch,	Outhwaite,	Weaver, J. B.
Collins,	Henderson, J. S.	Peel,	Wellborn,
Compton,	Henley,	Perry,	Wheeler,
Cowles,	Herbert,	Pidcock,	Wilson,
Cox,	Hewitt,	Pindar,	Winans,
Crain,	Holman,	Reagan,	Wise,
Crisp,	Howard,	Reid, J. W.	Wolford,
Croxton,	Hudd,	Richardson,	Worthington.
Culberson,	Hutton,	Robertson,

NAYS—70.

Allen, C. H.	Brown, W. W.	Dingley,	Farquhar,
Atkinson,	Brumm,	Dunham,	Felton,
Bingham,	Burrows,	Ely,	Fleeger,
Bound,	Conger,	Evans,	Fuller,
Brown, C. E.	Cutcheon,	Everhart,	Gallinger,

Grout,	McKenna,	Pirce,	Swinburne,
Hayden,	McKinley,	Plumb,	Taylor, Zach.
Hepburn,	Millard,	Price,	Thomas, O. B.
Hermann,	Moffatt,	Romeis,	Van Schaick,
Hires,	Morrill,	Rowell,	Wade,
Holmes,	Morrow,	Sawyer,	Warner, William
Hopkins,	O'Donnell,	Sessions,	Weaver, A. J.
Jackson,	O'Hara,	Smalls,	Weber,
La Follette	Osborne,	Spooner,	West,
Libbey,	Parker,	Stephenson,	White, A. C.
Lindsley,	Payne,	Stewart, J. W.	White, Milo.
Little,	Perkins,	Strait,
Lyman,	Peters,	Struble,

NOT VOTING—122.

Adams, G. E.	Dorsey,	Kelley,	Riggs,
Aiken,	Dowdney,	Ketcham,	Rockwell,
Anderson, C. M.	Eden,	Laird,	Ryan,
Anderson, J. A.	Findlay,	Landes,	Scott,
Arnot,	Funston,	Lehlbach,	Scranton,
Baker,	Gay,	Long,	Shaw,
Bayne,	Geddes,	Louttit,	Skinner,
Bennett,	Gibson, Eustace	Mahoney,	Snyder,
Blanchard,	Gilfillan,	Markham,	Spriggs,
Boutelle,	Glover,	Maybury,	Springer,
Brady,	Goff,	McAdoo,	Steele,
Browne, T. M.	Grosvenor,	McComas,	Stone, E. F.
Buchanan,	Guenther,	Merriman,	Stone, W. J., Ky.
Buck,	Hale,	Milliken,	Symes,
Bunnell,	Hanback,	Mitchell,	Tarsney,
Burleigh,	Harmer,	Murphy,	Taylor, E. B.
Burnes,	Haynes,	Neece,	Taylor, I. H.
Butterworth,	Heard,	Negley,	Thomas, J. R.
Campbell, Felix	Hemphill,	Nelson,	Thompson,
Campbell, J. M.	Henderson, D. B.	O'Ferrall,	Throckmorton,
Cannon,	Henderson, T. J.	O'Neill, Charles	Wadsworth,
Carleton,	Hiestand,	O'Neill, J. J.	Wait,
Caswell,	Hill,	Owen,	Wakefield,
Clements,	Hiscock,	Payson,	Wallace,
Cole,	Hitt,	Pettibone,	Ward, T. B.
Comstock,	Houk,	Phelps,	Whiting,
Cooper,	James,	Randall,	Wilkins,
Davenport,	Johnson, F. A.	Ranney,	Willis,
Davis,	Johnston, J. T.	Reed, T. B.	Woodburn.
Dawson,	Johnston, T. D.	Reese,
Dockery,	Jones, J. T.	Rice,

So the motion of Mr. MORRISON was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House stands adjourned until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BALLENTINE: Petition of heir at law of R. R. Hightower, deceased, late of Williamson County, Tennessee, asking for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BRUMM: Petition of J. T. Brown and 63 others, asking for the passage of pension bill recommended by the committee of the Grand Army of the Republic—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. A. C. DAVIDSON: Petition of Mrs. Harriet M. Jones, of Newbern, Ala., asking that her war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GIFFORD: Petition of veterans of the late war and members of John B. Wyman Post, No. 165, Grand Army of the Republic, of Dakota, for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GUENTHER: Petition of citizens of Adams County, Wisconsin, praying for the passage of Senate bill 1886 without amendment—to the same committee.

By Mr. IRION: Petition of Estella Chedester, of Baton Rouge, and of John J. Gardiner, of Saint Landry Parish, Louisiana, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. J. T. JOHNSTON: Petition of 2,500 soldiers and citizens of Indiana, asking for the passage of House bill 3320, pensioning all Union soldiers, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KING: Petition of J. Walter Blandford, for compensation for services as clerk to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: Petition of Benjamin T. Atherton and others, for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEAL: Petition of J. A. P. Guthrie, of James County, Tennessee, asking that his claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OSBORNE: Resolutions of citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of the educational bill—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: Petition of the administrator of Thomas Jarrett, deceased; of administrator of Ann Thompson, deceased, and of administrator of A. T. White, deceased, of Rutherford County, Tennessee, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. J. W. STEWART: Petition of William W. Gifford and 57 others, in favor of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STRAIT: Petition of the Board of Trade of Mankato, Minn., for the improvement of the Minnesota River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR: Petition of William Johnson, administrator of Thomas J. Johnson, deceased, asking that his claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. T. B. WARD: Petition of David Bryan, of Tippecanoe County, Indiana, praying for back pay as an officer of United States volunteers—to the same committee.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of Rusell M. Kilburn, of Lauderdale County, and of James J. Holsenbeck, of De Kalb County, Alabama, asking that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. WILSON: Petition of John H. Fout, administrator of George Fout, of Grant County; of William B. Stump, of Hampshire County; and of John W. Vandiver, administrator of William Vandiver, of Mineral County, West Virginia, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 24, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of the 9th instant, copies of papers and letters in respect to the claim of William J. Martin for balance due on alleged contract to furnish beef-cattle to the Government, made in June, 1849; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of 80 dairymen and butter-makers of Maine, praying for the passage of the bill taxing imitation butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. ALLISON presented resolutions adopted by the board of supervisors of Linn County, Iowa, favoring the passage of what is known as the swamp-land indemity bill now pending before the Committee on Claims; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Korner & Schwabeland and 101 other prominent citizens of New York city, praying Congress to authorize the Secretary of War to contract with Charles Stoughton and his associates for the building of the Harlem River Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BROWN. I present a communication addressed to me, which is intended as a memorial to Congress, signed by Bishop L. H. Holsey, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church; Bishop W. H. Miles, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church; Bishop Isaac Lane, also of the same Church, and a large number of the most influential clergy of that Church, in which they refer, first, to the act organizing the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and they claim that the Government was liable to pay to the depositors all the money that was deposited by colored people in that bank; and then they cite a number of amendatory acts of Congress on that subject, showing, as they understand it, that the Government controlled it all the time and was responsible for it. They say they have only received 62 per cent. of the amount deposited, and they pray Congress to make provision for paying to them the remaining 38 per cent. of the deposits, and they claim that it is a right due them and not a favor asked, but that the Government of the United States is liable for it.

As the petition involves probably an important legal question, I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with the request that they report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that reference will be made.

Mr. CALL presented a petition of 25 citizens of Madison County, Florida, and a petition of citizens of Marion County, Florida, praying that the time of the Florida Railway and Navigation Company for the completion of their road may be extended; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present an additional affidavit, of G. G. Benedict and other gentlemen of Chittenden County, Vermont, in support of the pension claim of Mrs. Emily J. Stannard, widow of General George J. Stannard. The bill has been reported with the papers, I understand, and I ask that this additional piece of proof may be placed on file with the other papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. PALMER presented a petition of four societies of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Detroit, Mich., praying for legislation for the protection of young girls; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of Lester H. Salsbury and 84 others, citizens of Lenawee County, Michigan, praying for the relief of the widow of Lieut. Joseph L. Smith, late of the Fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of citizens and dealers in both butter and butterine, of Menominee County, Michigan, remonstrating against the passage of the bill imposing a tax of 5 cents per pound upon oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CULLOM presented the petition of Wallace Post, No. 55, Grand Army of the Republic, of Centralia, Ill., praying Congress to grant a pension to Mrs. Lavinia B. Wright for services as nurse in the late civil war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COLQUITT. I present a petition of sundry colored citizens of the city of Augusta, Ga., praying for the consideration of some measures of relief in consequence of the failure of the Freedman's Savings Bank. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I present a petition of 50 delegates and members of Indian tribes residing in the Indian Territory and elsewhere, praying for the repeal of the present law in regard to trading with Indians. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of Mrs. Isabella W. Adduddell, widow of John F. Adduddell, late captain of the Third Kansas Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of George E. Armstrong, late private Company G, Ninety-seventh Illinois Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of ex-soldiers of Silver City, Ark., favoring pension legislation, recommended by the national committee of the Grand Army of the Republic; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Illinois division of the Travelers' Protective Association, at Chicago, Ill., favoring the passage of the House bill relating to licensing commercial travelers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Illinois State Labor Association, protesting against the passage of the bill imposing a tax on oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9106) granting a pension to Rachel Barnes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SPOONER. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds authorized the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to report an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill. He is ill and detained from the Senate, and at his request and on his behalf I report from the committee the amendment, and move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives to print the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1884–'85, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1884–'85 there be printed 6,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 12,000 copies for the use of the House, and 20,000 for the use of the Commissioner of Education.

STATISTICS OF WAGES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 57) to print an addition to a report on wages ordered printed January 17, 1884, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to print, as an addition to the report on the Statistics of Wages in Manufacturing Industries, prepared by Mr. Joseph D. Weeks and ordered printed by the House of Representatives January 17, 1884, a report on the Relative Wages in the United States and Great Britain, compiled by Mr. Weeks.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

C. H. MANN.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations instruct me to report back with an amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 5) authorizing payment of C. H. Mann, messenger to the reporters' gallery. If there is no objection, I ask that the joint resolution be passed. It relates to a House matter.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 7, after the word "eighty," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, &c., That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to C. H. Mann the salary provided for in the act making appropriations for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses for the fiscal year ending June 39, 1886, for the messenger in the reporters' gallery, rom July 1 to December 7, 1885, inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

CONSULAR REPORTS ON CATTLE-BREEDING AND DAIRY-FARMING.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Printing instruct me to report favorably the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives for printing reports of consuls of the United States on cattle-breeding and dairy-farming. I ask for immediate action upon it.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 4,000 copies of the reports of the consuls of the United States on cattle-breeding and dairy-farming; 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 copies for the use of the State Department.

BARRACKS AT BATON ROUGE, LA., ETC.

Mr. WALTHALL. I rise to submit a report from a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 985) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer the United States barracks at Baton Rouge, La., to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College at said place for educational purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

E. C. WALTHALL,
O. D. CONGER,
H. M. TELLER,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.
JOSEPH WHEELER,
G. W. DARGAN,
GEO. W. STEELE,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2731) granting a pension to Eli McCallister; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STANFORD introduced a bill (S. 2732) to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John F. Miller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 2733) for the relief of Dr. John R. Hall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BROWN introduced a bill (S. 2734) to provide for the survey of Jekyl Creek Bar, on the coast of Georgia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 2735) for the relief of Sarah D. Tomlinson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2736) granting a pension to George D. Paul; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 2737) granting a pension to Judson Knight; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GEORGE introduced a bill (S. 2738) to restrict the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LOGAN introduced a bill (S. 2739) granting a pension to James A. Demastus; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2740) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. H. P. Kiernan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 71) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Southwestern Iowa and Northwestern Missouri Veteran Soldiers' Association, for reunion purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. SEWELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BECK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3037) relating to the licensing of vessels engaged in towing to carry persons in addition to their crews.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2148) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts of the United States, the post-office, and other Government offices at Williamsport, Pa., and making an additional appropriation therefor," agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DIBBLE, Mr. T. D. JOHNSTON, and Mr. W. W. BROWN the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 544) granting leave of absence to employés in the Government Printing Office, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BARKSDALE, Mr. REID of North Carolina, and Mr. FARQUHAR the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

JUDGE FOR SOUTHERN ALABAMA—JUDICIAL SALARIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Concurrent and other resolutions" are in order. [A pause.] If there be none such the Chair, under the direction made by unanimous consent yesterday, lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is entitled to the floor on the pending bill.

Mr. PUGH. Will the Senator give way to me that I may make a motion?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. PUGH. I ask the Senate to consider Order of Business 1134, House bill 28.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 28) to provide for the appointment and compensation of a district judge for the southern district of Alabama.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the regular order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the pre-emption bill, which is now before the Senate. The bill, in the judgment of the Chair, can only be displaced by unanimous consent, as the order was made by unanimous consent yesterday that at the close of the morning business to-day the Senate would proceed to its consideration.

Mr. PUGH. It will take but a few minutes to dispose of the bill to which I refer. It is purely local.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PLUMB. The unfinished business, I understand, has been laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been.

Mr. PLUMB. The suggestion of the Senator from Alabama is that that be informally laid aside?

Mr. PUGH. Yes; it will not take five minutes.

Mr. PLUMB. Having been admonished heretofore about yielding to matters, I do not care to do so, but still I do not want to disoblige my friend from Alabama if his bill will not take more than a moment or two and will not elicit debate. I shall not object, if nobody else does.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks that the pending order be laid aside informally with a view to proceeding to the consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 28) to provide for the appointment and compensation of a district judge for the southern district of Alabama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill has been read at length, and the amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary agreed to, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] is pending. It will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend by adding as a new section:

SEC. —. That the salary of all the district judges of the United States shall be $5,000 per annum hereafter.

Mr. LOGAN. Let the word "hereafter" be transposed so as to read:

That hereafter the salary of all the district judges of the United States shall be $5,000 per annum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that he modify the amendment so as to make it conform exactly to the bill passed by the Senate on that subject, which embraces two sections.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; I will offer in place of the pending amendment the bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and which was passed at this session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated as now offered.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill the following additional sections:

SEC. —. That the salaries of the several judges of the district courts of the United States shall hereafter be at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. —. That no person related to any justice or judge of any court of the United States by affinity or consanguinity, within the degree of first cousin, shall be appointed by such court or judge to or employed by such court or judge in any office or duty in any court of which such justice or judge may be a member.

Mr. GEORGE. That is a very important matter. It is general legislation upon a local bill. The Senate is very well aware that I am opposed to any legislation of that sort; I think the yeas and nays ought to be called on agreeing to the amendment, and I call for them.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to the yeas and nays being taken. I will call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this same amendment was reported by the Judiciary Committee in the form of a bill, fully considered by them, and it was passed by the Senate at this session of Congress.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that, but that was a general bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KENNA. Is the bill in order at this time except by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is certainly in order.

Mr. PUGH. It has been taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. KENNA. Has it been reached regularly?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was taken up by unanimous consent, on the request of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. KENNA. The Senator from Alabama is very well aware that I objected to the consideration of the bill the other day on account of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois. I have just come into the Senate Chamber; and if it is not too late to object, I object now to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is too late, as the Senate has by unanimous consent proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. KENNA. If the objection comes too late, then I appeal to the Senator from Alabama whether it was fair to take up the bill in my absence, knowing my avowed objection to it?

Mr. PUGH. If the Senator from West Virginia insists on it I do not desire that he shall lose his right on that account; but I ask him if it would not be as well to allow the Senate to vote on the amendment now.

Mr. KENNA. I am likewise informed that yesterday by unanimous consent it was understood that the public-land bill should be proceeded with to-day without the consideration of any other business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was done by unanimous consent, and the bill of the Senator from Alabama was taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. KENNA. That being the case, I submit to the Senator from Alabama whether it is good faith to press the bill at this time, and I know if it is not he would be the last one to press it.

Mr. PUGH. I have already stated that I have no desire to take advantage of the absence of the Senator from West Virginia, but I suggest that the Senate vote on this amendment, as it certainly would have a right to do at some time; and if the Senator from West Virginia insists on his objection, I then ask to proceed with the consideration of the bill notwithstanding his objection.

Mr. KENNA. That can not be in order.

Mr. LOGAN. The objection comes too late.

Mr. KENNA. I hope it is understood that I have no objection whatever to the original bill. It has been stated on this floor by a Senator very much interested in this measure that an arrangement exists somewhere, using his own expression, by which the general bill the Senate passed will be considered somewhere other than here. That being the case, I can not see the necessity of tacking the general provision on this local bill; and I know the Senator from Alabama will not insist upon pressing this matter when my objection, which if I had been present he knows I would have made, is interposed.

Mr. PUGH. What is the pleasure of the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. KENNA. I object to the consideration of the bill if the amendment of the Senator from Illinois is to be pressed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the objection comes too late.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that no matter when the bill comes up, the amendment now pending will be urged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Alabama moves to lay the bill on the table or to lay it aside, it would be a very proper motion. Does the Senator from Alabama move to postpone the bill?

Mr. PUGH. No, sir; I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. HARRIS. That motion is not in order.

Mr. HOAR. It does not require any such motion.

Mr. LOGAN. That is not required. The bill is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now before the Senate, and the question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I favor the amendment which prohibits Federal judges from filling the offices of their courts with their relatives. Some portions of the country have suffered sufficiently from this cause, and it ought to stop. The administration of justice in some of the courts has been hampered too long already by this evil, and it should come to an end. The fountains of justice should be pure, and no suspicion allowed to exist that family ties or family influence interferes with judicial administration. This amendment has twice passed this body after debate, and I hope will again be approved by the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to make a request which I think I have a right to make. The proposed amendment is in two distinct parts. One proposes to increase the salaries of all district judges from $3,500 to $5,000 a year. The other branch of the amendment relates to the question of nepotism, as stated by my colleague. I desire a separate vote on the two propositions.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the purpose for which I rose. It was to ask for a division of the question.

Mr. MAXEY. I want to have a division of the question.

Mr. GEORGE. I am willing to vote for the provision against nepotism.

Mr. LOGAN. The question is not divisible.

Mr. MAXEY. There are two separate sections, two distinct propositions, one to increase the salaries of all district judges to $5,000, which is distinct and has no connection with the other proposition, which is in regard to the appointment of receivers, and so on, who are related to the judge. They are distinct propositions and not connected at all.

Mr. LOGAN. It is evidently one proposition, applying to all judges. Their salaries are to be increased and nepotism is to cease. It is one proposition, and I do not think it is divisible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the question, the amendment containing two separate propositions, is clearly and distinctly divisible. The question will come first upon the first branch of the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. President, I have no desire to discuss either the original bill or the proposed amendment. I do desire, however, to make a statement to the Senate with reference to the circumstances under which this bill is under consideration.

Unanimous consent was asked the other day to consider the bill, and being in my seat I objected to its consideration. It then went over. First, I will say that on a former day I withdrew the objection on account of the absence of the Senator from Alabama. It was known to the Senator who offers this amendment that I objected to it. This morning I was absent from the Senate Chamber in a committee of this body sitting with the leave of the body during the sessions of the Senate. Just before my arrival on the floor of the Senate the same unanimous consent was asked, and it was obtained in my absence. The moment my attention was attracted to it I raised the objection. I have not any further commentary to make on the proceeding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the first branch of the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to make one observation in reference to the amendment, that from the beginning of the Government, from its first act on the subject of salaries of United States judges down to the present time, no such principle as that involved in this amendment has ever been recognized by the Congress of the United States. In the very first act and in all subsequent acts a distinction and discrimination were made between judges who live in large cities, where the cost of living is high and where the work is very laborious, and those living in places sparsely populated and where living is cheaper.

It is a new rule now sought to be introduced for the first time on a local bill to put all the United States district judges upon the same footing as to salaries; and I object to it for reasons that I have heretofore stated to the Senate in full.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wish to say in reply that this proposition has been considered and more than once reported favorably by the Committee on the Judiciary applicable to all the district judges of the United States. A man who is competent to be a district judge of the United States ought certainly to have a salary of $5,000.

In reply to the principle the Senator enunciates, that a man who lives in a city should have a larger salary than one who lives in the country, I do not think he would like it very well if the same rule were made applicable to members of Congress.

Mr. GEORGE. We all live in the same city.

Mr. LOGAN. We do when Congress is in session, and so do the district judges live in town when they are holding court. So the rule stated by the Senator from Mississippi will not apply.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to say in reply to the Senator from Illinois that the rule which I insist upon has been the universal rule up to the present time. It was adopted in the First Congress and in all subsequent Congresses which have acted upon the subject. As late as the year 1872, I believe, when the last act on that subject was passed, a discrimination was made, and it was deemed proper that there should be some relation between the salaries paid to the United States judges and the salaries paid to the State judges in the States in which they served.

I brought before the Senate two years ago a list of the salaries paid by the various States to their supreme judges, their highest judges; not to inferior judges. I do not mean "inferior" in capacity but inferior in rank, like the district court judges of the United States. If I remember that list correctly I think I am warranted in stating that in more than half the States in this Union the highest judges, the supreme judges of the States, receive less than the sum now proposed to be paid to the district judges of the United States.

I wish to make one other remark and I shall be through, because I know the Senate is in favor of this amendment, having frequently passed a similar measure. I desire to say that I regard this as a very inopportune time to increase the salaries of judges, when confessedly all the great interests of this country, the agricultural interest and all other interests, are at the very lowest ebb, when less money is being realized now from the great pursuits of the country than ever heretofore, when wheat is down to about 70 cents a bushel according to my understanding, and cotton is worth but 7 cents a pound—lower than it has been for a quarter of a century. I say that when all the industries of this country which have to contribute in the way of taxes to the payment of the expenses of the Government are at the very lowest ebb, it is rather an inopportune time to increase the salaries of men who have the most desirable positions in the Government, men who hold their positions for life, men who, after a service of ten years, on arriving at the age of seventy years, can retire from their offices and draw their salaries until the end of their lives.

Mr. CONGER. I do not wish to discuss this branch of the subject, but the remarkable suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi is that after an administration of a year and a half a control of the Government of this country which was to bring good times and restore confidence and restore business has not done it. If a year and a half is not reasonable time in which to realize the beneficent promises which were made prior to the last election, I should like to inquire of the Senator how much longer we must wait for the good time to come?

Mr. GEORGE. That would ordinarily be a sufficient time; but when we look at the previous history of the country and the amount of mismanagement and misgovernment generally which has occurred in this country for twenty-five years, I think we ought to have a little longer time to recover ourselves. We have been very sick and we can not recover in a minute.

Mr. CONGER. About how much longer before we begin to realize some benefit from the change of administration?

Mr. MAXEY. The question is divided, and I want to understand whether we are voting on the first branch.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the first clause of the amendment, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the salaries of the several judges of the district courts of the United States shall hereafter be at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

Mr. BECK. I should like to hear the whole of it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second clause of the amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That no person related to any justice or judge of any court of the United States by affinity or consanguinity, within the degree of first cousin, shall be appointed by such court or judge to or employed by such court or judge in any office or duty in any court of which such justice or judge may be a member.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. CAMDEN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HOAR. My colleague [Mr. DAWES] would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. PAYNE. Then I vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLUMB. I am paired on this question with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Allison,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Evarts,	Logan,	Sherman,
Brown,	Frye,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Hale,	McPherson,	Stanford,
Chace,	Harrison,	Manderson,	Teller,
Conger,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Hoar,	Payne,

NAYS—20.

Beck,	Coke,	Gray,	Pugh,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Harris,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Hearst,	Walthall,
Call,	George,	Kenna,	Whitthorne,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Wilson of Md.

ABSENT—25.

Aldrich,	Jones of Florida,	Palmer,	Sewell,
Butler,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,	Van Wyck,
Camden,	Mahone,	Plumb,	Vest,
Dawes,	Miller,	Ransom,	Voorhees.
Fair,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sabin,
Gibson,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Hampton,	Morrill,	Sawyer,

So the first branch of the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the remaining clause of the amendment, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That no person related to any justice or judge of any court of the United States by affinity or consanguinity, within the degree of first cousin, shall be appointed by such court or judge to or employed by such court or judge in any office or duty in any court of which said justice or judge may be a member.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the appointment and compensation of a district judge for the southern district of Alabama, and to establish the salaries of judges of the district courts of the United States."

Mr. HOAR. I now move that the Senate ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on this bill.

The motion was agreed to; and by unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HOAR, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. PUGH were appointed.

PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. PLUMB to the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands, in section 1, line 22, after the word "sold," to insert "prior to the passage of this act;" so as to read:

That all entries made under the pre-emption laws, on which final proof and payment may have been made and certificates issued, and to which there are no adverse claims originating prior to final entry, and which may have been sold prior to the passage of this act after final entry, to bona fide purchasers, for a valuable consideration, shall be confirmed and patented upon presentation of satisfactory proof to the Land Department of such sale.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands relates to a very important subject. I desire to vote right, but there is one feature of the bill which, as it appears to me now, seems to be very improper. I allude to the provision found on page 5, from line 18 to 25, which in substance provides for a confirmation of all the entries in pre-emption cases, however fraudulent and improper and illegal they may have been, if only prior to the passage of this act the land has been sold for a valuable consideration to somebody else bona fide.

I do not see the necessity or the justice or the fairness of the Congress of the United States waiving, surrendering the right of the people of the United States to this large body of land which has been illegally and fraudulently entered merely upon the ground that some persons before the passage of this act, without due inquiry, may have made a purchase of it innocently.

I find these facts stated in the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the year 1882, not the present Commissioner, but the one who preceded him:

A material proportion of the pre-emption entries now made are fraudulent in character, being chiefly placed upon valuable timber or mineral lands or water rights, and made in the interest and by the procurement of others, and not for the purpose of residence and improvement by the professed pre-emptor.

That is a statement of the Commissioner of the General Land Office made four years ago, that a great many of these lands have been fraudulently entered, not by persons intending to make a settlement upon them but acting fraudulently and by the procurement of others.

In addition to that, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to this very important fact, that these fraudulent entries have been located upon the most valuable lands, located upon mineral lands, located upon lands which had water upon them and which on account of their location commanded in the market and for use a large quantity of land outside of their boundaries.

The same Commissioner in 1883, in an official report to Congress, said:

Complaints of frauds and appeals for protection by bona fide settlers from the exactions and oppressions of those who commit or cause these frauds to be committed are constantly coming up to this office.

And mark this significant language which follows:

A flood-tide of illegal appropriation seems to be sweeping over the new States and Territories, threatening to ingulf the entire public domain.

It is this kind of men, it is this state of facts, that we are asked by the committee, in the amendment which they have reported, to confirm, to ratify, and to place the land forever beyond the reach of the United States. The present Commissioner in his report in 1885 said:

Reports of special agents, registers and receivers, and inspectors of surveyors-general and local land offices, communications from United States attorneys and other officials, and letters from public men and private citizens throughout the country were laid before me, all detailing one common story of widespread, persistent, public-land robbery committed under guise of the various forms of public-land entry.

Are we prepared in view of that to adopt this amendment? I will not rely entirely upon reports of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I have extracts here from reports made by the Public Land Committee of this body at the last session, and I will read them to the Senate. The Senate committee, reporting in favor of the repeal of the pre-emption and timber-culture law, quote from their report made in the Forty-eighth Congress as follows:

Another reason for the repeal of this law is the alarming increase of fraudulent claims under it in late years owing to the greater demand for and increased value of the lands, the discontinuance of public sales, and the withdrawal of lands from private entry.

It seems that this all-pervading system of fraud which had existed as reported by the Land Commissioner a few years before, instead of diminishing, is actually increasing, absorbing more and more of the public domain in fraud and in violation of the law.

I go on a little further. The Senate committee adopted the following language from the House committee's report:

Whole townships of the public domain have been acquired under this law by capitalists, who do not reside within hundreds of miles of the land, and never did.

That is a part of the process which we are required to confirm in this way, not directly I admit, but I may state here that in practice it will be a confirmation. Every lawyer knows that if you strike out the technical rules of law in reference to real estate which prevent a man from being a bona fide purchaser when the legal title is not got, it is almost impossible in practice ever to show that he is a mala fide purchaser. He proves the payment of his money, and then the presumption of the law is, he having paid his money, that he had no notice; and how are you to establish notice on him? In practice I may say that in ninety-nine cases in a hundred you will not be able to bring to the party the knowledge of the fraud. Says the report—I am reading now from the report of the House Committee on Public Lands—

They have secured them through paid agents in their employ, who receive so much for their services when they make the proof necessary to entitle them to a patent from the Government and assign their claims to their employers.

All this is to be confirmed, provided the employer can succeed in making a colorable sale of the land to somebody else, and the United States will be unable to prove that this somebody else had no notice of the fraud.

This is done—

Says the report—

This is done of course through perjury and subornation of perjury; for each one of these agents or claimants is required to make settlement on the pre-emption claim under the law, and he must make oath before the register or receiver of the land district in which the lands are situate, on which he claims to have settled for the purpose of pre-empting, and that he has never had the benefit of any right of pre-emption; that he has not settled upon and improved such land to sell the same on speculation, but in good faith to appropriate it to his own exclusive use, and that he has not, directly or indirectly, made any agreement or contract in any way or manner with any person whatsoever by which the title which he might acquire from the Government of the United States should inure, in whole or in part, to the benefit of any person except himself. And yet it is well known that this oath is daily taken by parties who make it under contracts such as we have indicated above.

That is, a contract to convey the land to their employers after they have made the proof that entitles them to a patent.

They file with the register of the proper land district their declaration, make their proof, affidavit, and payment required by the law, and receive their title, and transfer the same to the parties with whom they made the contract before they attempted to make the pre-emption.

That is the state of affairs which we are required here to validate, to make lawful; in other words, giving all the parties who can claim by conveyance from any of these fraudulent enterers a good and valid title against the United States. I do not see any necessity for that. If the position of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] is correct that these parties had a good title upon the issuance of the final certificate of entry, then let them stand upon their legal rights. If it be true in fact that they have these rights, then let them stand upon them. I do not propose to take away from any man who has made an entry or purchase under this law any right which he now has; but I do object to withdrawing by statute any claim of the United States to land which has been fraudulently entered, as described in the extract which I have read in the presence of the Senate, merely because some man has a conveyance for this land from the enterer, and because the United States may not be able to show that he had notice of the fraudulent character of the entry.

It seems to me that it is a sweeping measure, not demanded by any policy that I am aware of. It seems to me that if we pass the bill with this provision in we shall go a long way to make honorable land frauds upon the Government of the United States, and that we shall deprive the people of this country of their just rights in the public domain.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Has the Senator any knowledge about the number of land entries that have been made under the pre-emption and homestead laws within the last five years?

Mr. GEORGE. I only know what is reported. It says the public domain is about being exhausted.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I mean the actual entries.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no knowledge as to the arithmetical number.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Has the Senator from Mississippi any knowledge as to how many of these land entries there are? The Senator talks about great frauds. Has the Senator from Mississippi any knowledge as to how many of these land entries under the pre-emption and homestead laws have been canceled by the Land Department within the last year or within the last five years?

Mr. GEORGE. All I know on that subject is in the extracts which I have read. In one place it is said that—

> A material proportion of the pre-emption entries now made are fraudulent.

In another place it is said by the Commissioner of the General Land Office:

> A flood-tide of illegal appropriation seems to be sweeping over the new States and Territories, threatening to ingulf the entire public domain.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Whole townships of the public domain—
>
> Says the committee—
>
> have been acquired under this law by capitalists who do not reside within hundreds of miles of the land, and never did.

I only have these general statements.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I understand that. I understand that special agents of the department have made various reports to that effect, but the Land Department hold that they have the power to cancel fraudulent entries and set them aside and clear the public domain of entries that are fraudulent, and that being so, what I want to know is how many of these alleged fraudulent entries have been canceled up to date. I understand that it has been the merest trifle, a few hundred, less than four hundred out of many thousands of entries made within the last year.

It seems to me that we ought to be a little careful in jumping at the conclusion that the frauds are as general and as universal as has been suggested in some of the reports of special agents, because the history of the matter has shown that when the Land Department comes to investigate these charges in view of the testimony taken it is only the smallest possible proportion that are found to be fraudulent in the end, as I understand.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to say in response to that, that is but an additional argument in favor of the position which I take. The Senator says, notwithstanding these special agents, district attorneys, the public men in that country, the official agents of the Government, paid and selected for the purpose of inquiring into these matters, report this flood-tide of fraud all over this country, yet at last only a few have been detected and set aside. That really shows what I stated when I was first up, that it was the most difficult thing in the world for the Government officers here at Washington to trace up, find out, and prove to the satisfaction of a court all the various schemes of fraud that everybody knows are being perpetrated on the public domain. It is for that very reason I would not throw around these fraudulent entries any additional guards or any additional protection.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. One other word. I would not either. I am opposed to throwing any additional guards whatever around any fraudulent act; but the Senator from Mississippi will concede that it is a very easy matter in such cases to make a charge. To make a charge of fraudulent entry is one thing and to prove it is another.

Mr. GEORGE. The charges were made by a committee of this body, not by me.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. But to prove that charge is quite a different thing. I have had some little experience with individual settlers in Oregon and I can refer to two or three cases of individuals where the contest was simply between individual citizens, who had resided a long time in Oregon, some of our best citizens. In the two cases that I have in my mind, one took up a pre-emption claim in Umatilla County, Oregon, and the other took up a homestead claim in Umatilla County, Oregon. They were two of our best citizens, indorsed by everybody as reputable men. They made their proof, lived their time, as they supposed, paid their money, received their certificates, and after living some time on the land subsequent to that, one of them borrowed some money and executed a mortgage, and the other some time after that sold a portion of his land. After all this had happened a special agent of the Department comes along, and he makes a report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that in his judgment the law had not been fully complied with in either case. He found nobody residing on the land when he went there at a time when the law did not require the parties to reside on the land. He makes a long report that the entries are fraudulent, sends it to the Commissioner of the General Land Office; an investigation is very properly ordered on that report by the Commissioner of the Land Office, and the register and receiver are directed to proceed to take testimony.

They did so in the two cases I have in my mind. A long litigation followed. The special agent was called upon by the department to appear and prosecute the cases and to bring his testimony to sustain his allegations. The result was that the register and receiver reported that the allegations were not sustained, that they were not supported by any testimony. An investigation was had by the Commissioner of the General Land Office here and he concurred; the present Commissioner I think in one case concurred in the report of the register and receiver, and that was affirmed by the Secretary of the Interior, and after this long investigation the entry in that particular case that was charged to be fraudulent was held by the Land Department to be good.

I have no doubt that there are numbers of cases of that kind. That there are fraudulent entries I have no doubt, and perhaps a great many of them. But the Senator from Mississippi asked, are purchasers to be protected who make no inquiry? That was the language of the Senator. I say, certainly not. A man who makes a purchase without making inquiry is not a bona fide purchaser in good faith. What inquiry should a man make in view of the law? He should go to the local land office and find what its record shows. If it shows that the entryman had made his final proof and paid his money and received his certificate; in other words, if he finds that there has been an adjudication of the case by the officials appointed by law to adjudicate it, the register and receiver, and if he makes further inquiry and finds that no special agent has made any attack upon the entry, that there is no report on file in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office attacking the validity of the entry, if he finds everything secure and right, and then he buys that land, he has become an innocent purchaser, and if he buys it in good faith and pays his money for the land I think he is a purchaser in good faith under the law who ought to be protected. The amendment proposed by the Committee on Public Lands simply does that. I think it ought to go further and re-enact or recognize the law as it exists now in reference to future cases.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Oregon has discovered two cases.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I simply referred to two cases to illustrate my general argument.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. He has brought before the Senate two cases in which the agents of the Land Office have investigated, in all this immense mass of fraud, and found that there were two innocent men. Because two innocent men were wrongfully charged with a violation of the pre-emption laws, wrongfully charged with perjury and subornation of perjury, it is no reason why we should condone what I have read to the Senate from official sources—the immense flood-tide of fraud which has ingulfed, in the language of one report, the public domain in that region of country.

Mr. President, I believe it is stated somewhere in Holy Writ that if ten righteous men could be found in Sodom and Gomorrah those cities of the plain should be saved. If these official reports be correct, sanctioned by a committee of this body, sanctioned by a committee of the House of Representatives, whose duty it was to investigate this matter, the Senator asks that it shall only take two righteous men who have been wrongfully charged in order to save from the just condemnation of the Government all this immense mass of fraud. I can not see the justice of that proceeding.

Mr. President, the people of the United States own this land. They have made laws by which they are willing to part with it. Frauds have been committed on these laws, immense frauds, according to official reports, reports made to this body by its organized and authorized committee, and here we are to disregard all that because the Senator from Oregon has two constituents who were wrongfully charged. I can not see the justice and propriety of that.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not appreciate the force of the answer the Senator from Mississippi has made; perhaps he does. I simply referred to two cases within my knowledge for the purpose of illustrating my argument and for the purpose of illustrating the position I take. The Senator from Mississippi has made the general charge of fraud here, and yet he has failed to point out a single case.

Mr. GEORGE. I have not made any charge of fraud; I have read the charge made by a committee of this body.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator has failed to point out a solitary case where the Land Department have canceled an entry on account of fraud—not one. And when I put the question to him as to the number of land entries that have been canceled by the order of the Land Department, he has been unable to answer. He can not tell whether there have been one hundred or five hundred entries canceled; and I tell him as a matter of fact there have not been four hundred canceled I think within the last few years; I do not merely include this administration but I go back further.

I admit, as the Senator from Mississippi states, that the special agents who are going about over the country have been profuse in their charges of fraud; they have been universal and unrestricted; but, as I have said before, the Land Department, claiming the right to cancel these entries on account of fraud, have been unable after investigation to find that these charges were true except in a very small proportion of cases, so far as investigation has been made. I suppose of course there are many cases where the investigations have not yet been made and cases are now under investigation. What the result of those investigations may be of course we can not tell.

But the Senator from Mississippi insisted that a man who purchased lands without making inquiry should not be protected. Certainly not. Nobody contends for that. All that is contended for, all that is proposed by this amendment of the committee, is simply that if a man enters land after he has a right to purchase it, after the time has passed when the entryman has a right to sell, and it is purchased in good faith and for a valuable consideration that man shall be protected. That is all there is to it and all there is of it.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate. I referred to the two cases because I knew of them. I will state to the Senator from Mississippi that I know of eleven cases in one county additional to the two already named, in the county of Walla Walla, in Washington Territory, where charges of immense frauds were alleged by a special agent of the Land Department, where parties had made entries under the timber-culture law of 1878. Those charges were investigated under the direction of the Land Department, and the records of the Land Department will show to-day that in those eleven cases the charges were held to be false and the entries were held to be good.

I can give the Senator the names of individual entrymen if he desires it. Perhaps I may not be able to do so to-day, but the records of the Land Department will show. It is not a mere solitary case. I undertake to say that in the great majority of instances where charges have been made by special agents and where investigations have been ordered the result has shown by the decision of the department that the charges were false.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to call the attention of the Senate, and of the Senator from Mississippi especially, to what is occurring in the matter of the entry of public lands. I know him as a man who is perfectly candid and fair in regard to matters which come within the purview of his action as a Senator. It seems to me that if he understood the situation as I think I do and as others do better than I, he would not have opposed this amendment.

I call his attention in the first place to the fact that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, there were filed 55,945 entries under the homestead law, embracing an area of nearly 8,000,000 acres of land. In that year there were perfected 21,843 final entries under the homestead law, embracing an area of nearly 3,000,000 acres; that is to say, about 8,000,000 acres were entered according to the technical use of that term; that is practically a segregation from the body of the public domain of the particular tract of land the subject of the entry, use, and occupation of the person who made entry of it, and about 3,000,000 acres were proved up on under the homestead law, that is to say by persons who were able to show that they had lived on the land for five years. There were homestead entries commuted that year, that is to say, changed from homestead to pre-emption entries, 1,741, amounting to 225,444 acres. That year there were also 21,286 entries under the pre-emption law, embracing a total area of about 3,206,000 acres. The entries for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, were about the same, a little less.

What I was going to call special attention to was this: During the last three or four years some six hundred thousand people have gone into the Territory of Dakota, in which Territory the larger number of these entries have been made. During the same period of time probably two hundred thousand people have gone into Western Kansas and one hundred and fifty thousand into Western Nebraska. When I say that, I mean that the population of those States and Territories has been increased permanently to about that extent. When the Senator considers the fact that so many people have gone into these comparatively remote sections of the country and the enormous aggregate of these entries, he will see that in the first place there must almost necessarily have been some frauds committed; and when I say "frauds," I embrace in that general term everything which in any sense is an avoidance of the strict terms of the law.

In the next place, in view of the fact that any one may contest the entry of any other person, it will be seen that a great many allegations of fraud will be made by persons seeking to put other people out of the possession of land that they may get it themselves. With this contention the interest of the Government is likely to have been provided for very closely by reason of the fact that the interest of the Government was the interest of some person who was bringing the attention of the Land Office to what he conceived to be fraud in order that he might get the benefit of that discovery by securing the right to enter the land the subject of the contest. And further, conceding all that is really claimed as to the extent of the frauds they comprise but a small percentage of the number of entries made.

I have no doubt there has been fraud, but there is a distinction between frauds. There are frauds that involve moral turpitude, design, evil, and illegal intent, and there are other frauds that do not involve anything of the kind. Under the pre-emption law a man is required to live only six months on the land he seeks to enter. After entry he may abandon possession of the land as soon as he pleases, having filled the requirement of the law. For many years, as I said the other day, the law only required a residence of thirty days on a piece of land to entitle the party so residing to enter under the pre-emption law.

Now the law is that he shall live there six months. Some, perhaps, do not actually live on the land during all that period of time, but live in towns near by, going back and forth. In ninety-nine cases out of one hundred the men who take these lands on the public domain are poor to the last degree. They are not rich men. The Senator from California, who has been a witness of the great growth of the Empire State of the Pacific coast, knows that to be true.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator accept an amendment which will confine the benefit of this confirmation to actual settlers on the land? I am willing to do that.

Mr. PLUMB. Wait till I get through. Perhaps the Senator will not feel like proposing any amendment, as I think he ought not.

As I said, these men are poor men. A man goes out from the East; he is a tinner, a shoemaker, a blacksmith, a wagon-maker, or a tradesman of some kind. He goes West for the purpose of getting a home, and in the mean time he must live. He goes into the nearest town, follows his calling, and takes a quarter-section of land outside, lives upon it between times, so to speak, having his domicile part of the time perhaps in the town and part of the time on his claim, and at the end of six months he proves up on it. Perhaps the intent and the act do not fully combine, and yet the intent is as good as that of any man ever was to make that place his home, and to all intents and purposes it is his home. When he proves up he pays a dollar and a quarter an acre, and gets the final certificate of entry. He may then mortgage the land to get money to improve it with, and he may also feel constrained to stay in town and pursue his business for the present and educate his children. And so he may postpone the final taking up of his permanent residence upon the land. That is not committing a fraud in any true sense of the term. It may be called in law a fraudulent entry, and yet so far as the essential elements of fraud are concerned they are entirely lacking.

But there are frauds for which I do not desire that there shall be any immunity whatever, and this bill does not furnish any. I refer to those people who, possessing ample means, desire and seek to encroach on the public domain by acquiring large tracts for grazing purposes through fraudulent entries made by those who have no intent to ever comply with the law by making homes on the land they enter. There is little temptation to acquire large tracts for the purpose of ordinary farming, for for all practical purposes it can be said that farming upon a large scale requiring the hiring of labor is not profitable in the Far West, and there would be little or no inducement to acquire large bodies of land for such a purpose. I do not know how it may be in the State of New Jersey, where my friend across the way [Mr. MCPHERSON] resides, and where I understand he gives himself up in his leisure moments to the serious pursuits of agriculture.

Mr. MCPHERSON. With hired labor it is profitable.

Mr. PLUMB. The people of New Jersey are to be congratulated on that fact. I have no doubt the Senator from New Jersey himself is a living witness to the success and enormous gains that have resulted from farming by proxy in his State. But the fact is that farming where labor has to be hired in the Western country is not profitable.

Therefore there is little or no temptation to acquire large bodies of land for farming purposes. It is only in remote sections of country where men desire large bodies of land for grazing purposes, where they can raise cattle, and where by reason of their having the good fortune to get somebody to locate land for them along the streams they have been able to get a margin of water which gave them control of an adjoining range, that practical fraud comes in. Such cases have occurred. They are to be condemned and berated and treated with all possible disfavor, and the titles thus acquired should be set aside.

Such men can not set up that they are bona fide purchasers for value when they have employed men to enter land for them. Such cases are not within the purview of that part of this bill of which the Senator complains. He says the bill will require the Government to prove that the sales made were not bona fide and for a valuable consideration; and yet he surely would not have the entries set aside without proof.

Mr. GEORGE. So far as the act of Congress is concerned, I propose to let them stand precisely as they are.

Mr. PLUMB. But the Senator bases his action on the proposition that these entries are fraudulent, and yet unless they are proven to be so they will stand. If that proof is forthcoming under this bill the cattle-men can not maintain their entries, because they will be shown to have had knowledge of the fraud committed for their benefit.

Mr. GEORGE. There is something beyond that. Under this bill you must not only prove that there has been an assignment and that the entry was fraudulent, but you must prove that the assignee had notice of the fraud. There is a requirement of additional proof, and that proof which is the most difficult of all to make.

Mr. PLUMB. Not at all. The bill specifically provides that the purchaser must establish to the satisfaction of the Land Department that he is innocent. If, then, the Government can not in turn show that the entries are fraudulent why should they not stand?

Mr. DOLPH. I supposed that when the fact was established that the original claim was fraudulent, the present owner of it would have to establish affirmatively on his part that he was a bona fide purchaser.

Mr. PLUMB. Undoubtedly. The bill so specially provides.

Mr. DOLPH. The burden of proof would be on the party who claimed title.

Mr. PLUMB. Let us see how the case of these entrymen stands at the date of entry. They have entered land with or without a strict compliance with the law and have paid the Government price for the same—one dollar and a quarter an acre—and also the fees required by law. The Senator from Mississippi says, in substance, that if they have not strictly complied with all that the law imposes concerning settlement, then the entries ought to be set aside, not only as to the entryman (to which I agree, no matter how hard it may bear on him), but also as to the man who may have purchased of him innocently. Of course he bases that on the ground of public policy. He says here are great bodies of public domain being swallowed up by speculation. That process has been going on ever since the war in the Senator's own State.

Mr. GEORGE. What is that proposition?

Mr. PLUMB. I say this process of absorbing the public domain for speculation has been going on in the State of Missouri without protest and without complaint ever since the war, and in every Southern State where there are public lands.

Mr. GEORGE. Not in violation of law, though, but in pursuance of law.

Mr. PLUMB. The absorption is going on. The public policy in regard to this matter is infringed just as much. Why, is it any less in violation of that public policy that 100,000 acres of land shall be taken in the State of Mississippi by foreigners, by lumbermen, by capitalists, by corporations all in a body than it is that they shall be taken up in the Territory of Dakota?

Mr. GEORGE. I am not called on to defend the Government in reference to the State of Mississippi; but I can state to the Senator that so far as any absorption of the public lands in Mississippi by persons and in large quantities is concerned, that absorption applies only—for I have examined the matter myself and it is well known there no doubt by all—to lands that are unfit for cultivation, partly pine barrens, and the absorption is by the mill-men from the Northwest who come down there to buy for mill purposes. Travel through the country where that land is, as I have done myself, and you can go 10 miles without seeing a single cabin, on account of the unfitness of the land for agriculture.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no doubt that country is much more sparsely settled than the Territory of Dakota, and yet the conditions affecting settlement are as favorable in that region as on the frontier of Dakota and the land more habitable. The settler in Dakota or Western Kansas has not only to contend against the wildness of the soil but against adverse climatic influences and the disadvantages of being remote from settlement and from railroads. He is in a more unfavorable condition in these important respects than though he had settled in Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. Has he not good soil?

Mr. PLUMB. After he gets there, after he has earned the land a dozen times over in the peril, exposure, and labor necessary to make that soil yield, it may then be said to be "good."

Mr. GEORGE. And that man, I am willing shall have the benefits of this act.

Mr. PLUMB. But if that man gets discouraged, if something unfortunate happens to him after he has made his entry, if his poverty compels him to mortgage his land and thereby by some misadventure lose it, then the Senator turns his back on him and says he has no rights and the man who succeeds him in interest shall have no rights notwithstanding his good faith can not be impeached.

Mr. GEORGE. I am perfectly willing for any actual settler under an assignment to have his land, whether he got it mala fide or bona fide.

Mr. PLUMB. If he got it bona fide, why attach a condition to him which the law does not attach?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not understand that question.

Mr. PLUMB. If he buys it bona fide after the other man has entered, why attach a condition to him which the law does not attach?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not propose to attach any condition.

Mr. PLUMB. You say you will attach a condition.

Mr. GEORGE. But the Senator has made me change positions. I propose to let the law stand as it is; he proposes to change the law. I say leave all these men to the law as it now stands. I do not want to take away any right anybody has got.

Mr. PLUMB. Many persons buy land to settle upon at a future time, in anticipation of going back there in a year or two to make an actual settlement upon it; but of course the settlement theory of the Senator would cut all those people out. A good deal has been said here about mortgaging this land. A mortgage I suppose is a bad thing everywhere, but it is often inevitable; and yet it is within my own knowledge that at least 75 per cent. of all the lands entered under the preemption law in the county in which I live were entered with money borrowed, paid at a minimum rate of interest of 3 per cent. a month. It was a bad thing to do; but it was the only thing the settlers could do, unless they wished to lose their land; and it has never been held to impeach the entries thus made; and if, as is alleged here and as is the foundation of this argument, the Government has a right to come in at any time before a patent has issued, it can still attack two-thirds of the entries in this county, because patents have never issued.

Mr. GEORGE. When the Government comes in it does nothing except to complain of and attack an entry made through perjury and subornation of perjury. If the entry is all right, all proper, all honest, the Government under the law as it now stands and as I want it to stand has no right and does not want any right. It is only in cases where fraud and perjury have intervened, as is shown by the report that I read to the Senate this morning, that I insist that we shall do no act of confirmation, but leave the parties exactly where they are now.

Mr. PLUMB. The practice of the Land Office is just the reverse. The present Commissioner of the General Land Office assumes that all these entries are fraudulent and puts the onus of proof on him who seeks to maintain the entry. That is what is going on.

I have here the decision of Judge Deady, of Oregon, which I looked for yesterday but could not find. I want to state the legal fact which has resulted in the determination of the committee to report this amendment. I read the other day section 2262 of the Revised Statutes, in which is contained an express exception in favor of the innocent purchaser for a valuable consideration.

I read the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Myers vs. Croft, in which Judge Davis especially recites that fact and gives it effect by that recital. The decision of Judge Deady goes still further. He says in the case of Wiley C. Smith vs. William Ewing and Frank Duprat, in the United States circuit court for the district of Oregon, he being the district judge holding the circuit court in that district:

> This suit is brought by a citizen of Georgia to obtain a decree enjoining the defendants, who are citizens of Oregon, from trespassing on certain lands situate in Umatilla County, Oregon, and that any claim they may have thereto may be declared null and void.

In the course of the decision the judge proceeds to say:

> Section 2373 of the Revised Statutes gives the register and receiver the right to determine "all questions as to the right of pre-emption arising between different settlers," on "the same tract of land," saving the right of appeal to the Commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior.

It seems that subsequently to the entry by Ewing the Commissioner, in an ex parte proceeding, set aside the certificate of entry which had before been issued.

> Has the Commissioner any such power? It is not given to him in terms by any act of Congress that I am aware of. His right to pass upon conflicting claims to land under the pre-emption law seems confined to cases that come before him on appeal from the decision of the register and receiver, in case of a contest between two or more settlers under such law. Doubtless the Commissioner may also refuse to give effect to a certificate and issue a patent thereon when it appears from the face thereof, or the proof accompanying it, that it was issued contrary to law. But if the land is open to pre-emption and the proof is formally sufficient, as that it is made by the oaths of the proper and prescribed number of witnesses to the necessary facts, the Commissioner can not disallow the certificate or refuse to issue a patent thereon because the proof is not satisfactory to his mind, or because it is suggested to him that it is false. The law devolves the determination of that question on the register and receiver (Revised Statutes, section 2263), and it can only come before the Commissioner on an appeal from their decision by a party to a contest before them.
>
> When a certificate of purchase has been issued to a pre-emptor in due form, and no appeal has been taken from the decision or action of the register or receiver, the land described in the certificate becomes the property of the pre-emptor. He has the equitable title thereto, and a right to the legal one as soon as the patent can issue in the due course of proceedings. And he can dispose of the same and pass his interest therein as if the purchase had been made from a private person. Carroll vs. Safford, 3 Howard, 460; Myers vs. Croft, 13 Wall., 291; Camp vs. Smith, 2 Minn., 155; Cornelius vs. Kissell, 58 Wis., 237; Bull vs. Stiles, 35 Ill., 309; Sillyman vs. King, 36 Iowa, 207; Moyer vs. McCullough, 1 Ind., 339.
>
> In Carroll vs. Safford, it was ruled that land held under a certificate of purchase from the United States Land Office was subject to State taxation as the property of the purchaser. In delivering the opinion of the court, Mr. Justice McLean said:
>
> "When the land was purchased and paid for it was no longer the property of the United States, but of the purchaser. He held it for a final certificate, which could no more be canceled by the United States than a patent.
>
> "It is true, if the land had been previously sold by the United States or reserved from sale, the certificate or patent might be canceled by the United States as having been issued through mistake. In this respect there is no difference between the certificate holder and the patentee."
>
> In Moore vs. Robbins, 96 U. S., 530, it was held that a patent issued by the Land Department, acting within the scope of its authority, passes the legal title to the land, and all control of the executive department of the Government over the title thereafter ceases. That if any wrong has been done to the United States the courts of justice are open to it, as in the case of an individual, to have redress by cancellation of the patent or reconveyance of the land.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> To my mind, the certificate of purchase, subject to the condition mentioned, is within the reason of the rule laid down in Moore vs. Robbins in the case of a patent. The issue of a patent or final conveyance on such a certificate is a mere ministerial act, of which the purchaser, in the case of private parties, might compel the performance.

Several of the State courts have decided that the certificate of purchase, when issued in due form for land subject to entry, is beyond the power of the Commissioner otherwise than on a direct appeal from the register and receiver.

He goes on to comment on section 2262 of the Revised Statutes:

The exception made in section 2262 of the Revised Statutes in favor of a bona fide purchase for a valuable consideration from a person holding a certificate of purchase under the pre-emption law is only against the forfeiture of the land denounced by that section on account of the falsity of the oath thereby required of the settler as to his right to enter land under the pre-emption law and his purpose in doing so.

But in this case it was alleged that the pre-emptor never complied with the law as to residence, improvement, and cultivation, and that the certificate of purchase was issued to him upon false or insufficient proofs of these facts. To such a case section 2262 does not appear applicable. But at common law, where a party obtaining a conveyance of real property by a fraud practiced upon the grantor conveys the same to a third person who buys in good faith and for a valuable consideration, the latter will hold the property purged of the fraud. (Fletcher vs. Peck, 6 Cranch, 133.)

He goes on to cite other authorities.

Mr. GEORGE. If he has that right now, let him have it under the law. All I am opposed to is the giving of any new right, any new protection, any new guard against the action of the Government to set aside these fraudulent entries.

Mr. PLUMB. The purpose of the committee in providing the amendment is just this: The law has been otherwise construed by the present Land Commissioner. Serious consequences grew out of this construction and the wholesale suspension of entries under it. Bear in mind that what is here proposed is consistent with the practice of the last thirty years. During all that time the right of an entryman to sell and to convey a good title to an innocent purchaser has not been questioned. Sales have never waited on the issue of patents. The certificate of final entry may be recorded and is accepted in court as evidence of title the same as a patent would be. The lands are put on the tax-roll at once and subjected to taxation.

A man coming into a frontier locality from the East finds the lands duly entered, with final certificate outstanding, the lands upon the tax-roll, and being constantly transferred without a suggestion anywhere of anything wrong, and he thereupon purchases and enters into possession in the usual way. Land is the largest property interest in all the frontier country, in many cases almost the only property of value. It is almost the only subject of barter and sale and the sole foundation of credit. Of necessity that must be the case, and so men, governed by their necessities and their interests, sell, mortgage, and otherwise dispose of their lands oftentimes immediately after entry, and usually with less care and conservatism than is exercised in the older communities.

But now, Mr. President, under the ruling of the Land Office those who purchased under these circumstances are not to be protected, but are to be driven out, and thus you bring upon them lawsuits which they are unable to defend except at great sacrifice, and the Government which has caused to be issued the title upon which their purchase was based proposes to put its great power into the scale against these poor people in order to deprive them of that which they innocently bought. The law being as I believe it to be, the holder of the title based upon the first certificate will contend for his right against the person to whom the Government has issued a second certificate.

If the courts uphold the first certificate, as I believe they will, the person to whom the second certificate was issued will come to Congress for relief, for damages caused by his having been misled by the Land Department to his hurt. He will have a good cause, and so in the event the first certificate is set aside the person who claims under it by purchase will have an equally good claim. To issue two certificates to one tract of land unless one of them shall have been set aside by the courts is to bring up a crop of claimants who will have a strong equity for recognition, as having been damaged by depending upon the act of a duly authorized Government officer.

So out of this harsh and illegal action of the Land Department will not only grow a crop of lawsuits against these innocent poor men, who have acted in perfectly good faith, following the universal practice that has been observed on the frontier for half a century; and not only that, but, in addition, there will come up a new crop of claims because of the issuance by the Commissioner of certificates to other persons for the same land for which certificates are already outstanding.

It was to avoid cases of this kind; it was to apply what ought to be the rule if it is not the rule; it is to do that which the Government ought to be perfectly willing to do even if not compelled to, that this amendment is proposed. It is to say that wherever the Government officers have issued a muniment of title for a piece of the public domain within their authority to do, whoever buys upon the faith of that title innocently and for value shall be protected, especially as against some man with whom the Government is not in privity.

The Government has the money in its Treasury; it has the dollar and a quarter an acre. In the State of Mississippi, in the State of Florida, in the State of Louisiana, and in all the Southern States where lands are subject to private entry, where lands are in many cases worth ten times what they are in Dakota, thousands upon thousands of acres have been entered without objection. Here the Government has had the pound of flesh; it has got all the money it stipulated to have; and we know in point of fact that whether it has got on that particular piece of land the man who owns it and who made that his home up to the date of his entry, it will have in the person of his successor a man who will make it his permanent home, and thus the general purpose of the law will be realized.

Mr. President, I do not care to extend this debate, but I want to call attention to one other thing. Some days ago there was issued from the Interior Department an order suspending the execution of the homestead and pre-emption laws of the United States upon the alleged ground that a bill was pending in Congress repealing those laws. I know how those things are done. I know how the heads of Departments of necessity follow the suggestions of subordinates as to matters within their special jurisdiction. I know that this order came in the ordinary course of business from the General Land Office, as all such things do.

Whatever purpose was in it was the purpose of the Land Office and not the purpose of the Secretary of the Interior. At that very time there was pending in the lower House of Congress a bill repealing that provision of the statutes which permits an entry of land by what is known as private entry, that is to say, entry of lands without settlement in any quantity on payment of one dollar and a qaurter per acre, such entries as are peculiar to certain Southern States and such as are constantly taking place in the States of Mississippi, Louisiana, and Florida, whereby every day large bodies of land are being sold to speculators and capitalists—oftentimes to foreigners; whereby every few weeks, and perhaps every few days, lands are being sold to great lumber companies, being sold for every purpose except settlement; and yet it was not within the purview of whatever purpose was in mind in the suspension of the pre-emption and the timber-culture and the desert-land laws to suspend the execution of the law permitting the private entry of lands.

Why should the settler out on the lonely prairies of Dakota or of Western Kansas; why should the man who goes out there single-handed and alone to make him a home on the prairie under the promise of the Government that he shall have the right to acquire land under the terms of the law well known—why should he be singled out to be cut down as by an untimely frost, to be deprived of his just expectation, while there may still go on without let or hinderance, and with the active, sympathetic concurrence of the Land Department of the Government the entry of thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of acres of land to be absorbed not secretly but openly and avowedly for speculation in the Southern States?

The beam is in the Northwest and the mote appears to be in the South. The one thing that is the subject of all this contention and of all this denunciation is the progress of settlement in the West and Northwest—the growth of powerful and prosperous communities upon the public lands in those localities. Not a syllable has been uttered of any kind whatever characterizing the holding and the using or purchasing from the Government of lands in the Southern States for speculation. Is it not a little singular that the individual whose duty it is to scan the horizon should be afflicted with such a political, geographical, isothermal strabismus that he has never allowed his eagle eye to cover anything south of Mason and Dixon's line, but has kept it as steady as the needle to the pole on the West and Northwest?

Now, Mr. President, what the committee seek to do is not only within the confessed jurisdiction of Congress, but it is for justice, it is for peace, it is for honor; and if it should happen that in the administration of the land laws by which seven or eight or ten million acres of land are disposed of in a year, by which each year there is settled on the public domain a population as great as that of the State of Mississippi, by which each year there is brought under cultivation an area of land equal in size to that State, it is only illustrative of the growth and prosperity and progress of the American people. And if it should happen that if you should apply to it a No. 22 strainer you might catch some poor unwary fellow who had got a piece of land at a dollar and a quarter an acre in regard to which he had not complied with the precise terms of the statute, I think the public conscience need not gag at that.

I know the Senator from Mississippi too well to think for an instant that he wants to do an infinitesimal act of justice if in the train of it will follow great and overwhelming disaster to a great body of people entitled to consideration. I know that is not his purpose. I am so confident of this from what I have observed of him here, that I am sure, if he knew all the facts as they are known by men who have been witnesses of what is going on on the frontier, he would stand exactly where I stand on this question.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi does no one injustice in this case, and he does not mean to do any good man a harm by the proposition which he has been defending.

The Senator from Kansas has made this somewhat a sectional question. If he has observed my votes in the Senate, the Senator has never known me on any occasion in this body to give expression to a sectional sentiment or to cast a sectional vote. I have endeavored so far as I am concerned in all my Senatorial action to know no North, no South, to do what I regard as fair and just and right to all sections of this country.

Now, Mr. President, coming to the point in controversy between the Senator and myself, I have drawn up an amendment which I intend to offer and which I will read now for the purpose of showing exactly how I stand on this question. I propose to amend the first section in line 23, after the word "patented." It now reads:

That all entries made under the pre-emption laws, on which final proof and payment may have been made and certificates issued, and to which there are no adverse claims originating prior to final entry, and which may have been sold, after final entry, to bona fide purchasers—

Who are actually settlers on the land. It then proceeds—for a valuable consideration, shall be confirmed and patented—

At that point I propose to insert—to the extent of 160 acres on which such purchaser resides.

So far as the argument of the Senator from Kansas relates to the pioneer men, the poor men who have gone out for the purpose of settling and developing that country, my amendment is intended to protect them. If it does not protect them, I ask the Senator from Kansas to frame it so that it will protect them.

Mr. PLUMB. What would you do with men who bought two quarter-sections and went out there and settled on one of them?

Mr. GEORGE. I should give them the benefit of the pre-emption law. I do not know but that I would go to two quarter-sections.

Mr. PLUMB. What about four?

Mr. GEORGE. I would not go that far, because that would be in the way of releasing a claim for a fraud. The policy of the pre-emption law was to give only 160 acres to a settler.

Mr. PLUMB. Yet the law never assumed to follow that into the hands of a succeeding purchaser.

Mr. GEORGE. The law never presumed to follow it in the hands of a subsequent purchaser who had acquired a good and valid title, nor did the law ever presume, as I understand it, to allow fraudulent entries, confessedly fraudulent, made on perjury and subornation of perjury, to be sanctified in the hands of another party before the Government had passed a final patent. Of course, after the Government has made final patent, has parted with its absolute dominion over the property, then it may go into anybody's hands who sees proper to buy it. The Government has no interest whatever. But as long as the Government has an interest, as long as the proceedings are in legal language in fieri, in process of confirmation, up to the time when the Government has done that final act which is irrevocable, then the law, as I understand it, gives the Government the right to inquire into the frauds upon the law and upon the public domain.

If I am wrong about that, if the law gives to parties who have entered in fraud of the law a valid right to the land, if it gives to their assignees a valid right to the land as it now stands, then I say they are entitled to it. All I object to is that now after the fraud has been consummated, after these parties have purchased with the law against them, we shall come in and surrender our rights in favor of parties of that sort. That is the contention between the Senator from Kansas and myself. Whatever the law gives them, I am willing they shall have.

Mr. PLUMB. The pre-emptor has no control of the issue of the patent. Patents are yet unissued on land entered twenty years ago. They pass through forty different hands; in many cases they have been subjected to taxation which has been more than the entire value of the land. Many of them have been sold for taxes.

Mr. GEORGE. That has nothing in the world to do with the question.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator's theory is correct, the Government may come in even at this date and disturb all transfers of title.

Mr. GEORGE. We are not arguing the question about a case where the patent has not been issued in twenty years. We are arguing the question now before the Senate. There is no complaint here that the Government has not been diligent in issuing these patents. I have not heard a word said on that subject, that patents are not issued in the due course of business in the office and in due time. The point I make is simply that and no more, that here where frauds have been committed, where it is conceded by the very provision under consideration that frauds have been committed on the law and on the Government, we shall not condone the fraud in favor of any person who merely claims to be a bona fide purchaser unless he is a settler also. If we give it to the settler we have done exactly what was the intention of the law in the first instance—give it to the settler and nobody else.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] asked me to produce some evidence here as to the number of cases of fraud and all that sort of thing. I did not have it then, but a friend in the other House has kindly furnished me with some evidence upon that subject which I shall now proceed to read. It is a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated June 19, 1886, only a few days ago, addressed to the honorable Mr. PAYSON, of the House of Representatives. The Commissioner says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1886.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 16th instant I have to state that the records of this office will contradict any assertion that may be made to the effect that alleged frauds on the public domain rest wholly upon the unsupported reports of special agents, and show that such a statement is wholly without foundation.

Special agents are required (see paragraphs 5, 7, and 9 of circular of June 23, 1885, copy inclosed) to obtain and transmit with their reports the affidavits of parties cognizant of the facts, and this is habitually done. It frequently happens that parties cognizant of facts are afraid to volunteer testimony, and in some classes of cases there are no inhabitants on or near the land. But even with these drawbacks, other testimony than that derived from the personal examination of agents is sent up with their reports in fully three-fourths of the whole number of cases examined and reported. Special agents are also instructed to take pains in every instance to see and obtain the statements of claimants if they can be found. (See paragraph 2 of inclosed circular.)

In many cases the agent furnishes the affidavits of the claimants themselves, in which they swear to their own and their associates' illegal and fraudulent acts. One agent alone within the last four or five months has transmitted to this office the affidavits of entrymen in eighty-three cases in which they admit that they never saw the lands and that they were hired by the agents of the speculators to make the entries.

Mr. PLUMB. That is expressly covered by the bill. It destroys the bona fides of the party who made the purchase.

Mr. GEORGE. Not at all. When the entries are thus made and a person sells the land to somebody who will swear he had no notice of it, and will probably sell it to the very man who hired him to go upon the land, and the Government is not able to bring to that man a knowledge of the facts of the fraud, then he succeeds; and that is the very class of cases which are protected by the provisions of the bill to which I object.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Does not the Senator from Mississippi——

Mr. GEORGE. Let me get through. You can answer me when I get through. The letter proceeds:

In other cases the affidavits of the agents of the speculators are submitted with the reports, and there is hardly a case reported without giving the names of witnesses and a brief statement of what they will swear to in regard to the alleged fraud.

The evidence furnished by the agents or filed by individuals informing this office of frauds is generally the best character and is often substantiated or in a measure supported by the records.

The claimants, however, are not deprived of the lands by this evidence without the privilege of a trial. On the report of an agent showing the fraud the entry is held for cancellation, the party in interest being allowed sixty days after due notice within which to apply for a hearing. In the notice he is fully informed of the substance of the special agent's report and of the allegations against the entry, and given full opportunity to controvert the charges and show the validity of the entry.

The records of this office show that many of these claimants after being advised of the facts alleged against them decline to make a defense.

Now, I come to an inquiry propounded to me by the Senator from Oregon, from which it appears that I was entirely ignorant and that he was mistaken:

Since August 1, 1885, five hundred and thirteen (513) entries have been canceled upon reports of special agents, showing fraud, after claimants were duly notified that they would be given the privilege of defending their entries and had declined to do so.

I understood the Senator from Oregon to say that only four hundred for I do not know how long a time had been set aside. Here are five hundred and thirteen since the 1st day of August last:

These are of the most flagrant and indefensible character of cases, and the default was made simply because the parties did not, in the face of the facts discovered, care to run the risk of being prosecuted for the perjury they would have to commit in order to sustain the entries. The peril of such a course was too great and the prospect of success too doubtful to be undertaken even by the boldest and most desperate violators of the law.

There were 513 cases since the 1st of last August where the parties would not even appear and say that the entries they had made were proper and right, and there was judgment by default against them after due notice. Now I go on:

The number of cases reported by special agents from April 1 to March 31, 1886, is 2,606.

Cases examined in the General Land Office from April 1, 1885, to March 31, 1886, 2,591.

Indorsed no fraud or held for further examination, 368.

Only 368 out of 2,591 cases in which the Department had indorsed that there was no fraud.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. How many have been canceled for fraud?

Mr. GEORGE. In 513 cases there has been judgment by default. But action was taken on these 2,591 cases. The letter proceeds:

Action taken:

Conclusively (a) or prima facie (b) fraudulent.
Canceled (a)	1,044
Held for cancellation or hearings ordered (b), &c	1,179
Total	2,223

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. If the Senator will allow me, I do not want to interrupt him, but those cases were simply held for cancellation.

Mr. GEORGE. One thousand and forty-four were canceled and 1,179 were held for cancellation, for further hearing.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is simply for a hearing. They may not have been examined.

Mr. GEORGE. They have been examined.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Examined simply by the special agents, but there was no investigation.

Mr. GEORGE. They have been examined by the department and investigated most fully, but still there was a scintilla of doubt, and they gave the parties an opportunity of making further proof.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that they have not been examined. He is mistaken about that. Where they are held for cancellation it is for the parties to have an opportunity to be heard in the office.

Mr. GEORGE. Here is the way the letter reads——

Mr. TELLER. It does not make any difference how the letter reads; I know what the practice is.

Mr. GEORGE. Under the head of "action taken" the letter proceeds:

It will be seen that out of the 2,591 cases reported and examined, 2,223 have been shown to be fraudulent.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Not at all, if the Senator from Mississippi will permit me——

Mr. GEORGE. I am simply reading the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I am not stating my own language. The Senate must judge what it means.

It will be seen that out of the 2,591 cases reported and examined 2,223 have been shown to be fraudulent. Of the 368 suspended cases, a large proportion have also been shown to be of such character as to require further investigation.

The foregoing does not include many hundreds of cases where entries have been canceled for fraud developed in contest proceedings between private individuals.

It does not include any case of that sort where the fraud was developed by a contest between private parties. These are all cases in which there were no contests between private parties, in which the fraud was discovered by the action of the agents of the Land Office. The letter continues:

Hearings have been ordered in a considerable number of cases reported by the agents as fraudulent, and the results of five hundred and fifteen hearings have been received since July 1, 1885.

Two hundred and seventy-four of these cases have been examined and passed upon, and the testimony taken in two hundred and sixty out of the two hundred and seventy-four confirms the correctness of the reports of the agents, and the entries were held for cancellation on the evidence adduced at the hearings.

A cursory examination of the remaining two hundred and forty-one cases shows that the percentage of cases in which the testimony taken at the trials sustains the agents' reports is fully as great as in the cases acted upon. It will thus be seen that the special agents' reports are generally sustained at a formal hearing in cases in which hearings have been had and acted upon during the period specified, and that these are the only cases in which the parties desired or were willing to attempt a defense of the entries.

In other cases they admit by their action that the reports were true; so that I can safely say the reports alleging fraud in nineteen cases out of twenty are correct beyond question, and it is not to be assumed that the reports in the remaining twentieth are incorrect, but simply that the agents failed, through inability to secure the attendance of witnesses or otherwise to make out the case of the Government.

The parties who actually defend entries reported as fraudulent are quite uniformly purported assignees—frequently persons who procured the entries to be made—and every expedient known to violators of law is resorted to in order to defeat the Government at these hearings. Witnesses are often tampered with or intimidated.

In the Estes Park cases in Colorado, where a large quantity of public land was fraudulently entered by the procurement of agents of the Earl of Dunraven, not a witness could be produced at day of hearing, although the testimony previously obtained by affidavits of numerous citizens was overwhelming in character. In Nebraska witnesses have been warned by "regulators," and in California not long since an important witness for the Government was murdered by employés of parties being proceeded against.

Every impediment is thrown in the way of the Government in attempting to discover and suppress frauds upon public lands, and obviously perjured testimony in favor of claims has constantly to be met with. Parties possessing great wealth and influence are engaged in these frauds, and all the inducements by which special agents are surrounded are adverse to rather than in favor of a vigorous discharge of their duties. Only men of high character and strong integrity can be employed in such service with any safety to the Government. The liability to which agents are subject is that of unduly favoring claimants, not that of improperly reporting against them. An agent may have much to lose by being faithful to the interests of the Government, since if so faithful he is liable to be attacked from very high and influential quarters. If he chooses to be dishonest he may have everything to gain by being unfaithful to the Government in the discharge of his duties, since violators of law are pretty apt to be willing to pay more for immunity than the Government pays for fidelity.

Special agents have no motive for reporting against meritorious cases, and there is absolutely no truth whatever in the contrary statements sometimes made.

Neither are entries held for a cancellation on special agents' reports upon merely trifling grounds or for some technical failure of compliance with law. The cases in which such action is taken are those of flagrant fraud and violation of law, and the evidence is required to be of the most convincing character before action against the entries is proceeded with.

Your attention is called to my report to the Senate of May 6, 1886 (Ex. Doc. No. 134), copy herewith, and also to page 64 et seq. of my annual report.

In further compliance with your request, I inclose a copy of memoranda handed Mr. COBB relative to circular of June 2, 1886, temporarily suspending pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land entries. My report upon the Senate resolution on this subject has just been submitted to the honorable Secretary of the Interior for transmittal to the Senate. It is suggested that this report will be preferable to the memoranda hastily furnished Mr. COBB.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

Hon. L. E. PAYSON,
House of Representatives.

It appears that the frauds in these cases are not mere sporadic instances happening here and there occasionally, but they seem to be all along the line, numerous, many of them confessed, many of them shown to be fraudulent by conclusive proof; and now what are we to do about them? Are we to give them any more than the law already gives them except as I have already expressed my willingness, and not only my willingness but my desire to do, to give to the settler who has invested his money in the land the land which he thought he was buying? The Government wants the land settled, the Government wants the men there to be housed and to have homes, and it makes no difference to the Government whether the original party is in possession of the tract or whether a successor has come in and fulfilled the contract which the law imposed upon the first settler.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that I am not relying upon the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office alone. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to what its own committee, the committee presided over by the Senator from Kansas himself, says. That report says:

We adopt the following, quoted from report 1544 from the House Committee on the Public Lands at the first session of the present Congress, to accompany the bill under consideration:

"Whole townships of the public domain have been acquired under this law by capitalists who do not reside within hundreds of miles of the land and never did."

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator knows, I suppose, how much land there is in a township?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes, thirty-six sections; that is the way it is in Mississippi, and I suppose the townships are the same size in the Western country.

Mr. PLUMB. About 23,000 acres.

Mr. GEORGE. The operation of such a law as is proposed would be this: If anybody who procured these fraudulent entries shall assign whole townships to anybody else, then under the operation of the bill, unless the United States can show that the third man had knowledge of the fraud, all these whole townships go to the assignee. That is what I wish to prevent.

I ask the Senator from Kansas, if my amendment will not protect the farmers who want to settle on the land and cultivate it, to frame one that will. I am not familiar with the land laws, and I may not have got my amendment technically correct, but he knows what I want. What I am willing to do, what I am anxious to do, is to give to every man who settles on that land, whether he is the enterer or whether he has bought from anybody else and who wants to remain on it, his title to it and his homestead; but I do not want to pass a law by which the class of men described by our own committee, described by the Senator from Kansas himself, who were never within hundreds of miles of the land, and who through fraud, through perjury, through subornation of perjury acquire whole townships of land—I do not want to pass a law by which they can reap the fruits of their fraud and perjury by making a deed to somebody else. It would be very difficult to get the land from them. The patent will be issued to the men who made the entries; they will be considered the owners of the land; and when they assign to the very men who hired them to go there and to swear falsely it will be incumbent on the United States under this amendment to show, not by suspicion, but to show to the reasonable satisfaction of a court, the infamous transaction out of which grew the fraudulent title. If you fail to do that, if your witnesses die, if they are suborned by these parties and escape, if they do not come to court, then the very men who caused these whole townships to be entered by their employés and afterward took a deed from them to themselves will be protected in their rights, or in their wrongs, or whatever it may be called. They will get the land; and that is what I am now resisting.

I say to the Senator from Oregon and to the Senator from Kansas that if my amendment is not drawn properly to protect the settler, the man who wants to make a home upon these lands, then make it right and I shall vote for it; but I shall not vote for a provision which by wholesale confirms, or makes a reasonable opportunity of confirming, this wholesale robbery of the public domain through fraud and perjury.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I wish to say just one word now, if the Senator from Mississippi will permit me. The Senator from Mississippi does not believe that there could, in the nature of things, possibly in any case be an innocent purchaser for a valuable consideration in good faith where the original entryman had never been on the land and where it was a fraud and collusion from the first inception between the entryman and the party committing it. Certainly the Senator from Mississippi does not think that. There would be no innocent purchaser there for a valuable consideration.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, there might be.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. He is a party to the fraud originally.

Mr. GEORGE. No; he is not.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Certainly he is, if he employed these men as the Senator indicated and as the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office shows. There are many cases of that kind, where parties have never seen the land, who have gone on the land in pursuance of an arrangement with somebody who made the entry. Then the parties are participant in the fraud, and the amendment of the committee is not intended, of course, to protect men like that. It is only intended to protect a man who in fact was an innocent purchaser in good faith, and there can not in any case be an innocent purchaser bona fide for a valuable consideration if he has employed a man to go on and make the entry for his benefit, and if the man has never gone on the land, as is stated in the letter of the Commissioner; there are many such cases, that is a matter which is susceptible of proof, and of easy proof.

Mr. GEORGE. The answer to that is a very short one. It is very true that if it appears that the assignee of the land claiming to be a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration hired the enterer to go upon the land and fraudulently enter it he is not a bona fide purchaser; but suppose the enterer, as it will happen in every case, goes on and proves up his possession, his residence, gets his final certificate, and then makes the assignment to the man who hired him to do it, if you get after the assignee he will produce the certificate. Here is a final certificate made by the officer of the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is not conclusive.

Mr. GEORGE. It is a certificate showing that every single step required by law to be taken for the perfection of the title under the pre-emption laws has been taken. It may be that he never was within a hundred miles of the land, that he was in New York, Boston, or Chicago, and therefore, so far as he was concerned, there is no presumption of knowledge that he knew anything about it. Then he shows the deed. And what will the United States have to do with that state of affairs which will happen in every single case? The United States will have to prove that the man who was in Boston or Chicago or some other place far distant from the land had notice of the fraud. It will have to prove that he made the contract; and how is it going to prove that? These contracts are always made secretly; there are no witnesses called in. The parties themselves having already sworn that no such contract exists, will never admit that the contract existed, and so the baldest case of fraud and perjury which can be imagined will go through and receive the confirmation provided for by this measure, simply because the Government of the United States can not show the fraud.

In addition to all that, it was said a little while ago by the Senator from Oregon now in the chair [Mr. DOLPH], and he was sustained in the statement I believe by some others, that it is for the purchaser to show he did not have notice. I think the Senator from Oregon now in the chair and the other gentlemen who sustained him in that position forgot a very plain principle of law. You can not compel a man to prove a negative. How can a man show that he did not have notice? He can only swear that he did not have notice, and that is all he can do; and having gone into a conspiracy for the purpose of robbing the Government of course he will swear it, and then the affirmative being upon the Government of the United States they will have to show that he did have notice, and that ends that part of the controversy.

I desire to say once for all that if the amendment which I have prepared is not sufficient to protect the settler, make it sufficient. I am willing to vote for any protection that he wants. If he is on the land claiming it as his home, as his shelter, cultivating it, having braved the horrors of that climate, having cultivated it, having paid his money for it, I am willing that he should have it, and my amendment gives it to him; but I am not willing that the men who never were within hundreds of miles of the land, who induced their employés to go in and enter it and get the final certificate and then make deeds to them—I am not willing by that sort of process that they shall have these whole townships of land. That is my position.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator from Mississippi is entirely too fair a Senator to have the impression go out from anything he has said, either over the Senate or over the country, that the case he last described is at all protected by the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. I have shown how it was protected.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator will not as a lawyer get up in his place and say that the amendment of the committee protects that kind of a case. The Senator has said that it might be difficult to prove whether the case came within the rule or whether it did not come within it. That is simply an argument against any law that would protect any bona fide purchaser for value; and that is all it amounts to.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to a very old and a very familiar law maxim in Latin.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Do not quote the Latin on me.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well, I will not quote the Latin on the Senator, as it seems to be objectionable to him, but the English of it is this: that what is, and what appears to the court to be, are the same thing. So although this amendment does not include the case stated by the Senator from Oregon as he states it, yet it furnishes the rule by which the men who created the case, by the very same means by which they created it, may create the other case, which will be within the rule laid down by the statute.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I simply wish to suggest that the Senator's argument only amounts to this, that because in a particular case it may be difficult to prove to the satisfaction of the court that the party is not within a certain rule, therefore the rule should not exist. That is all the argument amounts to.

Mr. GEORGE. The answer to that is that when the American Congress proposes to enact a rule for the protection of the public domain, knowing beforehand they ought not to enact one which does not already exist, which will certainly result in the wrongs which I have pointed out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHACE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the proposition.

Mr. PLUMB. My amendment is, after the word "sold," in line 22 of section 1, to insert the words "prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Kansas, for his consideration, whether it would not be better, in order to prevent transactions taking place pending this bill, so as to come within the rule, to say "the 9th day of June, 1886," the day on which the House bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLUMB. That would be retroactive. Why not say to-day, and then there would be notice?

Mr. GEORGE. The reason why that should not be done is, you are giving these men a privilege. I want to cut out the chance which the men who have got fraudulent entries have of selling to other parties, after the notice has been given to them by the introduction of the bill that we propose to pass. Therefore I think it would be well to confine it to the date on which the bill from the House of Representatives was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, which was the 9th day of June, 1886, so as to cut out from the operation of the act all collusive transactions which were initiated and consummated with a view of taking advantge of this provision.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to so modify my amendment, so as to insert after the word "sold," in line 22, the words "prior to the 9th of June, 1886, and;" so as to read:

That all entries made under the pre-emption laws, on which final proof and payment may have been made and certificates issued, and to which there are no adverse claims originating prior to bona fide entry, and which may have been sold prior to the 9th day of June, 1886, and after final entry to bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, shall be confirmed and patented, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I move to insert——

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say that there are one or two amendments from the Committee on Public Lands which I wish to offer.

Mr. GEORGE. All right.

Mr. PLUMB. In section 4, line 15, after the word "lands," I move to strike out all down to and including the word "purposes," in line 16, as follows:

Are also appropriated to compensate deficiencies for school purposes.

And to insert:

May be selected in lieu thereof from any unsurveyed public lands within said State or Territory not otherwise appropriated at the time of selection.

So as to read:

And if they, or either of them, have been or shall be reserved or pledged for the use of schools or colleges in the State or Territory in which the lands lie, other lands of like quality are appropriated in lieu of such as may be patented to pre-emptors or homestead settlers; and other lands may be selected in lieu thereof from any unsurveyed public lands within said State or Territory not otherwise appropriated at the time of selection.

That simply gives to the States and Territories the right to select lands which they are entitled to take in lieu of those absorbed by pre-emption entries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. To supplement that I move to insert at the end of section 4:

In accordance with the principles of adjustment now in force in the General Land Office.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to offer one other amendment from the committee to meet the objection which was urged against the bill at a former sitting by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. FRYE. Are these committee amendments?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment now proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 10 the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as depriving the holders of military bounty-land warrants, or other land-warrants, or land-scrip, at any time heretofore issued under or in pursuance of the provisions of any law of the United States, of their right to locate such warrants or scrip on the public lands of the United States in the same manner as if this act had not been passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The amendment does not go to the extent I think it ought, but in view of the fact that we have agreed to close the debate on the bill at this time, and it has been under discussion so long, I shall not detain the Senate by any remarks.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. In section 1, line 18, after the word "pre-emption," I move to insert the words "or homestead;" so as to read:

That all entries made under the pre-emption or homestead laws, on which final proof and payment may have been made and certificates issued, &c.

This is an amendment which I submitted some days ago and it was printed. I then gave notice that I should offer it. I believe there is no objection to the amendment on the part of the Committee on Public Lands. It simply includes entries made under the homestead law as well as under the pre-emption law, and there is no reason in the world that I can see why such entries should not be included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. In section 1, line 23, after the word "consideration," I move to insert the words "who are actual settlers on the land;" and after the word "patented," in the same line, to insert the words "to the extent of 320 acres, on which such purchaser resides;" so as to read:

That all entries made under the pre-emption or homestead laws, on which final proof and payment may have been made and certificates issued, and to which there are no adverse claims originating prior to final entry, and which may have been sold prior to the 9th day of June, 1886, and after final entry, to bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, who are actual settlers on the land, shall be confirmed and patented to the extent of 320 acres on which such purchaser resides, upon presentation of satisfactory proof to the Land Department of such sale.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say simply, without any debate, that I hope the amendment will not be adopted. The Senators from Oregon and Mississippi have argued the question at great length, and I do not care to add anything to what has been said.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I will take the responsibility, although I am not directed by the committee to do it, to move an amendment in section 8, line 4, to extend the limitation provided in that section to six months in place of ninety days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 8, line 4, it is proposed to strike out "ninety days" and insert "six months;" as as to read:

That in all cases under the pre-emption and homestead laws, and under this act, all contests or protests on the part of the Government, or any individual, concerning the land entered, shall be instituted within six months after final entry and issue of the duplicate receiver's receipt, and not afterward.

Mr. PLUMB. Upon conference with several members of the Committee on Public Lands they have expressed a desire that I should modify the amendment and make the time nine months. I am willing to do that in order to remove any possible objection.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the Senator will not do that. I think the term of ninety days is too long.

Mr. PLUMB. I think fixing nine months is a little unreasonable, but at the same time I do not think it will seriously affect the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas insist upon his amendment?

Mr. PLUMB. I insist on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. Will not that have the effect to prevent the issuance of a patent for any land for nine months after final entry has been made?

Mr. PLUMB. I think it will substantially, but I do not think that will be a burden, for this reason: I think that is the minimum time within which a patent is issued, unless hastened in some extraordinary way, which is not especially desirable from the public standpoint. Patents are not issued usually within twelve months. I do not think therefore it will make any substantial difference, but it will give this much additional time in which contests and proceedings on behalf of the Government may be instituted to set aside the certificate of entry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In section 9, line 3, before the word "years," I move to strike out "five" and insert "seven," so as to leave the time within which the United States may commence suit to annul a patent seven years instead of five.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 9, line 3, before the word "years," it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

That suits by the United States to vacate and annul any patent heretofore issued shall only be brought within seven years from the passage of this act, and suits to vacate and annul patents hereafter issued shall only be brought within five years after the date of the issuance of such patents.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In order to make harmony in the different parts of the bill, in section 8, line 16, after the word "consideration," I move to insert the words "prior to the 9th day of June, 1886;" so as to read:

That after final proof of the claimant and the issuing of the duplicate receiver's receipt, if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that fraud has entered into the title so acquired by the claimant, unless it shall appear that the land has been sold or conveyed to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration prior to the 9th day of June, 1886, the Commissioner shall suspend the issuing of the patent for the same, and file with the United States Attorney-General notice of such suspension of the patent, with his reasons therefor, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLPH. It seems to me that that is a very unjust amendment. Whatever may be the effect of the amendment fixing that date in the first section, the effect of this amendment here is just this, that wherever the Commissioner of the General Land Office is satisfied that fraud has entered into the original entry of the claim, no matter if he has positive proof that the land has been sold to an innocent purchaser, that the purchaser is in possession, that his all is interested in the land, it is made his duty to turn the matter over for prosecution to the Attorney-General. It positively cuts off all the rights of all bona fide purchasers hereafter, whatever the existing law may be.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I hope the amendment will not prevail. The effect of it is to adopt a rule just the contrary of what the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands has been contending for here for the last two days.

Mr. PLUMB. I think on the whole the criticism of the Senators from Oregon is correct, and I will withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn. The question recurs upon the adoption of the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands as amended, all the amendments thus far adopted having been to the words proposed to be inserted by the committee in lieu of the House bill.

The amendment as amended was agreed to, as follows: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 2299 and section 2301, and chapter 4 of title 32, excepting sections 2275, 2276, 2283, 2286, and 2288 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, are hereby repealed: Provided, however, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, including the right of such persons as have entered contests to make entry of the land the subject of such contest as provided by existing law, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated upon surveyed or unsurveyed lands before the 1st day of October, 1886, may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed; that all entries made under the pre-emption or homestead laws, on which final proof and payment may have been made and certificates issued, and to which there are no adverse claims originating prior to final entry, and which may have been sold prior to the 9th day of June, 1886, and after final entry, to bona fide purchasers, for a valuable consideration, shall be confirmed and patented upon presentation of satisfactory proof to the Land Department of such sale: And provided further, That any person who has not heretofore had the benefit of the pre-emption law, and who has failed, from any cause, to perfect title to a tract of land heretofore entered by him under the homestead law, may make a second homestead entry in lieu of the pre-emption privilege hereby repealed; but this provision shall not apply to persons who shall perfect title to lands under the pre-emption or homestead laws under proceedings already initiated: And provided further, That all outstanding certificates of deposit on account of surveys heretofore issued under the provisions of sections 2401, 2402, and 2403 of the Revised Statutes, and acts supplemental thereto, shall be receivable as cash (except for fees and commissions) in the sale and disposal of public lands, at the land offices at which such certificates are now receivable in commutation of homestead and in payment for pre-emption claims: And provided further, That all certificates heretofore issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to soldiers, or their widows, or their minor children, under section 2306 of the Revised Statutes, may be located by the original beneficiaries, their heirs, legal representatives, or assigns; and upon such location patent shall issue in the name of the locator.

SEC. 2. That an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to encourage the growth of timber on the Western prairies,'" approved June 14, 1878, and all laws supplementary thereto or amendatory thereof, be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the 1st day of July, 1886, may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests, as if this act had not been passed: And provided further, That the following words of the last clause of section 2 of this act, namely, "That not less than 2,700 trees were planted on each acre," are hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. That an act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, approved March 3, 1877, is hereby amended by adding thereto the following sections:

"SEC. 4. That at the time of filing the declaration hereinbefore required the party shall also file a map of said land, which shall exhibit a plan showing the mode of contemplated irrigation, and which plan shall be sufficient to thoroughly irrigate and reclaim said land, and prepare it to raise ordinary agricultural crops, and shall also show the source of the water to be used for irrigation and reclamation. Persons entering or proposing to enter separate sections, or fractional parts of sections, of desert lands, may associate together in the construction of canals and ditches for irrigating and reclaiming all of said tracts, and may file a joint map or maps showing their plan of internal improvements.

"SEC. 5. That no land shall be patented to any person under this act unless he or his assignors shall have expended in the necessary irrigation, reclamation, and cultivation thereof, by means of main canals and branch ditches, and in permanent improvements upon the land, at least $3 per acre of the whole tract reclaimed and patented, in the manner following: Within one year after making entry for such tract of desert land as aforesaid, the party so entering shall expend not less than $1 per acre in the necessary irrigation, reclamation, and cultivation of said tract, in the construction of main or branch ditches to or upon the same; and he shall in like manner expend the sum of $1 per acre during the second and also during the third year thereafter, until the full sum of $3 per acre is expended in the construction of canals and ditches to irrigate, reclaim, and cultivate said tract of desert land. Said party shall file during each year, with the register, proof, by the affidavits of two or more credible witnesses, that the full sum of $1 per acre has been expended in such necessary improvements during such year, and the manner in which expended, and at the expiration of the third year a map or plan showing the character and extent of such improvements. If any party who has made such application shall fail during any year to file the testimony aforesaid the lands shall revert to the United States, and the 25 cents advanced payment shall be forfeited to the United States, and the entry shall be canceled. Nothing herein contained shall prevent a claimant from making his final entry and receiving his patent at an earlier date than hereinbefore prescribed, provided that he then makes the required proof of reclamation to the aggregate extent of $3 per acre: Provided, That proof be further required of the cultivation of one-eighth of the land.

"SEC. 6. That this act shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued under said act of March 3, 1877, but all bona fide claims heretofore lawfully initiated may be perfected, upon due compliance with the provisions of said act, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed; or said claims; at the option of the claimant, may be perfected and patented under the provisions of said act, as amended by this act, so far as practicable.

"SEC. 7. That at any time after filing the declaration, and within the period of four years thereafter, upon making satisfactory proof to the register and the receiver of the reclamation and cultivation of said land to the extent and cost and in the manner aforesaid, and substantially in accordance with the plans herein provided for, and that he or she is a citizen of the United States, and upon payment to the receiver of the additional sum of $1 per acre for said land, a patent shall issue therefor to the applicant or his assigns: Provided, however, That additional proofs may be required at any time within the period prescribed by law, and that the claims or entries made under this or any preceding act shall be subject to contest, as provided by the law relating to homestead cases, for illegal inception, abandonment, or failure to comply with the requirements of law, and upon satisfactory proof thereof shall be canceled, and the lands and moneys paid therefor shall be forfeited to the United States.

"SEC. 8. That the provisions of the act to which this is an amendment, and the amendments thereto, shall apply to the State of Colorado."

SEC. 4. That section 2275 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"Where settlement with a view to pre-emption or homestead has heretofore been made, and where settlement with a view to homestead shall hereafter be made, before the survey of the lands in the field, which are found to have been made on sections 16 or 36, those sections shall be subject to the claim of such settler under the pre-emption or homestead law; and if they, or either of them, have been or shall be reserved or pledged for the use of schools or colleges in the State or Territory in which the lands lie, other lands of like quantity are appropriated in lieu of such as may be patented to pre-emptors or homestead settlers; and other lands may be selected in lieu thereof from any surveyed public lands within said State or Territory not otherwise appropriated at the time of selection where sections 16 or 36 are fractional in quantity, or where one or both are wanting by reason of the township being fractional, or from any natural cause whatever, in accordance with the principles of adjustment now in force in the General Land Office."

SEC. 5. That section 2289 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2289. Every person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years if a male, or at the age of eighteen years if a female, and is a citizen of the United States, or who has filed his declaration of intention to become such, as required by the naturalization laws, shall be entitled to enter one quarter-section, or a less quantity, of unappropriated public lands, to be located in a body in conformity to the legal subdivisions of the public lands; and every person owning and residing on land may, under the provisions of this section, enter other land lying contiguous to his land, which shall not, with the land so already owned and occupied, exceed in the aggregate 160 acres."

SEC. 6. That section 2288 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2288. Any bona fide settler under the pre-emption, homestead, or other settlement law shall have the right to transfer, by warranty against his own acts, any portion of his claim for church, cemetery, or school purposes, or for the right of way of railroads, canals, or ditches for irrigation or drainage across it; and the transfer for such public purposes shall in no way vitiate the right to complete and perfect the title to his claim."

SEC. 7. That any person entitled to enter a homestead under section 2289 of chapter 5 of the Revised Statutes shall, by complying with all the provisions of said chapter relating to the entry of homesteads, be entitled to make one entry as a homestead of one-half section or less of unappropriated mountainous land, as defined by this section, and in a compact form. Any 40-acre tract of the surveyed public lands, exclusive of mineral lands, three-fourths of which is so mountainous and rough that it can not be plowed and cultivated, shall be deemed mountainous lands within the meaning of this section, which fact shall be ascertained by proof of two or more credible witnesses under oath, whose affidavits shall be filed in the proper land office. The determination of what is mountainous land shall be subject to the decision and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior, who may provide for cross-examination of witnesses and for the production of proof on behalf of the United States before the register and the receiver as to the character of the lands at the date of the application or of final entry: Provided, That all the provisions of the homestead law relating to final proof, fees, contests, citizenship, relinquishments, residence, death, and transfers of the homestead claim shall apply to entries under this section: And provided further, That this section shall only apply to and take effect in the States of California, Oregon, Colorado, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, and New Mexico.

SEC. 8. That in all cases under the pre-emption and homestead laws, and under this act, all contests or protests on the part of the Government, or any individual, concerning the land entered, shall be instituted within nine months after final entry and issue of the duplicate receiver's receipt, and not afterward: Provided, That whenever it shall appear upon the face of the papers returned to the Commissioner's office that a clerical error has been committed, such entry may be suspended, upon proper notification to the claimant, through the local land office, until such error has been corrected: Provided further, That after final proof of the claimant and the issuing of the duplicate receiver's receipt, if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that fraud has entered into the title so acquired by the claimant, unless it shall appear that the land has been sold or conveyed to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, the Commissioner shall suspend the issuing of the patent for the same, and file with the United States Attorney-General notice of such suspension of the patent, with his reasons therefor; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence proceedings at once in the proper court to set aside such title, if in his judgment such proceedings can be maintained. This section shall apply to all cases of suspended entries heretofore made under the United States pre-emption and homestead acts: Provided, That after the lapse of two years from the date of the issuance of the receiver's receipt upon the final entry of any tract of land under the homestead or pre-emption laws or under this act, and when there shall be no pending contest or protest against the validity of such entry, the entryman shall be entitled to a patent conveying the land by him entered, and the same shall be issued to him; but this proviso shall not be construed to require the delay of two years from the date of said entry before the issuing of a patent therefor.

SEC. 9. That suits by the United States to vacate and annul any patent heretofore issued shall only be brought within seven years from the passage of this act, and suits to vacate and annul patents hereafter issued shall only be brought within five years after the date of the issuance of such patents.

SEC. 10. That hereafter no public lands of the United States not heretofore offered at public sale, except abandoned military or other reservations, isolated and disconnected fractional tracts authorized to be sold by section 2455 of the Revised Statutes, and mineral and other lands the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by acts of Congress of a special nature having local application, shall be sold at public sale or be subject to private entry: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as depriving the holders of military bounty-land warrants or other land-warrants or land-scrip, at any time heretofore issued under or in pursuance of the provisions of any law of the United States, of their right to locate such warrants or scrip on the public lands of the United States in the same manner as if this act had not been passsd.

SEC. 11. That an act entitled "An act to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries on public lands," approved March 3, 1879, and section 2 of an act entitled "An act relating to the public lands of the United States," approved June 15, 1880, are hereby repealed.

Mr. BOWEN. I desire to offer an amendment, to add a new section to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section to the bill the following:

SEC. —. That section 1 of an act entitled "An act authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes" be amended so as to read as follows:

"That all citizens of the United States, and other persons, bona fide residents of the State of Colorado or Nevada, or either of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, Dakota, Idaho, or Montana, and all other mineral districts of the United States, shall be, and are hereby, authorized and permitted to fell and remove, for building, agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, any timber or other trees growing or being on the public lands, said lands being mineral, and not subject to entry under existing laws of the United States, except for mineral entry, in either of said States, Territories, or districts of which such citizens or persons may be at the time bona fide residents, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the protection of the timber and of the undergrowth growing upon such lands, and for other purposes: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not extend to railroad corporations: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the owners or operators of saw-mills in any of the States or Territories herein named from cutting on such public mineral lands such timber or trees growing thereon as may be suitable for manufacture into lumber, or from selling such lumber for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned within the State or Territory where it is so manufactured."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. BOWEN. The only thing that is new in the amendment proposed by me is the second proviso. The other is simply a copy of the law as it now exists. By circular of the Land Department, dated May 7, 1886, this section of the law of the United States has virtually been construed away. The purpose of the amendment is to prevent that construction. I send the circular to the desk, and ask that the fourth clause may be read, in order that the Senate may understand why I propose the amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. I have been instructed by the committee, as I understand the matter, to oppose any amendment—not this particular amendment but all amendments—which would have a tendency to prevent the passage of the bill as reported. I therefore hope the amendment of the Senator from Colorado will not be adopted.

Mr. BOWEN. I can say to the Senator from Oregon that this amendment would not tend to prevent the passage of the bill. I ask that the fourth clause of the circular may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Circular.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 7, 1886.

To registers and receivers United States land offices, and special agents Government Land Office:

GENTLEMEN: By virtue of the power vested in the Secretary of the Interior by the first section of the act of June 3, 1878, entitled "An act authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes," the following rules and regulations are hereby prescribed:

* * * * * * *

Fourth. Timber felled or removed shall be strictly limited to building, agricultural, mining, and other domestic purposes.

All cutting of such timber for sale or commerce is forbidden. But for building, agricultural, mining, and other domestic purposes each person authorized by the act may cut or remove for his or her own use, by himself or herself, or by his, her, or their own personal agent or agents only.

Mr. BOWEN. The object of the law as it now exists is to allow the settler to use timber for purposes of building and other domestic purposes. Under the circular the force and effect of the law has been construed away, so that it is of no earthly use. The law is made a dead letter by the circular, and I desire to amend the law by the addition of the second proviso, which is all there is new in the amendment, which allows the owners and operators of saw-mills who saw the lumber to sell it for domestic purposes. That is all I have to say about the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say that when this circular came out I called upon the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office in reference thereto, and that the Commissioner and the Secretary have both been considering whether they can not modify the circular so as to make it conform substantially to this bill. Practically the fourth clause of the circular as read would be a great hardship in some sections, and render the whole community liable to go away off at some distance to buy their lumber. There are communities where there are nothing but mineral lands, who must buy their lumber of these saw-mills in the vicinity, which have been in existence since the country was settled. The amendment simply allows them to do what has been done.

Evidently the Commissioner did not understand the situation of affairs when the circular was issued. He showed a disposition, I think, to modify it fairly to meet the exigency of the case, but complained that he thought the law was not specific enough. The amendment makes it specific. I do not know what the Department would think, but I am inclined to believe that they would be satisfied with this provision, because I was told by the Secretary of the Interior that he hoped to arrive at some such construction of the statute practically in a few days.

Mr. PLUMB. The present timber law on the statute-book was passed in 1878 after exhaustive debate. It is a large question, one about which something could be said on all sides. It has not been considered by the Committee on Public Lands in connection with this bill.

I might perhaps on reflection and due consideration be perfectly willing that something of this kind should be put upon the bill at this stage, but I beg to say now to the Senator from Colorado that it would not, I think, be fair to put this amendment on the bill in the limited time which the Senate has allotted for discussion of the measure, and I hope he will introduce a special separate measure to that effect. I promise him that it shall receive prompt consideration at the hands of the Public Lands Committee, and I shall endeavor to do what I think he as a just man desires to have done.

I hope he will not insist on his amendment, and if he does, I hope the Senate will feel like voting it down.

Mr. BOWEN. It is all well enough for the Senator to say that, but there is no possible chance of having a law passed on this subject at the present session unless we amend the bill. The amendment is germane to the bill, it relates to the public lands, and is an amendment to which there can be no objection. I am simply attempting to take it out of the power of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to construe away a statute of the United States. I can not withdraw the amendment, and I shall insist upon its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. STANFORD. I find that in section 3, line 18, the words "or his assignors" were stricken out yesterday. In my judgment the effect of striking out those words will prevent the reclamation of any considerable quantity of desert lands. Unless the poor man who may desire to enter the lands shall have the opportunity to mortgage them, to trade with capitalists, it will be entirely out of the question for him to obtain title when it is necessary to bring the water a long distance in order to reclaim the desert lands. It is almost impossible to find any land now unoccupied that can be reclaimed except by bringing the water a long distance, which puts it out of the possibility of a poor man reclaiming 640 acres of land; nor can the water be brought by the rich man a long distance to reclaim only 640 acres. The consequence is that practically the settlement of the desert lands is made impossible under the bill.

Therefore I move that the words "or his assignors" be restored in line 18 of section 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that the words "or his assignors" be restored in section 3, line 18.

Mr. PLUMB. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas objects. The Senator from California can move it as an amendment when the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. He can ask for a separate vote on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California can ask for a separate vote on that amendment in the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to offer an additional section to the bill if it is in order to do so now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section to the bill the following:

SEC. —. That nothing in this act shall change, repeal, or modify any agreement or treaties made with any Indian tribes for the disposal of their lands, or of land ceded to the United States to be disposed of for the benefit of such tribes, and the proceeds thereof to be placed in the Treasury of the United states; and the disposition of such lands shall continue in accordance with provisions of such treaties or agreements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe myself that it is necessary to add that provision, but the question having been raised, it is deemed best to do it. I have consulted the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. DAWES], who is away, and who thinks something of that kind would be proper. There is a large area in Colorado that is within the provisions of the law, and some of our citizens are somewhat disturbed. I should like to have the section put on. It can do no harm.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as a substitute for the House bill.

Mr. STANFORD. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment that I designated in Committee of the Whole; that is, that the words "or his assignors," in line 18 of section 3, be restored.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator I suppose simply wants a separate vote on striking out those words, and I presume the question on concurring in the other amendments will be taken in gross, that amendment being reserved.

Mr. DOLPH. It should also include the words "or his assigns," in line 67 of section 3. The two ought to go together. If one clause is retained the other should be retained; and if one is stricken out both should be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from California that if he would move to restore those words it would be in better form.

Mr. HARRIS. Those words were stricken out by an amendment in Committee of the Whole, were they not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They were.

Mr. HARRIS. The question is, will the Senate concur in the amendments made in Committee of the Whole, and all the Senator from California needs is to ask for a separate vote on that amendment and to vote against concurring in it to accomplish his object.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. May I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that this is an amendment to the amendment, and that the whole bill is an amendment. Striking out the words "or his assignors" in Committee of the Whole was an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. That does not change the parliamentary proposition. The question is on concurring in the Senate to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, and the vote is "yea" or "nay" on agreeing to the amendment by which those words were stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the proper mode would be to take the question separately upon striking out those words.

Mr. FRYE. That is all that is necessary.

Mr. HARRIS. Those are amendments which are to be reserved for a separate vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment on which the Senator from California desires a separate vote will be read, so that the Senate may understand what is before it.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 18, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out of the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands the words "or his assignors," after the words "unless he;" so as to read:

That no land shall be patented to any person under this act unless he shall have expended in the necessary irrigation, reclamation, &c.

Mr. INGALLS. There is one other amendment on which the Senator from California desires a separate vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon restoring the words which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 18, after the words "unless he," it is proposed to insert the words "or his assignors;" so as to read:

That no land shall be patented to any person under this act unless he or his assignors shall have expended in the necessary irrigation, &c.

Mr. PLUMB. There is another clause which is the accompaniment of the one which has been read. One provides that the patent shall issue to the claimant or his assigns and the other provides that the assignor of the claimant may proceed to carry out the law with reference to reclamation, and so on. Those clauses were stricken out on the motion of the committee, because on reflection the committee were satisfied that it would produce a condition of things which was not desirable. For instance, if these clauses are restored it is likely, though not absolutely true, that any dozen persons may go upon desert lands, make their filing, pay their 25 cents an acre, and then assign, each of them, all their rights, individually and collectively, to a single person, who may thereafter go on and reclaim the lands and himself acquire title.

While the Senator from California would say that that is something to be desired, or at all events not to be berated, and while I have no doubt if these words were inserted more land would be reclaimed, and perhaps reclaimed in good faith, actually reclaimed in such a way as to come under conditions fitting it for cultivation and production, than would be reclaimed under the suggestion of the committee, at the same time it would produce a speculation in the public domain which it is the purpose of the committee to prevent if possible. While, as I said, it will retard to some extent the acquisition and the reclamation of these lands, yet the committee believe the slower process whereby the lands will go only into the hands of persons who do reclaim them and in quantities not exceeding 640 acres to each settler will be much more beneficial, from the public standpoint, than would be a quicker reclamation and to have the land go in large bodies into the hands of a single owner.

Mr. STANFORD. To one who knows the situation of the land it seems to be a clear proposition that the great object is to have those lands reclaimed, and that any system which will reclaim those lands is a good one for the country. There are desert lands in that region of enormous quantities, and when this generation and ten generations besides shall have passed away there will be an abundance of desert land for any poor man who is willing to take up 640 acres.

I say that under this bill it will be impossible to reclaim those lands; that they must be taken in large bodies in some manner, by combination or otherwise, or else they can not be reclaimed.

There is no such thing at the present time as the reclamation of any considerable quantity of those desert lands except by the expenditure of large amounts of money. In this I think every man who lives in the neighborhood of those lands will agree with me. There is no question, so far as I know, in regard to the matter among representatives from the country contiguous to the desert land. I hope that the Senate will give an opportunity to somebody to reclaim what at the present time is entirely worthless. Much of it is not worth a penny an acre.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] to insert the clause which has been read.

The motion was not agreed to.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

Mr. BOWEN. I desire to offer in the Senate the same amendment that I offered in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That section 1 of an act entitled "An act authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes" be amended so as to read as follows:

"That all the citizens of the United States, and other persons, bona fide residents of the States of Colorado or Nevada, or either of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, Dakota, Idaho, or Montana, and all other mineral districts of the United States, shall be, and are hereby, authorized and permitted to fell and remove, for building, agricultural, mining, or other domestic purposes, any timber or other trees growing or being on the public lands, said lands being mineral, and not subject to entry under existing laws of the United States, except for mineral entry, in either of said States, Territories, or districts of which said citizens or persons may be at the time bona fide residents, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the protection of the timber and of the undergrowth growing upon such lands, and for other purposes: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not extend to railroad corporations: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the owners or operators of saw-mills in any of the States or Territories herein named from cutting on such public mineral lands such timber or trees growing thereon as may be suitable for manufacture into lumber, or from selling such lumber for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned within the State or Territory where it is so manufactured."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. BOWEN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. CAMDEN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SAWYER. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is detained at home by sickness and is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. RANSOM. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. CHACE. My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Blair,	Jones of Nevada,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Logan,	Palmer,	Teller,
Cameron,	McMillan,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Frye,	Manderson,	Sewell,

NAYS—34.

Allison,	Coke,	Hale,	Pugh,
Beck,	Colquitt,	Harris,	Sherman,
Berry,	Conger,	Harrison,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Cullom,	Hawley,	Vest,
Brown,	Dolph,	Jones of Arkansas,	Walthall,
Butler,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Whitthorne,
Call,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Wilson of Md.
Chace,	George,	Maxey,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Plumb,

ABSENT—27.

Aldrich,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sabin,
Camden,	Hearst,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Sawyer,
Evarts,	Ingalls,	Payne,	Stanford,
Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Pike,	Van Wyck,
Gibson,	Mahone,	Ransom,	Voorhees.
Gorman,	Miller,	Riddleberger,

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to say that I shall vote for the passage of the bill. I would very much prefer, however, to vote for the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, which I understand proposes to repeal all the land laws except the homestead law. I should very much prefer to vote for that bill than to vote for this bill, believing that any act which was required for timber-culture entries or desert-land entries could have been perfected hereafter.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to say but a word.

Relying upon the assurance of the Senator from California that this bill, passing as it now is, will absolutely and positively prohibit and prevent the acquisition and reclamation of the desert lands until such time as there be further legislation, I shall vote for the passage of this bill.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. KENNA. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. RANSOM. As I stated before, I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SABIN] is detained from the Senate by sickness.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] is absent by reason of serious illness. He requested me to have his pair announced. I have forgotten at the present moment with whom he is paired.

Mr. CHACE. My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Allison,	Cullom,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Beck,	Dolph,	Maxey,	Teller,
Berry,	Evarts,	Palmer,	Vest,
Blair,	Frye,	Platt,	Walthall,
Butler,	Hale,	Plumb,	Whitthorne,
Chace,	Harris,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Hawley,	Sewell,
Conger,	Hoar,	Sherman,

NAYS—20.

Blackburn,	Colquitt,	Ingalls,	McPherson,
Bowen,	Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Manderson,
Brown,	Eustis,	Jones of Nevada,	Mitchell of Oreg.,
Call,	George,	Kenna,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Gray,	Logan,	Vance.

ABSENT—22.

Aldrich,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Hearst,	Morrill,	Sawyer,
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Payne,	Van Wyck,
Fair,	Mahone,	Pike,	Voorhees.
Gibson,	Miller,	Ransom,
Gorman,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sabin,

So the bill was passed.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the title be amended by striking out the words "the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands." That act is amended, not repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will be stated as proposed to be amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. If amended as proposed, the title will read: "A bill to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to; and by unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DOLPH, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order before the Senate, according to the vote of the Senate the other day, is the Fitz-John Porter bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, procedeed to consider the bill (H. R. 67) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, this is the same bill that passed both Houses of Congress two years ago, and a similar bill passed the Senate on a previous occasion. There is very little, if anything, new to say upon it, very little that has occurred since it was under discussion before; in fact I may say nothing that would throw any new light on the case. I do not intend to occupy the time of the Senate any longer than to merely state the case as it is, reserving my right to close the debate in case anything new is brought before this body against the bill.

Fitz-John Porter entered the service of his country as a cadet at West Point in 1841, graduated there with high honors in 1845, and immediately was ordered to a regiment, from which he went to the war in Mexico, during which time he was twice brevetted for gallantry and once wounded at one of the gates of the City of Mexico. On returning from there he was assigned as one of the instructors at West Point, and at the breaking out of what was known as the Kansas trouble he was made the adjutant-general of the general commanding the Army in that Territory. At the period of what is known as the Utah expedition he was asked for by and assigned to the commanding general of that expedition as his chief of staff.

At the commencement of the war of the rebellion he was an adjutant-general, and was assigned to the duty of providing for the men composing the garrisons of the different posts that had been surrendered by General Twiggs to the confederates. Performing that duty satisfactorily to the Department, and bringing those men within the lines of the Union Army and to the points assigned to them at the different fortifications along the coast, he was assigned to duty for the purpose of keeping open the communication between the Northern States and Washington, which was then obstructed, being still an adjutant-general and serving under the immediate orders of General Scott, then commanding-general of the Army.

It was said of Fitz-John Porter by a distinguished Northern governor, one who supported the Government and furnished a large number of troops at that time when they were very much needed, that he was his right arm, and that without him it would have been almost impossible to have gotten the Pennsylvania troops to the defense of Washington. I allude to the distinguished gentleman who was then governor of Pennsylvania, Governor CURTIN.

At that period, the telegraph lines being cut between the West and Washington, Fitz-John Porter received information from General Frank Blair, or intercepted a message to General Scott that unless he could receive a direct order to muster in the Missouri home guard and provide them with arms, the store of arms in Missouri would be captured by the rebels and that Missouri would be lost to the Union. Fitz-John Porter did not hesitate a moment to telegraph from Harrisburg, without the authority that some men would have waited for but with that boldness that was characteristic of the man, that the home guards should be mustered in, and ordering the officer in command of the arsenal at Saint Louis to issue arms to them. General Frank Blair, who was one of the bravest of the brave, one of the gallant souls who came to the surface in the late war, said explicitly that the action of Fitz-John Porter at that time saved Missouri to the Union.

Fitz-John Porter was assigned as adjutant-general to General Patterson, commanding in the valley, for he was the man above all others in this country at that time that every officer having a large command was anxious to have as his principal assistant. From that command he joined the Army of the Potomac, was successively appointed a colonel in the Army, a brevet brigadier-general in the regular Army, a brigadier-general of volunteers, and a major-general of volunteers.

In front of Richmond he commanded the right wing of the army at a time when the army was in a very perilous position astride of the Chickahominy, at a time when the movements of McClellan were based on expected aid coming from the direction of Washington under General McDowell. I say "expected aid;" it was promised aid; it was aid that was absolutely necessary. His army at that time having been reduced to about eighty thousand men, it was absolutely necessary in order to made a successful campaign in front of Richmond that he should get the forty thousand additional men that were supposed to be coming to him under McDowell.

A movement was made under Fitz-John Porter from Gaines's Mill to Hanover Junction for the purpose of meeting and making junction with McDowell. Porter fought for a day, but there was no McDowell. The authorities at Washington, fearing to expose the front of the capital to attack, not satisfied that the corps in the valley of Banks and Sigel were sufficient for its protection, recalled McDowell at a critical period when the whole campaign of the Army of the Potomac was based on that forty thousand additional men to make a junction with Porter. Instead of that, while McDowell was inactive, there was an attack by Jackson, whom McDowell, Banks, and Sigel were supposed to be holding in the valley, and who, escaping their vigilance and marching across their front, as Johnston did in the case of Patterson, came swooping down on Fitz-John Porter at Gaines's Mill and doubled up the right of the Army of the Potomac.

The history of the trials and the successes and the defeats of this great army is yet to be truthfully written. But I can say without contradiction that while it met with many reverses, it never was so demoralized that it did not stand up and fight to the last. The history of the retreat from Gaines's Mill by the right flank, and everywhere through an entirely new country, through what is known as the Chickahominy Swamp, fighting for seven days, speaks in the highest terms of the gallantry of that army.

Fitz-John Porter fought the battle of Gaines's Mill under adverse circumstances, and that at Hanover Junction, and that of Turkey Bridge, and on the fourth and fifth days' fighting of this retreating army, with the confederates in the full flush of victory, with a new commander, one of their greatest, brightest, and shining lights, held the enemy on a field chosen by himself, under the orders of McClellan, commanded by him, the corps posted by him, every battery fixed by him—held the enemy and hurled them back, giving us what I believe was one of the greatest victories of the war if advantage had been taken of it. The Army of the Potomac after the fight at Malvern Hill might have been pushed through the confederate battalions to Richmond, although they outnumbered the Army of the Potomac two to one, so demoralized had they become by the fight at Malvern Hill.

When it was determined to evacuate Harrison's Landing, which occurred a month afterward, Fitz-John Porter was ordered to take command of the rear guard, but finding after a day's march in the direction of Yorktown that he was not attacked, and getting information from the colored people of the country that the troops of General Lee were being marched north of Richmond to attack Pope, Fitz-John Porter asked for by telegraph and obtained leave of the then commanding general of that army that he might push ahead regardless of his assignment to the rear guard, as no trouble was to be anticipated, and join General Pope at the earliest possible moment. He did so, and he who was in the rear reported to Pope on the 26th of July, 1862, four days before some of the troops who were in his front on that march arrived, showing that this soldier was anxious and willing to do his full duty.

On the 26th of August while at Warrenton General Porter received the following order:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
Bristoe Station, August 27, 1862—6.30 p. m.

GENERAL: The major-general commanding directs that you start at 1 o'clock to-night and come forward with your whole corps, or such part of it as is with you, so as to be here by daylight to-morrow morning. Hooker has had a very severe action with the enemy, with a loss of about three hundred killed and wounded. The enemy has been driven back, but is retiring along the railroad. We must drive him from Manassas, and clear the country between that place and Gainesville, where McDowell is. If Morell has not joined you, send him word to push forward immediately; also send word to Banks to hurry forward with all speed to take your place at Warrenton Junction. It is necessary on all accounts that you should be here by daylight. I send an officer with this dispatch who will conduct you to this place. Be sure to send word to Banks, who is on the road from Fayetteville, probably in the direction of Bealeton. Say to Banks, also, that he had best run back the railroad trains to this side of Cedar Run. If he is not with you, write him to that effect.

By command of General Pope.

GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Colonel and Chief of Staff.

Maj. Gen. F. J. PORTER, Warrenton Junction.

That order from Pope was received at half past 9 o'clock, it having taken three hours for a single aid-de-camp to ride over the 9½ miles of road intervening between Pope's headquarters and Porter's. The night was a dark one. The road was occupied by the wagons of the different corps under the command of General Pope running from Warrenton Junction to Manassas and Centreville. The night was dark; it was almost impossible to see your hand before you; I speak advisedly; I need not even go to the record for that, because I was there; I was in the saddle all that night myself commanding a picket line protecting a corps of the army, and I know just exactly the character of the night, and I know how many times I got lost in endeavoring to reach my line.

The division commanders were present when this order was received in the tent of General Porter. One of the division commanders said, "My troops have marched 12 miles to-day and have just got in camp. We can not possibly make any headway by starting out at 1 o'clock on a night like this, on roads obstructed as these are by thousands of wagons. It will be far better and the order can be better obeyed by marching at daylight than it could possibly be at 1 o'clock, and in the mean time the men can have some rest." General Porter said, "The order is there and ought to be obeyed—must be obeyed."

After his division, and then some of his brigade commanders re-enforcing his division commanders, said they would arrive in much better condition for active service in the morning, and in all probability just as soon by leaving at daylight, Porter acquiesced in the advice of his principal officers, and the command moved at daylight, the head of the column arriving, after having hard work to pass through the different obstructions in the shape of wagons, at 8 o'clock, reporting to General Pope, but there was nothing for them to do, and that command remained there until the next morning, when this order was received:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
Near Bull Run, August 29, 1862—3 a. m.

GENERAL: McDowell had intercepted the retreat of Jackson. Sigel is immediately on the right of McDowell. Kearny and Hooker march to attack the enemy's rear at early dawn. Major-General Pope directs you to move upon Centreville at the first dawn of day, with your whole command, leaving your trains to follow. It is very important that you should be here at a very early hour in the morning. A severe engagement is likely to take place, and your presence is necessary.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Colonel and Chief of Staff.

Major-General PORTER.

Under this order General Porter marched promptly with his whole corps to Centreville, but on passing Manassas he was intercepted by an order from Pope, the situation being entirely changed, to countermarch his command toward Gainesville, which was promptly done, halting only for the purpose of filling up with ammunition. The head of the column arrived at what is known as Dawkin's Branch at about 11 or 11.30. Butterfield's brigade was thrown across the branch and immediately encountered the pickets of the enemy, capturing some of the scouts of Longstreet, who was supposed to be on the other side of Thoroughfare Gap. About that time General McDowell came up and showed Porter what is known as the joint order, under which McDowell and Porter were to march on Gainesville. I will read this order; it is as follows:

[General Order No. 5.]

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
Centreville, August 29, 1862.

GENERALS MCDOWELL AND PORTER: You will please move forward with your joint commands toward Gainesville. I sent General Porter written orders to that effect an hour and a half ago. Heintzelman, Sigel, and Reno are moving on the Warrenton turnpike, and must now be not far from Gainesville. I desire that as soon as communication is established between this force and your own the whole command shall halt. It may be necessary to fall back behind Bull Run, at Centreville, to-night. I presume it will be so on account of our supplies. I have sent no orders of any description to Ricketts, and none to interfere in any way with the movements of McDowell's troops, except what I sent by his aid-de-camp last night, which were to hold his position on the Warrenton pike until the troops from here should fall upon the enemy's flank and rear.

I do not even know Ricketts's position, as I have not been able to find out where General McDowell was until a late hour this morning. General McDowell will take immediate steps to communicate with General Ricketts and instruct him to rejoin the other divisions of his corps as soon as practicable. If any considerable advantages are to be gained by departing from this order it will not be strictly carried out. One thing must be had in view, that the troops must occupy a position from which they can reach Bull Run to-night or by morning. The indications are that the whole force of the enemy is moving in this direction at a pace that will bring them here by to-morrow night or next day. My own headquarters will be for the present with Heintzelman's corps or at this place.

JOHN POPE,
Major-General Commanding.

That order placed General McDowell in the command of his corps with that of Fitz-John Porter, he being the senior. McDowell stated in the hearing of several officers, as appears in the board record, to Porter, "This is no place to fight; Porter, you are too far out," and a short time afterward, in order to form a junction with the troops immediately under the command of Pope on the right, McDowell marched out with his corps, taking King's division, which had been marching with Porter, and marched by the right flank to connect with the left of the troops then engaged under General Pope with General Jackson of the confederate army. Previous to going through he showed Porter a dispatch from Buford, who commanded our cavalry, wherein Buford said, "Seventeen regiments and one or more batteries have passed toward Gainesville, and are now in your front."

That was known to Porter from the fact that he had captured men that belonged to Longstreet's corps, and it was apparent to him, as it has been proved since by the testimony of Longstreet and of Lee and of the principal confederate officers before the board that investigated this subject, that before he and McDowell under the order of Pope reached Dawkin's Branch, on their march to Gainesville, Longstreet was planted across their flank with twenty-five thousand men, Porter having at that time but ten thousand men in his corps after McDowell and King had left him, King having joined McDowell's force.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not wish to disturb the Senator, but we want things exactly as they are. The Senator stated that the dispatch of Buford said that these troops were marching down in his front. I understand that to be in Porter's front.

Mr. SEWELL. Toward Gainesville.

Mr. LOGAN. I will read it.

HEADQUARTERS CAVALRY BRIGADE—9.30 a. m.

Seventeen regiments, one battery, five hundred cavalry passed through Gainesville three-quarters of an hour ago on the Centreville road. I think this division should join our forces now engaged at once.

Please forward this—

Very different from the statement. Signed—

JOHN BUFORD, Brigadier-General.

General RICKETTS.

They were marching on the Centreville road, not on the road to Porter's corps.

Mr. SEWELL. The facts are as proved by several officers that they were deployed in front of Dawkin's Branch and that the whole force of Longstreet was there at that time. Longstreet himself, in his testimony before the board, says that at 9 o'clock he was in supporting distance of Jackson and at 11 o'clock he was deployed on that line. This is what is known as the 4.30 order, which is the third of the series that General Porter is charged with disobeying, and it was received, as near as can be ascertained, at 6.30 p. m. That is located by the fact that the report sent by Porter to Pope at 6 p. m. does not mention the receipt of the order, but does mention many things which preclude the idea that that order could possibly have been received until after. In fact officers who were present testify that it was received at sundown, immediately before or after. The order reads thus:

HEADQUARTERS IN THE FIELD, August 29—4.30 p. m.

MAJOR-GENERAL PORTER: Your line of march brings you in on the enemy's right flank. I desire you to push forward into action at once on the enemy's flank, and, if possible, on his rear, keeping your right in communication with General Reynolds. The enemy is massed in the woods in front of us, but can be shelled out as soon as you engage their flank. Keep heavy reserves and use your batteries, keeping well closed to your right all the time. In case you are obliged to fall back, do so to your right and rear, so as to keep you in close communication with the right wing.

JOHN POPE,
Major-General Commanding.

The only enemy that General Pope supposed was on that field was Jackson in his immediate front. Take that order in connection with the other order which says that the balance of the enemy will arrive to-morrow night or the next day morning, and it shows absolutely and conclusively to the mind of any fair man, as it did to General Grant, that Pope supposed he was fighting Jackson and Jackson alone; and in fact his order says that the balance of the confederate army were expected on the next day or the day after, when the actual fact stands out to-day boldly that the whole right wing of the confederate army was, as Porter said it was and knew it was, then in his immediate front, and as the advisory board says Porter was doing the greatest amount of service with the 10,000 men in holding those 25,000.

But upon receiving this order, positive in its character, hearing an engagement at the right he supposed that it was intended for a diversion and he was going to contribute, and he did, to the success of those engaged on his right, so that he ordered Morell to attack, but by the time the dispositions were made night came on. The officers would have been wrong and would have been liable to court-martial under the circumstances to attack when the firing had entirely ceased on the right, as is known to everybody who was engaged that day.

The next order General Porter received was dated at 8.50, August 29, which was as follows:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
IN THE FIELD NEAR BULL RUN,
August 29, 1862—8.50 p. m.

GENERAL: Immediately upon receipt of this order, the precise hour of receiving which you will acknowledge, you will march your command to the field of battle of to-day and report to me in person for orders. You are to understand that you are expected to comply strictly with this order, and to be present on the field of battle within three hours after its reception, or after daybreak to-morrow morning.

JOHN POPE,
Major-General, Commanding.

Maj. Gen. F. J. PORTER.

[Received August 30—3.30 a. m.]

The previous order issued contemplated an attack on the troops that were fighting General Pope, those of General Jackson securely posted by the railroad, of which I have considerable knowledge, having lost a good many of my own command there. It never contemplated, as I stated, any other, and General Porter was tried on the basis that his command was across the flank of the enemy and that he failed to make the attack, when in reality in order to make that attack as the order said, he would have had to march across twenty-five thousand men and 2½ miles to get to the right of Jackson, and to do it all with ten thousand men! General Porter marched promptly to what was called the field of battle, leaving what was really the important position of the field, taken away from the duty which the advisory board says saved the Army on that day, and pushed up to fight what? Nothing but Jackson.

Porter on arriving on that field deployed his men and went into action. One of the most magnificent sights I ever saw myself, for I was standing doing nothing, having been actively engaged the day before, was to see Fitz-John Porter's men make an attack and coming away down from the field that he left, and where he knew Longstreet was, came the legions of Longstreet, and the batteries and guns in full view that almost annihilated him, he losing more that day than any corps in the army.

Mr. President, had the troops under Pope been concentrated as they should have been, had Fitz-John Porter been left at Dawkin's Branch until the gap had been filled up between his right and Pope's left—had that generalship been displayed that we have seen often since, the second Bull Run would have told a different story.

Fitz-John Porter marched from that field under orders with the rest of the army, and was ordered to the command of the defenses of Washington, a place not likely to be given to a man who was distrusted by his superiors. For the defense of the capital that we had all been fighting for this man was selected, and while the troops marched up the left bank of the Potomac to meet the enemy, Fitz-John Porter was ordered to organize everything that came within the limits of his command, and I believe he did organize two divisions and was given the authority to designate their commanding officers, after which he was ordered to join McClellan, which he did prior to Antietam.

Now that all the charges practically have been cleared up against Fitz-John Porter new ones are from day to day being invented. It has been said that he was a laggard, that he did not show that zeal, courage, and bravery to get into the fight that he ought to have done, and that he had done at Gaines's Mill or at Malvern Hill. Mr. President, Fitz-John Porter was the chosen lieutenant of the then commanding-general of the Army. He had great confidence in his ability as a military commander; he relied on him for a last struggle; and Fitz-John Porter, then commanding eleven thousand men, was placed in the center and in the reserve of the Army that fought at Antietam. Because General Fitz-John Porter's corps does not appear as one of the leading corps making the attack, it is said that Fitz-John Porter did not take any part in that fight.

Any one who knows anything about military matters, the formation of a field, knows that a certain amount of troops must be kept for a last resort, a reserve to be used in case of necessity and to be drawn on as required from right to left. The facts of the case are that of those eleven thousand men, while Fitz-John Porter's corps did not march itself, did not attack under his command, they were reduced by details to Burnside and to the other commanders, as the records of the war show, until the reserves of that army at Antietam were below what prudence would call for. Fitz-John Porter had at one time only three thousand men under his command in that reserve.

Antietam was fought and won, and, as occurred at Gettysburg, there were loud complaints for a battle won but not followed up. Mr. President, we all know who have had any experience that a battle won often leaves the victor in as bad if not a worse condition as he who was defeated. It was so at Gettysburg; it was so at Antietam. The Army crossed the Potomac following that of General Lee, and in a short time General McClellan was relieved of command and Burnside was put in his place. This man who had for twenty years been the officer sought after by every commanding general in the service to aid him in anything that required bravery and character and knowledge of military science, this man who had done his country such great service, who had fought these battles that I have described, was put in arrest for alleged disobedience of orders occurring two months previous, he having occupied high and increasing commands during the interim, showing conclusively to the country that there was some other cause for it than what was alleged.

Pope was relieved and sent in retirement to the Northwest, from which he promulgated dispatches against Porter and McClellan, and particularly against McClellan, and in which he asked that he should receive some recognition for his services in the Bull Run campaign and that Porter and McClellan should be degraded.

It is only within three days that an officer of the late war bearing a historic name in this country, Alexander Hamilton, who was then a brigadier-general, said to me in this Capitol, "I was a brother-in-law of Halleck, and Halleck told me himself that he knew this was a wrong against Porter, but that he could not stop it."

Fitz-John Porter was placed in arrest and tried—tried on the charge of disobedience of orders, tried because he did not attack Jackson's right flank and walk over twenty-five thousand men under Longstreet, without the evidence that we have to-day, without the evidence from the men on the other side that we have to-day, with nothing in his favor and with everything against him.

Mr. President, the state of the country at that time demanded a sacrifice of some kind. It did not make any difference who was charged, the result would have been the same. I do not know that it was a calamity at that time, because there may have been jealousies among officers and there may have been a necessity for making an example of somebody. It fell on Porter. The necessities, though, were nothing like so great as the necessity that has occurred after twenty years to do justice to that man.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SEWELL. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator, I suppose, wants to discuss this question fairly and properly. The Senator says there were twenty-five thousand men in front of Fitz-John Porter. I ask him if he will refer to the evidence of that, if he has it?

Mr. SEWELL. It was before the board.

Mr. LOGAN. Longstreet says in his report, General Lee says in his report—which I will read at the proper time—that he moved down Compton's Lane, and there leaving Anderson's division back, that came up the next evening at 4 o'clock, having seven thousand men belonging to his corps, which would reduce the number to eighteen thousand, he took four brigades and one division and put them in the battle of Groveton, and they did not withdraw until 9 and 11 o'clock at night. That is the report of both Longstreet and Lee. So Longstreet could not possibly have had over six or eight thousand troops anywhere near Fitz-John Porter.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator from Illinois will have a chance to show that. I make my statement based on the report of the board.

Mr. LOGAN. I am talking about the report of their own men under their own names. I am talking about facts, not what people say. I am speaking of facts shown by the report of General Lee. Here is also the report of General Longstreet. Both of them say that all of Longstreet's troops except one division, Jones's, were put in the battle at Grovetown and staid there until 9 and 11 o'clock. One of the generals who commanded one of those divisions was a few years ago Doorkeeper in the House, General Wilcox, and he has stated that to me forty times, just as is stated in these reports, and he was in command of one of the divisions and went into battle at 12 o'clock and staid there until 9 o'clock at night. What is the use of these statements when the official records show that they are not facts?

Mr. SEWELL. The very gentleman that the honorable Senator from Illinois names told me in private that he was withdrawn to the right, went to the left first, and was taken to the right on the advance of Porter across Dawkin's Branch.

Mr. LOGAN. Now I will state it exactly as it is. Here is the report of Mr. Wilcox; I have it here over his own signature. After he went in there a gun was fired on the right and Longstreet withdrew him to the support of Jones, and Longstreet states where the troops were—Fitzhugh Lee had reported that troops had shown themselves on that road on which Porter was. He withdrew Wilcox's division and sent it to the support of Jones. The troops then disappeared, speaking, I suppose, of Fitz-John Porter's. He then withdrew Wilcox's division from Jones's support and put it back in the battle at Groveton and it was withdrawn at 11 o'clock that night. That is exactly the report of Wilcox and Longstreet and Lee.

Mr. SEWELL. It often occurs that the further you are removed from the scene of actual action the more you know about it.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not saying what I know about it, but what they report.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator from Illinois has said very often what he knows about the case. He does not agree with my view of it. That is all.

Mr. LOGAN. I am stating the facts.

Mr. SEWELL. I did not intend to do anything more than state this case at this time. I will present resolutions that I have received within the last few days showing the change in public sentiment particularly among the Grand Army posts, and I will ask that they be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

At a regular meeting of Oliver Tilden Post, No. 96, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New York, held at their headquarters, Morrisania, New York city, on June 8, 1886, on motion of Comrade Murphy and seconded by Post Commander Rate, it was Resolved, That the thanks of this post be tendered to Gen. William J. Sewell, now United States Senator representing New Jersey in the Senate of the United States at Washington, D. C., for his noble, manly, and able efforts to obtain for Maj. Gen. Fitz-John Porter, former commander of the Fifth Army Corps, that justice so long denied and of which he was deprived by sentence of court-martial in 1862. Side by side with our lamented Generals Grant, McClellan, Kilpatrick, and with Generals Sherman, Schofield, Terry, Getty, Sigel, Sewell, Howard, Averill, Jackson, Rosecrans, and Sickles, we earnestly desire to record the fact that, as veterans of the late war, many of us who served under General Porter, and know his brave, patriotic, and chivalrous actions as an abie commander, can bear testimony to his anxiety to meet and engage the enemy on July 29 and 30, 1862. The fact that one-third of the Fifth Army Corps was either killed, wounded, or captured, fully attests the fact.

At the last session of Congress in 1883, both the United States Senate and House of Representatives passed the act relieving General Porter from his unjust sentence, but it was vetoed by President Arthur. The time for such action is passed, and as Congress has again passed the bill by a large majority, we as Union soldiers and sailors, knowing no North, no South, no East, no West, regardless of party ties or political affiliations, most respectfully request the United States Senate to confirm the action of Congress and render justice so many years delayed to a brave, able, and persecuted soldier and efface the disgrace from the records of the Army archives.

J. WESLEY SMITH, Commander.

Passed unanimously.

GEORGE W. BROWER,
Adjutant Oliver Tilden Post, No. 96, Grand Army of the Republic, Morrisania, New York City.

JUNE 8, 1886.

NEW YORK, June 24.

SIR: I send you the following. Please show Senators EVARTS and MILLER, of New York, yours and theirs by mail.

"HEADQUARTERS WILLIAM D. KENNEDY POST, No. 42,
"DEPARTMENT OF NEW YORK, G. A. R.,
"New York, June 23, 1886.

"The following was unanimously passed this evening on motion of Post Commander James S. Mead, seconded by Senior Vice-Commander W. J. Keeth:

"'Resolved, That Hon. WILLIAM J. SEWELL, Senator from New Jersey, be thanked for his earnest efforts to reinstate General Fitz-John Porter to the position which past injustice has denied him; and we, as members of William D. Kennedy Post, earnestly request that our Senators, Hon. WILLIAM M. EVARTS and Hon. WARNER MILLER, use their utmost efforts to sustain Hon. WILLIAM J. SEWELL in securing justice to the said General Fitz-John Porter.'

"JOHN J. YOUNG, Adjutant.
"JOHN C. LIMBRECK, Commander."

Four other posts passed similar resolutions last evening, all by mail.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM JAY MURPHY,
Tremont, New York City.

Hon. WILLIAM J. SEWELL.

[Headquarters Judson Kilpatrick Post, No. 143, Department of New York, Grand Army of the Republic. Bunting Hall, corner Third avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-fourth street.]

NEW YORK, June 16, 1886.

At a regular encampment of this post held on June 14, 1886, it was unanimously

Resolved, That the thanks of this post are hereby tendered to General WILLIAM J. SEWELL, United States Senator from New Jersey, for his noble and indefatigable efforts to obtain for Maj. Gen. Fitz-John Porter, former commander of the Fifth Army Corps, that justice so long denied and the rights of which he was deprived by sentence of court-martial in 1862. We, many of us, having served under him, stand ready to bear testimony, as did the lamented Grant, McClellan, Hancock, and Kilpatrick, as well as the living Sheridan, Schofield, Terry, Rosecrans, Sickels, Sigel, and others, to his pure patriotism, sterling integrity, valor, and bravery. And as the Fifth Corps on the 29th and 30th of July, 1862, lost about one-third their number in killed, wounded, and missing, give full attestation to the fact that he was anxious to meet and engage the enemy.

We therefore, regardless of affiliations of any kind, respectfully request the United States Senate to confirm the action of the lower House and restore to this persecuted and patriotic soldier that which it is conceded on all sides as rightfully his; restore him to his former rank and wipe the stigma from his manly brow, and expunge from the Army records that disgraceful court-martial sentence which has been there now too long.

SAMUEL H. BAILEY, Commander.

GEORGE RORK, Adjutant.

[Headquarters Dahlgren Post, No. 113, Department of New York, Grand Army of the Republic, 50-52 Orchard Street.]

New York, June 15, 1886.

At a regular encampment of this post, held at headquarters as above indicated, the following resolutions were presented by Comrade Walsh and adopted:

"Whereas a bill has passed the national House of Representatives and is now pending in the Senate providing for the restoration of Fitz-John Porter, late commander of the Fifth Army Corps, Army of the Potomac, to his proper rank in the service: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That Dahlgren Post, No. 113, Department of New York, Grand Army of the Republic, heartily and earnestly approve and recommend said bill, and urge its immediate passage in the Senate.

"Resolved, That the post has reached this conclusion through the evidence and facts established by the Schofield board of inquiry, which completely exonerates and removes from stain or suspicion the past conduct of this skillful soldier and unfortunate patriot.

"Resolved, That while we fully appreciate and deplore the terrible injury inflicted, we regret exceedingly the utter impossibility of doing at this late day full justice to this brave and patient man. We appeal, however, to the distinguished Senators from this State, MILLER and EVARTS, and respectfully ask that the above measure have favorable consideration at their hands."

WM. MCENTEE, Commander.
J. M. MURRAY, Adjt.

Mr. SEWELL. I present a letter from General J. I. Sayles, Department Commander of the Grand Army, and a letter from the Dahlgren Post of New York, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[Office of J. I. Sayles, Department Commander, G. A. R.]

ROME, N. Y., June 16, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR AND COMRADE: My attention has been called to the resolutions introduced in your post by Comrade Murphy and unanimously passed in reference to our late comrade in arms, General Fitz-John Porter.

I have never had the leisure nor have I taken the time to examine the evidence given upon the trial in this case, but some time since I read the statements made by our old commander, whom all our citizens loved to honor and in whom we all have such great confidence, who now sleeps at Riverside, and I know the often-expressed wish of the brave Hancock, and of many others, officers and privates in the late war, who were in position to know and in whose judgment I have entire confidence.

Speaking for myself in this matter, I am in entire sympathy and fully indorse the sentiments as expressed in the resolutions.

I trust the time has come when justice will be done a brave soldier and when General Porter will be reinstated to the position which I believe is justly his due.

Yours, in F., C. and L.,

J. I. SAYLES, Department Commander.

Col. WESLEY SMITH,
Commander Grand Army of the Republic Post No. 96.

Mr. SEWELL. Fitz-John Porter was found guilty on these charges and dismissed the service in the most ignominious manner. He never faltered or hesitated in his desire to have the case opened up, and purely and simply on the honest ground that so far as he was concerned he never did anything that justified such a sentence; that he was a soldier by profession; that he executed every order that had been issued to him, as he understood it, with the reservation, and with the right that a great commander has at all times under the custom of war.

Why, Mr. President, you will find gentlemen not familiar with the subject, not students of the art of war, who have never read the precedents, who have no knowledge about what they talk of—I do not mean any personal allusion here—who suppose that because an officer in command of troops receives an order he is blindly and deliberately to execute it, no matter where it fetches his men; that even he is to cross a stream, if he is ordered to cross it, that would swallow them all; that holding a detached position which he sees is of vital importance to the whole army, because he receives an order to do something which requires him to leave that point or to make an attack, from his commander at a distance, ignorant of the situation, ignorant of the surroundings, that he is to obey it. There is no greater fallacy in war than that.

It is a well-established fact that detached officers, particularly those who command corps, who are little removed from the rank of the commanding officer except by mere assignment, and who are selected for their ability and their character and their knowledge of war—that they have the right and that they would be derelict in their duty if they did not exercise their discretion under similar circumstances that Fitz-John Porter exercised the right at Dawkin's Branch or at Warrenton. He has always maintained that right, and he has been backed by the best officers in the service up to the great successful general who was twice President of the United States.

At last, Mr. President, a seeming show of justice was given him, a board was authorized to investigate the case, and they sat for months at West Point. The board was composed of three of the best officers in the Army, those selected by the then commanding general of the Army, who said the verdict of that court of honor would be accepted by every one.

A full, fair hearing was given to Porter and the Government, and it was established to the mind of everybody who heard that testimony, and to the court itself, that Porter was justified in everything that he had done in that campaign, the single exception being the remarks that he had made about his commanding officer to General Burnside, which were purely personal in their character.

The finding of that board composed of these distinguished officers, two of whom are now the senior major-generals of the Army, and one of them a distinguished old general on the retired-list, has after years—for it has taken years to change the public sentiment of this country—but particularly after the indorsement of General Grant, opened the eyes of the public to the fact, as Terry said, that instead of being a criminal Porter was a martyr.

He comes now before you I trust for the last time to ask for justice; nay, Mr. President, to demand it. The time has gone by to ask that favors may be granted to this man who has been wronged. I in his name, I who know him, a citizen of my State, a man whom I esteem and have been with in the front of many a fight, demand justice of the Senate of the United States for this man who has been grossly wronged.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to offer an amendment to this bill so that it may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and printed.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. Will my colleague yield to me for a motion?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 25, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate June 16, 1886.

CONSUL OF THE UNITED STATES.

Thomas C. Jones, to be consul of the United States at Funchal, Madeira.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 21, 1886.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

William Neville, of North Platte, Nebr., to be register of the land office at North Platte, Nebr.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Public Lands; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom the matter of confirmation of the appointment of William Neville, in place of H. M. Grimes, suspended, as register at the United States land office, North Platte, Nebr., report that there is no charge reflecting upon the personal or official integrity or the proper discharge of his duty as such officer in the office of Department of the Interior, but that the change was made for political reasons and to make vacant a position to be filled by a political friend of the administration, and therefore recommend that Mr. Neville be confirmed.

POSTMASTERS.

George Washington, to be postmaster at Bay City, Bay County, Michigan.

J. B. McKenzie, to be postmaster at Hopkinsville, Christian County, Kentucky.

John C. Logue, to be postmaster at Central City, Merrick County, Nebraska.

William R. Joline, to be postmaster at Long Branch city, Monmouth County, New Jersey.

Margaret A. Shirley, to be postmaster at Logan, Cache County, Territory of Utah.

Wilson D. Lyon, to be postmaster at Elkhorn, Walworth County, Wisconsin.

Henry W. Clendenin, to be postmaster at Springfield, Sangamon County, Illinois.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate June 24, 1886.

POSTMASTER.

Fannie D. Porter, to be postmaster at El Paso, El Paso County, Texas.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 24, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a personal explanation, which involves incidentally a correction of the RECORD published on the 20th instant.

On the 5th day of this month the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] addressed the House with regard to the extension of the indebtedness of the Pacific railroads. In the course of his remarks he made a statement that Mr. Adams, the president of the Union Pacific Railroad, had committed certain gross violations of the law. I asked him then to specify what those violations of the law were, and the only specification he made at that time was that Mr. Adams had himself stated that the matter of free passes given by the Union Pacific Railroad Company had, as I understood Mr. HENLEY to state at the time, cost the Government some $2,000 a day. I denied the statement; and desire to say now frankly in the presence of the House that my denial was too broad. As appears from the published speech of Mr. HENLEY his statement was that it cost the company $2,000 a day, whereas my understanding was that he referred to the cost to the Government.

I find that Mr. Adams in his testimony some time ago before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate had stated that this matter of free passes cost the Union Pacific Company, I think, something like $2,000 a day. But it was not a violation of the law. The statement was volunteered by Mr. Adams himself in the interest of better transportation over the road, and was accompanied with the remark by Mr. Adams that many of these free passes were issued to employés, telegraph operators, and others in the interest of the transportation of freight furnished to the road.

I make this statement because I think it is due to the gentleman from California for the reason that there was that in the testimony of Mr. Adams which presented some foundation for the statement made by the gentleman. But it involved no violation of law and came from this testimony of Mr. Adams, which was furnished in such a manner by him as to be entirely creditable to that official.

But there is another matter in this connection to which I desire to call attention. In the extension of the remarks of the gentleman from California in the RECORD, under the general leave given him, Mr. HENLEY makes, on page 6247, what purports to be a quotation from Mr. Adams himself, consisting of some fifty-eight lines in the RECORD, containing some severe reflections upon the Union Pacific Railroad Company and upon Mr. Ames and the gentlemen associated with him in the construction of that road.

It purports to have been copied from a book published by Mr. Adams, I think in 1869. I find on an examination of a copy of the book published by Mr. Adams, that the first twenty-four lines of this alleged quotation from Mr. Adams, and constituting the first paragraph of said quotation, are words which are contained in the book or pamphlet to which I have referred written by him in the year 1869, but the remaining thirty-four lines in which occurs the reference to the name of Mr. Ames, are words which Mr. Adams never uttered and never wrote, and which are therefore incorrectly and improperly attributed to him by the gentleman from California. It happens that about eighteen months ago an anonymous pamphlet was published called "The Pacific Railroads," which contained very severe criticisms upon Mr. Adams and the administration of the Union Pacific road. In this pamphlet the first twenty-four lines to which I have referred are quoted and then follow, in a different type, certain disconnected passages which now have been gathered together and put in Mr. Adams's mouth. The getleman from California has put in not only the twenty-four lines to which I have referred, but the additional thirty-six lines which were never written by Mr. Adams.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, what is the question before the House?

Mr. LONG. It is a correction of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman stated that it was a personal explanation involving a correction of the RECORD.

Mr. REAGAN. This does not seem to be a matter of privilege.

Mr. LONG. I am nearly through if the gentleman will permit me to proceed a moment longer. I will state to him that it is for the purpose of securing a correction of the RECORD.

The remaining thirty-six lines to which I have referred are culled from different pages of this anonymous pamphlet; for instance, from pages 11, 17, and 18, disconnected passages, and are appended to Mr. Adams's genuine words, and now published as a part of his production.

Now, I can not for a moment believe the gentleman from California is guilty of intentionally attributing to Mr. Adams or putting in his mouth words that he never uttered.

I could wish that the gentleman from California himself had made the correction. It is possible he proposes to do it. I called his attention to the matter yesterday, and trust he will unite with me in having a correction of the RECORD made so that no words shall be attributed to Mr. Adams which he did not use.

In continuing his remarks the gentleman from California took certain words from these additional thirty-six lines and commented on them in a way very prejudicial to Mr. Adams, accusing him of using words which he had never used, and enlarging with some rhetorical force and vividness on certain phrases as if they were really Mr. Adams's. I trust the gentleman will join me in making the proper correction.

Mr. HENLEY. The gentleman from Massachusetts is right in his statement that I had attributed certain language to Mr. Adams which Mr. Adams never uttered and never wrote. In the preparation of the address which was printed on the 20th June, I remembered that a good many years ago Mr. Charles Francis Adams published in one of the magazines, I forget which, a scathing arraignment of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, its directors, the Credit Mobilier, Oakes Ames, &c.

When I prepared the address to which the gentleman alluded I remembered this denunciation on the part of Mr. Adams, and I had before me a speech delivered by Mr. Adams before the Committee on Pacific Railroads this winter, in which anybody can see who desires to inform himself that he became not only the apologist but the eulogist of the Union Pacific company and the Credit Mobilier, which he had previously so fiercely denounced. I thought it was a legitimate matter of criticism to contrast the previous utterances of that gentleman with his later statements, and I undertook to do that in this speech. Not having the article itself at hand I was obliged to rely upon what purported to be a copy of it in a newspaper. I used that copy, not dreaming there was anything there that could not properly be attributed to Mr. Adams. Now, then, it seems I was wrong; that is to say, I used the first paragraph of thirty or forty lines.

Mr. LONG. Twenty-four lines.

Mr. HENLEY. In the RECORD, there being a great many more in the newspapers which are correctly ascribed to Mr. Adams. Now, mark you, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Adams presents himself here through his representative in the attitude of a man who has sustained a substantial grievance at my hands. I want to call the particular attention of the House to the precise injury which this gentleman fancies he has sustained.

In the quotation that I made, and which he admits to be correct, the sentiment and the denunciation are in precise accord, in entire harmony, with that which he says I have improperly attributed to him. In other words, Mr. Speaker, he denounces the Credit Mobilier and the former Union Pacific management in terms of almost ferocity, in terms of severity such as I scarcely ever saw in print, which Junius himself could hardly surpass. I quoted that and quoted him correctly. Further on there is other language used by somebody else no more severe, no more denunciatory, precisely in a line with that which Mr. Adams himself had used and which I had attributed to him; and he presents himself to this House in the attitude of one who has sustained a grievance by reason of that publication.

Sir, it is precisely as though I had said Mr. Adams upon a certain occasion accused Oakes Ames of being a knave, and he immediately rushes forward, denounces that as being unjust and untrue, saying, "I did not say he was a knave; I said he was a villain or a rogue."

Mr. LONG. The gentleman does not mean to claim that Mr. Adams has referred to Mr. Ames in any such way as that?

Mr. HENLEY. I do not, and I do not think anybody so understood me, except possibly the gentleman. I was simply using that by way of illustration.

Now, that is all there is between myself and Mr. Adams. It is true that sometimes we do fall into mistakes. When I asserted here on the floor of this House that Mr. Adams had stated that the free-list, the dead-head list, cost the Union Pacific company $2,000 a day I was met with a most vehement, persistent, and not altogether respectful denial on the part of my friend from Massachusetts of the truth of any such statement. It turns out now, according to the admission of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that Mr. Adams did testify before a Senate investigating committee that the free-list had cost that company that much money per day.

Mr. GUENTHER. How much?

Mr. HENLEY. Two thousand dollars a day. He goes on to explain that it may be 40 or 50 per cent. less. But according to his own statement it appears that for seven days the free-list was $14,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is all that I care to say in this connection. Mr. Adams appears or affects to consider himself aggrieved by this quotation. I simply quoted, unintentionally, words that had been attributed to him by a newspaper, and which were precisely in the line of what he had himself written. Therefore, I can not conceive that the gentleman has suffered any very serious injury at my hands.

There were other things, Mr. Speaker, in that speech of mine to the contradiction of which the gentleman could very pertinently have addressed himself if they were not true, and the logical result, as I conceive it, of the complaint which he makes here, and the one which he has made in a letter addressed to me personally, is that he has no denial to make of those charges, for he has no complaint to utter upon this floor through his representative, or in any other way, in respect to them.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] has said that he asked me to specify the violations of law which Charles Francis Adams had been guilty of, and that I specified only the one relating to free passes. The gentleman is mistaken about that——

Mr. LONG. I said that was all the gentleman specified at the time he was speaking. The gentleman has since put in other specific charges.

Mr. HENLEY. In the same address and on this floor, Mr. Speaker, and not as a matter of print, I did specify other offenses of the most serious nature on the part of Mr. Adams, and as to those things he stands before this House mute.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I simply ask the indulgence of the House for one moment. I did not refer to specific charges which the gentleman from California made in his printed speech, a speech which was not delivered upon the floor. With regard to those charges, they are four in number. The first is——

Mr. HENLEY. One moment, Mr. Speaker. I did not refer in what I said just now to what I printed. I referred to what I stated on this floor, and if the gentleman desires me——

Mr. LONG. If the gentleman will give way one moment, I wish to answer these charges. The gentleman says in his printed speech:

First. I charge, and challenge denial, that Charles Francis Adams and his co-directors on the Union Pacific board have criminally violated the law in issuing without the consent of Congress $5,000,000 of 5 per cent. collateral trust bonds in April, 1883.

The answer to this charge, as Mr. Adams gives it, is that that was a transaction which took place before Mr. Adams became a director and two years before he became president of the company. I am informed also that the court sustained the transaction.

The second charge is:

I charge, and challenge denial, that the said Adams and said directors have violated the law in paying the dividends of 1883 and 1884 in the teeth of the existence of a gross floating debt of $13,000,000.

The answer to that is, that it is not a violation of law for a railroad company to pay a dividend when it has a floating debt. It would have been a violation of law to have paid a dividend when anything was due to the Government under the Thurman act, but the Union Pacific company claimed that it owed the Government nothing under the Thurman act. That question was settled by the courts, and as soon as the courts had determined that there was something due to the Government under that act, then, before paying another dividend, that sum was paid to the Government.

The third charge is:

I charge, and I challenge denial, that said Adams and directors have criminally violated the law in placing without the consent of Congress the indorsement of the Union Pacific company on about $15,000,000 of bonds of the Oregon Short Line company, entailing thereby an annual loss of some $600,000 to the Union Pacific company.

The answer to that is, that the Union Pacific company did indorse the bonds of the Oregon Short Line company, and that it was a perfectly legitimate transaction; and the further answer is that, so far as regards Mr. Adams being responsible for that transaction, it occurred three years before he had any connection with the company.

The fourth charge is:

I charge that the said Adams and said directors have deliberately diverted the assets belonging to the Government lien by using them in anticipating, at a premium of 12 per cent., the third-mortgage bonds not due till 1889, while the debt due the Government is annually increasing at the rate of $800,000.

The answer to that is, that there are no third-mortgage bonds of the company at all. So Mr. Adams states. Thus every one of these four charges fails. Mr. Adams——

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENLEY. I desire to say just one word. I say that everything I have alleged here can be proven, every solitary thing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri will state his point of order.

Mr. BLAND. My point is that the time of the House is being taken up with a matter which is not a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this discussion about the truth or falsity of the charges against Mr. Adams is out of order.

Mr. HENLEY. I simply say that I stand here ready to prove everything I have stated.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, shall I understand that the RECORD is to be corrected?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] not to object to the correction of the RECORD in the particular to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] has alluded—the incorrect quotation.

Mr. HENLEY. And as to the mistaken denial of the gentleman from Massachusetts in regard to the free-pass matter.

Mr. LONG. That ought to go in, in justice to the gentleman from California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, in extending my remarks, to include in them this quotation, so as to specify what I refer to.

Mr. HENLEY. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

Mr. LONG. I did not ask consent to extend my remarks.

Mr. HENLEY. You said that in extending your remarks you wished unanimous consent to do so and so.

Mr. LONG. I ask leave, Mr. Speaker, in printing my remarks, to include in them this quotation.

Mr. HENLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the same privilege be extended to me.

The SPEAKER. One at a time. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HENLEY. I object, unless unanimous consent is given to me also.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

COMMUTATION FOR SIGNAL CORPS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a memorial from enlisted men in the Signal Corps recommending that the provisions on the sundry civil appropriation bill for commutation for rations, quarters, and fuel to enlisted men in the Signal Corps be amended; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SECOND LIEUTENANTS IN SIGNAL CORPS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief Signal Officer of the Army recommending that House bill No 9373, to repeal the provision of the act of June 20, 1878, for the appointment of second lieutenants in the Signal Corps, be not passed; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DORSEY, for the remainder of the week, on account of sickness.

To Mr. WISE, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LEHLBACH, until Friday, June 25.

To Mr. HEARD, for ten days.

To Mr. BUNNELL, for the balance of the week, to attend to important business.

To Mr. DINGLEY, for three days, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. LANDES, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print in the RECORD remarks on the proposition to amend Rule XXIII.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WILLIAMSPORT, PA.

Mr. DIBBLE. The bill (H. R. 2148) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a building for the United States circuit and district courts, the post-office, and other Government offices at Williamsport, Pa., and making an additional appropriation therefor," has been returned from the Senate with amendments and a request for a conference. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference requested.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the amendments be read.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 6, after "hundred," insert "and twenty-five."
In line 7, strike out "and twenty-five."
In line 10, after the word "dollars," insert "including site."
Strike out section 2, as follows:
"SEC. 2. That the sum of $50,000, in addition to the sum heretofore appropriated, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be expended and used, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purchase of additional grounds and for the prosecution of the work of construction and furnishing materials therefor."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE]?

Mr. MORRISON. I would like to know what the controversy between the two Houses is.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I will state the controversy. The House passed this bill increasing the limit of expenditure for this public building, and in that increase there was estimated the purchase of grounds adjacent to the present site for the purpose of affording proper area for Government uses. The Senate struck out the fifty-thousand-dollar provision under the impression that it was additional. It is not additional, but is a part of what the House had agreed to; it was merely an appropriation of $50,000 of the increase for the purchase of land.

Another ground of disagreement arises from the fact that by a mistake in the printing of the bill in the House the sum of $25,000 was put in the wrong line of the bill.

The object of the House committee in recommending a disagreement is to correct the error, and at the same time to attach to the appropriation of $50,000 specific words, so that by no intendment or construction can the limit determined upon by the House be exceeded. The present proposition is in the interest of economy; it looks to conserving the interests of the Treasury and the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. You do not propose to increase the cost of the building?

Mr. DIBBLE. We propose to put in additional words, so as more explicitly to exclude any increase of the cost. Our proposition is really in the interest of economy.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendments of the Senate will be non-concurred in and the request for a conference agreed to.

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced the appointment of Mr. DIBBLE, Mr. JOHNSTON of North Carolina, and Mr. BROWN of Pennsylvania as the conferees on the part of the House.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO EMPLOYÉS IN GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. BARKSDALE. On behalf of the Committee on Printing, I ask that the House now take up the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 544) granting leave of absence to employés in the Government Printing Office.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been returned from the Senate with amendments and a request for a conference.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The Committee on Printing recommend that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in and the request for a conference agreed to.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 1, after "office," insert "whether employed by the piece or otherwise."
In line 2, after "one," insert "fiscal."
At the end of line 4 insert "such employés as are engaged on piece-work shall receive the same rate of pay for the said fifteen days' leave as will be paid to day hands: Provided, That those regularly employed on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shall receive leave with pay at the close of each session pro rata and from the time of such employment."
After line 4 insert the following:
"SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect on and after the 1st day of July, 1886."

There being no objection, the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in and the request for a conference agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BARKSDALE, Mr. REID of North Carolina, and Mr. FARQUHAR as conferees on the part of the House.

RIGHT OF TOWING-VESSELS TO CARRY PASSENGERS.

Mr. DUNHAM. I desire to submit a privileged report from a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3037) relating to the licensing of vessels engaged in towing to carry persons in addition to their crews, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

CHARLES F. CRISP,
R. W. DUNHAM,
MARTIN L. CLARDY,
Managers on the part of the House.
WARNER MILLER,
J. W. DOLPH,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House state that the amendment of the Senate simply extends the bill of the House No. 3037 so that vessels of 100 tons burden and under may carry passengers or excursionists on the ocean or on the great lakes not exceeding 15 miles from the mouth of a bay or harbor without being required to have three water-tight bulkheads, as required at present by section 4490 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

This amendment being recommended by the Supervising Inspector-General, and the managers on the part of the House seeing no objection to it, we therefore agree to the same, and recommend that the House concur.

CHARLES F. CRISP.
R. W. DUNHAM.
MARTIN L. CLARDY.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the morning hour for the call of committees for reports be dispensed with. There was an hour on yesterday, and but little came of it from these committees.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to inquire if the sundry civil bill is to be taken up?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will learn in due course.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I ask because it looks as if the other wing of the Democratic party was out in force this morning. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. Never mind about the other wing; both wings will flap together after a while. [Laughter.]

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I have agreed to yield a moment before going into Committee of the Whole to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY] who wishes to make a report for an absent member.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make two reports on private bills for reference.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order cuts off the opportunity to receive the reports the gentleman from Florida wishes to present.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is right.

The motion was agreed to. [Applause.]

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. REAGAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government.

The Clerk will read the pending amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 279 add the following, after the word "treasurer:"

"Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes of large denominations in lieu of notes of small denominations canceled or retired."

Mr. RANDALL. I do not see the gentleman who offered the amendment in his seat, but he is no doubt in the Hall. The House was dividing upon this amendment and found itself without a quorum. The gentleman from Iowa and myself were acting as tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places.

Mr. RANDALL. I think we might as well begin over and state the question anew.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again submit the motion.

Mr. BLAND. If in order I would like to have a few minutes on this amendment.

Mr. EDEN. Let it be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. If debate is in order I would like to make a few remarks.

Mr. RANDALL. Debate is not in order, but if the gentleman wants a minute I should like a minute in reply.

Mr. BLAND. I want a minute myself.

Mr. DUNN. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. If there is to be any debate I want it limited.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. If the gentleman in charge of the bill has no objection to two minutes' debate, I presume there will be none in the committee.

Mr. BLAND. I hope it will not be limited to two minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing to give the gentleman from Iowa one minute, one minute to the gentleman from Missouri, and take one minute for myself; and I ask unanimous consent that the debate be limited to three minutes.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is not an equal division of time; let us have three minutes on this side.

Mr. BLOUNT. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the vote on the amendment.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I think there will be no objection to five minutes being allowed for an explanation.

Mr. STORM. I object.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Then say one minute.

Mr. STORM. I object to that.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. We want the House to know what we are voting on.

The CHAIRMAN. There can not be debate without consent.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The question had been already submitted to the committee.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I understood the gentleman in charge of the bill to agree to three minutes' debate.

Mr. RANDALL. I did, but the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] in calling for the regular order prevented that agreement from being carried out.

Mr. BLOUNT. I insist on the regular order.

The question was again put, and the Chair stated that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I call for a division. It is very evident the committee does not know what it is voting on.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 51.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No quorum. Now, I make this proposition: I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment with a view to renewing it.

Mr. RANDALL. Renewing it—when? I could not agree to that.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I want the committee to know what it is voting on. I think it does not.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate.

Mr. BLAND. The debate can come in in another way.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to go on with the bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I assure the gentleman and the House more time will be taken up if this is not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the gentleman's privilege; but I do not yield under a threat of that kind.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I withdraw it, and insist on the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. RANDALL, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. WEAVER, will take their places as tellers.

Mr. DINGLEY. Many gentlemen do not understand what the amendment is. It is an amendment, I believe, providing for printing the one and two dollar notes.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 78.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 277 and 278 strike out $300,860 and insert in lieu thereof $327,740.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he will accept this amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I will not.

Mr. CANNON. The committee has just indicated by its vote that the one and two dollar greenbacks should be printed. This is an amendment to furnish the money to print them, and is in exact conformity with the estimate submitted by the Treasury Department for this purpose. While I am referring to this matter I want to say to the gentleman in charge of the bill that the Treasury Department in the regular estimates submitted an item for money to print these notes. I read now from Appendix CC, page 284, of the estimates:

The Treasurer of the United States estimates that there will be required during the fiscal year 1887 6,000,000 sheets of United States notes and certificates, if the printing of one and two dollar notes is resumed. In the absence of any legislation on the subject it is assumed that the issue of those denominations will be resumed, and the estimate is accordingly so made as to provide for the printing of 6,000,000 sheets.

Now, much was said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, when this bill was last under consideration, as to the policy of the Treasury Department being to omit the printing of one and two dollar United States notes. Such may be its policy. Yet I apprehend it is as much the policy of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as it is the policy of the Treasury Department; because when you turn to the regular estimates you find the money is estimated for in the letter from which I have just read for the printing of these notes. And if appropriated without the mandatory direction of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] just adopted, I presume it would have been expended by the Treasury Department.

I want to say further that without this increase of appropriation, which brings it up to the estimate of the Treasury Department, the one and two dollar notes can not be printed. If this amendment is adopted I will offer amendments to the two succeeding paragraphs to accomplish the same purpose.

Mr. BLAND. It is a matter of surprise that a gentleman claiming to represent the principle of getting more money into circulation should undertake to amend the bill by enacting a law the effect of which will be to contract the currency thirty or forty millions of dollars. We find a gentleman professing to be a Greenbacker per se uniting with the gold advocates to crowd out a portion of what is now the circulating medium. What is the effect of this? It is not to put more greenbacks into circulation. If the effect was to issue seventy-five millions in addition to the three hundred and forty-six millions now outstanding there would be some principle in it in harmony with the views of the gentleman from Iowa, and I might support it. But simply to issue one and two dollar greenback bills does not increase the circulation of the greenbacks one cent—not a cent.

It simply converts the ten-dollar and the twenty-dollar greenback bills into ones and twos, and does not increase the amount that goes into circulation at all. The effect is to issue one and two dollar notes that will take the place of silver dollars now in circulation. We have to-day locked up in the Treasury twenty-eight millions of subsidiary coin that ought to go into circulation, but which will never go there as long as you issue these one and two dollar paper greenback bills. The result will be simply to pile up in the Treasury the subsidiary coin and the silver dollars, and in that way to contract the currency. There are now about one hundred millions of silver in circulation in halves and quarters, which has gone out to supply the place of small change. That will come back into the Treasury as soon as you issue these one and two dollar bills, and the effect of this legislation is to drive back into the Treasury forty or fifty millions now in circulation, while it will not add a single dollar to the circulation.

Now I understand the modus operandi of this movement. There is a bill before this House for the purpose of supplying one and two dollar notes, but that is to be an additional circulation, to be issued on money now in the Treasury. That legislation, if carried out, will put seventy-five or eighty million dollars more money into circulation than we have now; but inasmuch as this House, or this committee, sees proper to cause to be issued one and two dollar greenbacks, that will prevent the passage of the silver-certificate bill and prevent our getting the money out of the Treasury which ought to go into circulation. I am astonished that gentlemen who claim to represent the principle and the idea of putting more money into circulation should aid here in enacting a law the effect of which is to defeat the further circulation of silver or silver certificates. I say that this House ought to vote the proposition down on a yea-and-nay vote, and unless they do that I predict that you will never get one and two dollar silver certificates issued on the silver dollars in the Treasury, and the silver already in circulation will go back into the Treasury, because these one and two dollar greenbacks will take its place.

I am in favor of legislating in a practical way, not of running after any mere sentimentality on this subject.

Another observation I desire to make, and it is this: We have the same amount of greenbacks in circulation to-day that we have had ever since the law of 1878, and we must have that amount, and it does not matter whether that circulation is in one and two dollar bills or in fives or tens.

Mr. BRUMM. The same amount, barring those destroyed or lost.

Mr. BLAND. It does not matter whether your greenbacks are uttered in bills of ten dollars and upward or not.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It does to me.

Mr. BLAND. It does not matter, because the circulation of the greenbacks is fixed by law. We are coining two millions of silver every month, and we ought to get it into circulation; but how are we going to get it into circulation if we issue these one and two dollar greenback bills to take its place?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does not this bill provide for the free shipment of silver?

Mr. BLAND. But the gentleman understands that the country requires a certain amount of small change, and if it is not supplied by bills it will be supplied by coin. Therefore, when you supply this paper for that purpose, you drive the coin back into the Treasury; and I am not astonished that every man who claims to support the gold side of this question votes with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri says that he is astonished at my position. I reciprocate the remark by saying that I am equally astonished at his.

What is the effect of this amendment? It is simply to preserve the denominations of the greenback currency now in circulation. That is all. The Secretary says in plain terms in a letter to this House that the Treasury will not issue any more ones and twos. This amendment in effect will compel him to do so. It is to prevent the change of denomination from small bills to large bills.

No more useful money is in circulation in this country than the one and two dollar greenbacks; and the gentleman's position amounts to this—that it is necessary to destroy them in order to get his silver dollar in circulation. I say that is a cowardly position on his part. Why does he not take the position before this House that there is necessity for more money? We have not too much gold, nor too much silver, nor have we too many greenbacks. We have not enough of either by a long shot. If the gentleman has the courage of his convictions, why does he not "beard the lion in his den" and say, "I mean to stand here until the silver dollar is remonetized fully upon an equal footing with gold, and until the people can have the privilege of going to the Treasury and depositing their silver and get one, two, and five dollar silver certificates?" The Treasury is making war on both silver and greenbacks. There is no necessity of crowding out of circulation the one and two dollar greenbacks in order to get his silver dollar into circulation; and I give him notice now that if it should become necessary to retire the greenback circulation or any portion of it, or convert it into larger denominations, in order to get his silver into circulation, I will stand by the greenback; and he will find that the people will do so generally.

There is no excuse for the position which the gentleman takes. I am astonished at his joining with the Treasury Department in its war upon the one and two dollar greenbacks and at his placing himself upon the ground that the retirement of these greenbacks is necessary in order to get the silver certificates into circulation. There is no law to authorize the issue of silver certificates of a lower denomination than $10; and there is no probability that a measure of that kind will pass the Senate. Such a measure will have to run the gauntlet of a hostile Senate. It will have to run the gauntlet of a hostile Treasury Department. There is no assurance whatever that the one and two dollar silver certificates which the gentleman advocates will ever be printed by authority of law or ever get into circulation, though I am very anxious that they may. We have the one and two dollar greenbacks now authorized by law; not so with small silver certificates. Why exchange a sure thing for an uncertainty? I think it a good business proposition to hold on to a certainty.

Does not the gentleman know that this House by a large majority voted down the proposition for the unrestricted coinage of silver? Yet he says that I join with the "goldites" here to secure this victory of preventing further destruction of the greenbacks. If a gold-bug will vote right I am entirely willing he should do so. It does not frighten me to see goldites voting to preserve greenbacks. I am entirely willing that all men shall do so.

Now, let us keep the greenback which we already have. For this purpose I came to Congress—to see that no hostile hand should ever be laid upon another dollar of this greenback money, that it should be forever fixed in the circulating medium of this country. I call the attention of Democrats here who have greenback constituencies to this fact: You know that not one of those greenback voters upon whom many of you depended for your seats in this Congress would indorse the striking down of the one and two dollar greenbacks; and it will never be done with my consent, no matter from what quarter the proposition may come.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STRUBLE. I yield my time to my colleague [Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa].

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to limit debate.

Mr. BLAND. Before that is done I wish to reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to limit debate.

Mr. STRUBLE. I believe I was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. BRUMM. I rise to a point of order. I understood the Chair recognized the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] as having the floor. By what right does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] now claim to have the floor to limit debate?

Mr. STRUBLE. I claim that I was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. I was claiming the floor at the same time as the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Chair saw the gentleman from Pennsylvania seeking the floor the Chair recognized him.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask consent to limit debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto to twenty minutes.

Mr. BLAND. If I can have an opportunity of replying to the gentleman from Iowa—I do not want to consume time unnecessarily——

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I will reserve my time and let the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] occupy the floor now.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know anything about the gentleman's time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it agreed that debate on the paragraph and amendments be limited to twenty minutes? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Do I understand that I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. STRUBLE. I yield my time to my colleague [Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa].

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I will reserve my time and let the gentleman from Missouri now take the floor in his own right.

Mr. RANDALL. I can not hear the statement of the Chair. Is the debate limited to twenty minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked if there was objection, and no objection being made, it was announced as being agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRUMM. But I objected, Mr. Chairman. Give us an hour.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not object.

Mr. BRUMM. Very well; I will withdraw the objection in deference to gentlemen around me.

Mr. HOLMAN. Regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the motion that the committee rise if twenty minutes is agreed upon, that time to be divided evenly.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I presume I will have the right to control a part of the time that was yielded to me by my colleague from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for a part of the time.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I reserve my five minutes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am just as good a friend of the greenback as the gentleman from Iowa, or any other gentleman upon this floor; but I am a friend, too, of putting all the money we can in circulation. I am not in favor, though, of running after an ideal thing and thereby defeating the main object which is within our own grasp of putting the money in circulation.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] told me the other day, in answer to an inquiry, that he had agreed to report the bill to issue the one and two dollar silver certificates. But I desire to say that when the gentleman from Maine gets his amendment through, by way of the gentleman from Iowa, to issue the one and two dollar greenbacks, he will not longer have the heart nor will there be any desire to issue silver certificates and you will hear nothing more from him on that subject. Now, then, I claim in the interest of the business of this country that these silver certificates should be issued. The gentleman from Maine and others claim to have an equal interest in the business prosperity of the country, but they are driven here to the proposition of issuing one and two dollar silver certificates to accommodate that demand of the country, and that sentiment will drive the House and the Senate to the issuance of these certificates on the $80,000,000 of amount lying idle in the Treasury, unless, and I wish to emphasize it, you supply that demand by issuing the one and two dollar greenback bills.

Then you defeat every proposition to relieve the interests of the country in the manner in which they should be relieved. That is my position and that is a position that gentlemen can not meet with mere assertions or generalities. You can not meet it by saying that this is for the purpose of preserving the greenback circulation. Nobody is opposed to preserving the greenbacks; there is no proposition to interfere with them. But there is another question which we must meet. If the proposition was to issue seventy-five or one hundred million dollars more of greenbacks, instead of saying a ten-dollar bill shall be issued for ones and twos, and not increasing the currency, there would be more consistency in the position. What are we to do with the silver?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Pay it out on the debt.

Mr. BLAND. Pay it out on the debt, very true; but how are you going to get a bill here to-day which will accomplish anything that you desire to accomplish unless you take advantage of the prevailing sentiment and issue the one and two dollar silver certificates?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. You have the law now for that.

Mr. BLAND. You allow the gold people to join with you to prevent it; that is the trouble. Now, I say the business of the country will drive the gold and the silver and the greenback party to issue the one and two dollar silver certificates. How can you prevent that unless we supply them the one and two dollar greenbacks? Does anybody want to prevent it?

Mr. Chairman, I am not supporting the policy of the Treasury Department, and no gentleman who knows my course on this floor will accuse me of that. I am satisfied the idea of retiring the one and two dollar greenback bills was to put the heavy silver dollar into circulation and try to make it unpopular among the masses of the people. But instead of that they have only succeeded in putting more silver in circulation, and I hear no complaint of its unpopularity. But there is a demand for one and two dollar bills. Now the question is, how shall we meet it? I say by issuing the silver certificates and thus utilizing the coin in the Treasury. That is what we ought to do, and the country will drive us to it unless we supply the demand of the country by issuing one and two dollar greenbacks, which will not help the greenback circulation in the least. Three hundred and forty-six millions of greenbacks are required to be kept in circulation, no matter whether they be issued in tens, twenties, fifties, or hundred-dollar bills.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Or even if issued in thousand or ten thousand dollar bills?

Mr. BLAND. No, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think it does not make a very material difference.

Mr. SCOTT. Let me ask the gentleman from Missouri: Suppose you issue the silver certificates on the silver in the Treasury, does that increase the volume of money you put in circulation?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is it; that is the question.

Mr. BLAND. It does exactly, to the amount of the certificates you issue.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Not at all.

Mr. SCOTT. That is just where I take issue with the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND. You simply utilize the money which is lying idle in the Treasury, and I claim that is an increase of the circulation.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But we have the greenbacks in circulation, the one and two dollar bills. Why not continue their issue? Why do you want silver certificates to replace them if the silver will circulate?

Mr. BLAND. But, Mr. Chairman, the question is to get the money out. The Treasury Department will not pay it out. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and other gentlemen here opposed to silver will not vote to get it out.

A MEMBER. Why does the gentleman not bring in a bill to issue the one and two dollar silver certificates?

Mr. BLAND. There is a bill for that purpose pending which the House can take up and pass; and they will do it if you do not couple it with the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa. I am surprised that the gentleman when he says he wants all the gold and all the silver and all the greenbacks in circulation that he can possibly have will advocate a policy that he knows will just prevent that.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Money is simply a tool of exchange for the convenience of the people. All the people want is the most convenient tools for doing their business.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I rise to a point of order. I understand this debate is limited to twenty minutes. How is the time to be assigned?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I only desire to take two or three minutes.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Not to come out of my time.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I say what the people desire is to have the most convenient tools for the transaction of their business. It is not so much with them a question of whether it shall be gold, or silver, or greenbacks, as that it shall be good money and convenient money. I agree with what the gentleman from Iowa has said, that we want all the gold we have and all that the mines will produce, and all the silver that the people want to use, whether coined into dollars or in the form of bullion. We want all the greenbacks the law allows, $346,000,000. We want these three factors of our currency, gold, silver, and greenbacks, in that form which will best subserve the interests and the convenience of the people in the transaction of their business.

Now, it is admitted on every hand that there is a scarcity of small paper circulation. The law provides for a certain amount of greenback circulation—that can not be reduced. A certain proportion of it is now in small notes. We have already decided that these small notes shall not be substituted by larger notes. It seems to me it makes no difference whatsoever to the people or to the Government as to whether these small notes shall be greenbacks or whether they shall be silver certificates. But I see no reason why we should retire greenbacks to make room for silver certificates.

The position of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] amounts simply to a confession—a confession here in open court—that his silver dollars will not circulate unless they are forced out by the withdrawal of the small paper currency.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman is opposed to the silver dollar, and I am at a loss to know why he makes that statement.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am not opposed to the silver dollar, but I understand if the gentleman's argument has any force——

Mr. BLAND. I understand that every gentleman opposed to the silver dollar makes that argument.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am not opposed to the silver dollar, and I am not opposed to the silver certificate. But if your silver dollar is not good enough on its own merits to be absorbed into circulation, when this bill provides for its free shipment to every man in the country that wants it, it is not so good a form of money as greenbacks, and I am in favor of the best and most convenient form of circulating medium.

Mr. BLAND. I want to get more money into circulation.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If that be true, the greenback is the better money.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from Michigan does not want the silver dollar in circulation.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I want to have in circulation all the people want and can use for their convenience, whether of gold, silver, greenbacks, or silver certificates, so long as it is good money, and I believe in retaining the present volume of greenbacks and not reducing the amount of small notes now in circulation.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. How much time remains for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. Ten minutes.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, the speech of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is "much ado about nothing." He knows as well as he knows his own heart that I am for the Bland dollar of 412½ grains and for the unrestricted coinage of the Bland dollar; and he knows that I sat here in this House during that discussion and upheld him in every vote. But what is his position here to-day? His position is this, that there is no way of getting his silver dollar into circulation except at the expense of the paper currency of this country. That is his position.

Mr. BLAND. I do not allow the gentleman from Iowa to state my position. My position does not drive a single greenback dollar out of circulation.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I do not yield; but I will let the gentleman state his position himself. I have his speech delivered a day or two ago, on page 5982 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. He said:

We can never force gold or silver into circulation until paper money is withdrawn.

Now there is his own statement, and that is the key to the position of the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND. I want to correct the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I do not yield.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman must yield for a correction. I did not speak of paper money, except the small denominations.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. You do not make that exception here.

Mr. BLAND. I did state so, as you will find if you will read it all.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman says:

We can never force gold or silver into circulation until paper money is withdrawn. The statistics show that we coin about 80 per cent. of gold into $20 pieces.

Mr. BLAND. Read it all?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Assume then what the gentleman says, that he means small paper money. Then his position is this: He is in favor of withdrawing the greenbacks of small denominations in order to get his silver or silver certificates in circulation. Well, sir, I am not.

What does the country gain by that? If he had a law here first enacted to authorize the issue of one and two dollar silver certificates, and they would not go into circulation unless the greenbacks were printed in larger denominations, in fives and tens, then the gentleman's proposition might be a sensible one. But his idea is first destroy one and two dollar greenbacks and then make the loss good by silver certificates of small denominations. That is his position.

I say, let these greenbacks alone! They are good money; they are popular money. They are needed in circulation, and so are the gentleman's one and two dollar silver certifiates, and I will stand here with him and fight to have a law passed to authorize the issue of one and two dollar silver certificates, but I will not join him in an attack on the greenbacks; and I will, to the extent of my ability and influence, hold any man or any party responsible that attacks these one and two dollar greenbacks. They shall not be retired, God being my helper, if I can prevent it by an appeal to this House or by an appeal to the country.

Let this greenback money alone! It must be let alone. This House has voted that it shall be. Come on with your silver bill, and I will be your right-hand man to fight for the issue of your silver certificates and your silver dollars, but I protest against the withdrawal of these one and two dollar greenbacks; and the gentleman from Missouri confesses what I do not believe to be true when he says that we can not get silver into circulation if one and two dollar greenbacks are issued.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations, in making up this bill, recognized the sentiment of the House, as expressed in the early part of this session, in relation to the coinage of the silver dollar. This is not a question of the aggregate amount of greenback circulation at all. It is a question as to what kind of denominations of greenbacks shall be issued, whether the three hundred and forty-six millions in circulation shall be in ones and twos or in higher denominations. The policy of the Treasury Department, as far as I am able to learn it, has been to give the silver dollar the fullest opportunity possible to go into circulation. Therefore, for a year past they have thought it proper to omit the reissue of ones and twos, and the effect of that has been to increase the aggregate amount of Bland dollars in circulation about ten millions. Now, if you issue greenback ones and twos the effect will be to call back into the Treasury that increased amount of Bland dollars at present in circulation. It can not be otherwise. The withdrawal of the Bland dollar may be even greater than the ten millions increase; but I am free to say to this House that if we are to have the issuance of ones and twos at all, they ought to be silver certificates, based upon the silver coinage, rather than any portion of the three hundred and forty-six million greenback circulation. The question of the denominations of the greenbacks which they desire had better be left to the owners of them who send them to be exchanged.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Why not let the people determine that question?

Mr. RANDALL. They do. The people who own the greenbacks and who send them here for exchange do determine it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The Treasury owns them.

Mr. RANDALL. The people who own them send them here, and they are given out in such denominations as they desire, except ones and twos, and the reason of that exception I have stated.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, we have a law which provides that the gold reserve in the Treasury shall not be brought below one hundred millions, and the Department has always treated greenbacks and gold alike, claiming that the greenbacks are redeemable in gold. Nothing but greenbacks and gold are paid at the subtreasury in New York and the clearing-house. There is an effort on the part of the Treasury Department and of the gold party to uphold gold and greenbacks at the expense of the silver circulation.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What law makes the greenback redeemable in gold?

Mr. BLAND. I do not yield. The gentleman knows that what I say is correct. Now, Mr. Chairman, if we are to have a double standard in this country we must make use of the silver coin either by paying out the coin itself or else by issuing certificates upon it. Silver is coined into small pieces—quarters, halves, and dollars—and the paper issued upon it ought to be in pieces of corresponding denominations, because the country demands only a small portion of the monetary circulation in small pieces, and it must be either in silver or in silver certificates, or else the result will be that your silver will be piled up useless in the Treasury.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Bring up your silver-certificate bill and I will vote for it.

Mr. BLAND. Yes; but others will not vote for it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I do not care who is with me if I am right.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Is this what the gentleman from Pennsylvania calls the Democratic wings flapping together? [Laughter.]

The House divided on the amendment of Mr. CANNON; and there were—ayes 89, noes 58.

Mr. RANDALL. As no quorum voted I shall have to ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Less than a quorum having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. RANDALL. To save time I will take another occasion to have a test vote on this question.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. BLAND. I understood we were to have tellers on the question just under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declined to insist on the point that no quorum had voted.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not insist, because I intend to have a vote in the House.

Mr. CANNON. As a substitute for lines 268 to 279 I offer the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Compensation of employés:

One superintendent of engraving, at $3,600; one superintendent, at $2,700; one superintendent, at $2,200; three superintendents, at $1,900 each; three superintendents, at $1,600 each; four assistant superintendents, at $1,500 each; three foremen, at $1,400 each; one captain of watch, at $1,400; two lieutenants, at $1,000 each; twenty watchmen, at $720 each; three clerks, at $1,600 each; five clerks, at $1,400 each; seven clerks, at $1,200 each; six clerks, at $1,000 each; six clerks, at $900 each; seven clerks, at $780 each; ten clerks, at $600 each; one chief engineer, at $1,200; one engineer, at $1,000; three firemen, at $800 each; one experienced machinist, in charge of numbering machines, at $1,800; one experienced machinist, in charge of impression registers, at $1,600; six machinists, at $900 each; one machinist's apprentice, at $600; one plumber, at $1,100; one master-carpenter, at $1,200; one carpenter, at $900; one carpenter's apprentice, at $600; two engravers or transferrers, at $2,700 each; one engraver or transferrer, at $2,500; four engravers or transferrers, at $2,200 each; five engravers or transferrers, at $2,000 each; two engravers or transferrers, at $1,800 each; four engravers or transferrers, at $1,600 each; two engravers or transferrers, at $1,500 each; one engraver's apprentice, at $900; one engraver's apprentice, at $600; one prover, at $1,500; one plate-cleaner, at $1,200; one plate-cleaner, at $1,000; three plate-cleaners, at $900 each; one experienced pressman, at $1,200; three pressmen, at $1,000 each; one pressman's apprentice, at $600; four binders, at $1,000 each; one binder's apprentice, at $800; sixty female operatives, at $600 each; seventy female operatives, at $540 each; thirty-six female operatives, at $480 each; six helpers, at $900 each; ten helpers, at $780 each; ten helpers, at $720 each; twenty helpers, at $600 each; twelve helpers, at $540 each; forty helpers, at $480 each; twenty-eight helpers, at $320 each; nineteen helpers, at $240 each; in all, $327,740.

Mr. RANDALL. I make a point of order on that amendment. My point is that it changes all past laws in connection with this bureau. It takes from those in charge of the bureau the authority they have heretofore had to appoint without restraint.

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the point of order I will say that my amendment is a precise copy of the estimate submitted by the Treasury Department which I hold in my hand, and the aggregate is precisely the same as the paragraph in the bill. The distinction is that if this substitute be held in order and adopted it will specify the exact force that the appropriation now contained in the paragraph is intended to cover. There is now no law that details the force in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, but there is a law authorizing the establishment of the bureau; and under the law authorizing the establishment of that bureau and the printing of these notes it is competent for the Treasury Department to submit estimates and for Congress to appropriate for such force as it sees proper. This is the machinery necessary to carry out the law.

Mr. RANDALL. The very estimate submitted by the gentleman proposes a change of law.

Mr. CANNON. Not at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will of course be admitted that the estimates are not law in any proper sense. In the next place the Chair is aware of the fact that the appropriations for this bureau have always been in bulk, while this amendment proposes a classification entirely unknown to the statute. I submit that this is legislation.

Mr. CANNON. One word further. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that this amendment places these employés under the civil-service law. So far as the letter of the amendment is concerned I deny it. It will be in the power of the President to make regulations, if he chooses, which would place them under the law. Further, I will say frankly, as I understand it, the Secretary of the Treasury, if this estimate is given as he asks that it be given, will apply the civil-service rules.

Mr. RANDALL. That very statement shows that this is a change of law.

Mr. CANNON. Not at all. It is a mere expression of his intention.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is undoubtedly the purpose.

Mr. CANNON. He may or he may not do it.

Mr. RANDALL. But he states his purpose to do so; and he has no such power now; a change of law is necessary to give him the power.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. HOLMAN. The classification of a body of officers is certainly legislation; there is no question about that.

Mr. CANNON. Not at all. I know that the civil-service law, which the gentleman voted for along with his party when they had not the control of the administration, hurts; but why not repeal the law instead of coming in here and making your points of order to avoid the law?

Mr. RANDALL. I only desire to say for one that I will not vote to put any additional officials under the civil service who are not now there so long as the age restriction exists.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For wages of not more than one hundred and fifty plate-printers, at piece-rates, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of not more than one hundred and seventy printers' assistants, at $1.25 a day each when employed, and for royalty for use of steam plate-printing machines, $258,446, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That any part of this sum may be used for purchasing and operating new and improved plate-printing presses.

Mr. RANDALL. It is due to the committee to say that the proviso is in the nature of a charge or limitation upon the amount of money to be expended.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "one hundred and fifty," in line 280, and insert "two hundred." Strike out the words "one hundred and seventy," in line 283, and insert "two hundred and eighteen;" and strike out the words "two hundred and fifty-eight thousand four hundred and forty-six," in lines 286 and 287, and insert "three hundred and twenty-eight thousand three hundred and eighty."

Mr. CANNON. In explanation of this amendment I desire to say simply that it increases the number of plate-printers appropriated for by fifty, and is in conformity both as to number of employés and the amount of money appropriated with the estimates submitted by the Treasury Department, which estimates were cut down under the lead of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in the committee with a view to omitting the printing of the one and two dollar United States notes.

Now, if they are to be printed, which the committee has clearly indicated, then, under the original estimates of the Treasury Department, the increase must be made in this paragraph and a similar increase in the succeeding paragraph. It is therefore to carry out this purpose that I offer the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The estimated amount necessary for printing three million sheets of one and two dollar notes is about $108,000.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and if this amendment is adopted with the one already adopted and the one I shall offer to the next paragraph it will make exactly $108,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Of course these will go together.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing with reference to the proviso which has just been read.

Mr. CANNON. There is no objection to the proviso.

Mr. RANDALL. I know; but I would prefer to have this letter printed in connection with it to show the purpose in view.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING,
June 22, 1886.

SIR: I have received from you a statement, dated the 11th instant, signed by the members of the "legislative committee" of District Assembly No. 66 of the Knights of Labor, declaring that there is not in this bureau any improved machinery for printing United States securities that can do the work up to the standard of quality required of the plate-printers, and that all of the machinery that has been introduced is experimental, and asking you to have inserted in the appropriation bills a clause requiring all United States securities to be printed in the highest style of the art on hand-roller plate-printing presses.

The statement is herewith returned with the following information:

There are in operation in this bureau for the printing of revenue-stamps seven steam plate-printing presses, which have been in constant use for from five to eight years. One of these is of the "Homer Lee" pattern, and the other six of the "Milligan" pattern. In the Lee press the entire work of plate-printing is done mechanically; in the Milligan press the final polishing of the steel plate is done by hand in the same manner as on the hand-roller presses. The Lee press is used for some of the lower grades of work, such as the two-ounce tobacco stamps, and although the printing has not the fullness of color or the artistic quality required for the higher grades, it is perfectly satisfactory for the purpose to which it is applied. Being very uniform and having a character of its own, its work is believed to be quite as difficult to counterfeit as the product of the hand-presses.

All of the two-ounce and four-ounce internal-revenue tobacco stamps required, except those printed on the "Lee" press, have for some years past been printed on the "Milligan" presses in a manner entirely satisfactory to the experts in engraving and printing of this bureau and to the officers of the Internal Revenue Bureau. There are numerous other classes of work which could be executed with equal advantage on these presses, and arrangements have accordingly been made for the introduction of six more of them. The final polishing of the plate, which is the chief point where the skill of the printer comes into play in the hand-presses, being done by hand on these presses by an experienced plate-printer, the result is substantially the same as that of the hand-presses, except for the highest grades of work. The work executed by good printers on these presses is fully equal to the average of work of the same classes produced by the hand-presses, and is superior to the work of the poorer hand-printers.

The annual saving in the cost of plate-printing effected by the seven steam-power presses now in use is about $31,000; the saving which will be effected by the six presses about to be introduced is estimated at $21,000; making a total annual saving by the use of steam plate-printing presses of $52,000. The estimate of the cost of plate-printing for the next fiscal year was made on the assumption that these thirteen presses would be used. Should their use be prohibited the appropriation for plate-printing should be increased $52,000, making the amount $310,446, instead of $258,446, as provided in the sundry civil appropriation bill, page 12.

Very respectfully,

E. O. GRAVES, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, United States.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CANNON, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 71.

Mr. CANNON. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. CANNON and Mr. RANDALL were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 90.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I now move to amend in line 280 by striking out "one hundred and fifty" and inserting "one hundred and ninety-nine." Strike out in line 283 "one hundred and seventy" and insert "two hundred and seventeen;" and in line 286 strike out "two hundred and fifty-eight," after the word "machines," and insert "two hundred and twenty-seven."

The CHAIRMAN. Is not that the same amendment just voted down?

Mr. CANNON. No, sir; not exactly. It is one less employé and a thousand dollars less money, and upon that I desire to be heard.

The amendment I now offer is substantially the same as that just voted down, and I believe under a misapprehension, some gentlemen thinking that there was money enough to do this printing of one and two dollar notes. The Secretary of the Treasury, after reporting great economy in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, then makes an estimate for the printing of the ones and twos and the other securities of the United States. Now my amendment gives a little less than the estimate so submitted. Now one of two things is certain: either the Committee of the Whole a few moments ago meant nothing when, under the lead of the gentleman from Iowa, they resolved in favor of one and two dollar bills, or they were mistaken in voting down the amendment which gives the amount necessary to do the work; and without the amendment the ones and twos can not and will not be printed.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Do they not have the same force to print the large as the small bills?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. But this is already cut down between one and two hundred thousand dollars from the appropriations for the current year. It is down to bed-rock, and the ones and twos can not be printed unless you give this increase.

Mr. BRUMM. In other words, it requires more printing to print the same volume in small than in large denominations, requiring more work?

Mr. CANNON. Well, it takes one hundred and fifty plate-printers to do the printing the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] wants to have done of the large securities. After that force is organized, then fifty more added to them can print the other 3,000,000 sheets of small notes required. This additional force can then do as much printing, after the force is organized, as the one hundred and fifty which the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes.

Mr. BRUMM. There is no gentleman on the floor of this House who does not know there is a general clamor all over this country for small notes. There is not a gentleman on the floor of this House who does not know that there can be no relief for the people by this Congress in their demand for these small notes either by issuing silver certificates, gold certificates, paying out silver dollars, or in any other way except by the amendment offered by my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] and adopted. It can not be done otherwise, because, as stated by my friend, there is a seemingly antagonistic Senate, a positively antagonistic Treasury, a surely antagonistic Executive; and if the sentiment of this House is to be taken on the silver vote, just as positively an antagonistic House. Therefore you can give no relief in any other way except by issuing or authorizing the Treasury to issue the one and two dollar greenbacks.

Now, then, one word to the silver-men. What is all this hubbub about? Why, sir, the outside limit under this amendment, i. e., the maximum, is only $60,000,000, while the probable amount will only be about thirty millions. And I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] whether your silver dollar is so weak, whether your silver question is so small, whether your principles are so shallow that you are afraid that the mere matter of $60,000,000 maximum or thirty millions minimum will sink you out of existence? Why, sir, it is a small matter.

Mr. BLAND rose.

Mr. BRUMM. I decline to be interrupted unless I can have my time extended. It is a small matter of only $60,000,000 at most. Yet the father of the silver dollar is frightened at it, and says we Greenbackers are joining with the goldites to sink your silver god.

The gentleman from Missouri says he is as good a Greenbacker as my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER]. I say that he does not understand the greenback question when he says that. I remember distinctly that he said he was in favor of a Treasury note, a national Treasury note, not a legal tender; and that is his idea of a greenback; and he is only a Greenbacker to the extent of favoring a national Treasury note not a legal tender, and then only provided it does not interfere with his one idea of the Bland silver dollar.

Now, is it true that we are joining with the goldites? If it is the goldites that want the one and two dollar greenbacks, why is it that your gold Treasury, your gold Executive does not issue the one and two dollar greenbacks as they have authority to do now under existing laws? Why, sir, they say they will not do it, and they will not do it because they are the goldites per se of this country. And you, sir, are standing by the Treasury and by the administration when you say you indorse them in not issuing these one and two dollar greenbacks.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAND. I desire to say just a word.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to make some arrangement as to time. I propose the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] shall have five minutes in reply and that then the debate be closed on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent after the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] shall have occupied five minutes that the debate shall be closed. Is there objection?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois and may desire to say something in support of it.

Mr. RANDALL. This proposition does not interfere with any further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the proposition just submitted.

Mr. BLAND. I understand line 295 has not been reached.

Mr. RANDALL. It has not.

Mr. BLAND. Just a word in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM]. I do not propose to be put in a false position on this subject. I have stated over and over again that I contend for the position I hold here simply because if we do not issue these one and two dollar greenback bills the very demand the gentleman speaks of on the part of the country for one and two dollar bills will compel the issue of one and two dollar silver certificates on the coin in the Treasury which is now lying idle. It is to meet that demand that I ask gentlemen not to run after a mere abstraction and defeat a great public measure.

I understand full well, so far as the Treasury Department is concerned, and they have said so over and over again, that it is not any love for the greenback or the silver dollar either that has been the cause of their refusing to issue one and two dollar greenbacks. Not at all. I think they did this, as I said before, to force the silver dollar into circulation. That has been the result, and we have got thereby more money into circulation than we would otherwise have had. But that is for what purpose? With the idea that the bulk of the silver dollar would make it unpopular and there would be a demand for its suspension and doing away with it altogether. But that has proven a failure. Now let us take advantage of the hostility of the Treasury Department, if you please, to the silver dollar.

If that Department by adopting a certain policy toward silver has created a demand all over the country for one and two dollar bills, it is the duty of gentlemen here who seek to put more money into circulation to utilize the silver in the Treasury, and to take advantage of that occasion for issuing silver certificates. If I thought it would hurt the greenback circulation one dollar I would not advocate it, but gentlemen know that it will not hurt the greenback circulation. One and two dollar greenbacks are just as good in fives or tens or twenties. You do not increase the greenback circulation by putting out these one and two dollar bills; you do not do any good at all to the greenback circulation; but you do obviate a demand which would bring the silver certificates out into circulation if you did not issue these one and two dollar greenbacks to take its place.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But how can you get your silver certificates out without a law?

Mr. BLAND. The law will be passed unless you supply the demand in this way.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman says "Oh, no." The gentleman knows very well that there is a demand for one and two dollar bills, and a demand from a source hostile to silver circulation.

Mr. CUTCHEON. And this law provides for that demand.

Mr. BLAND. Oh, I understand that very well, and the gentleman from Michigan understands it. He understands that when you issue one and two dollar greenbacks that issue is really hostile to the silver certificates.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We do not propose to issue any more greenbacks than are now in circulation.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] knows very well that the Senate will never pass his bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RANDALL. I will ask the gentleman from West Virginia whether his amendment relates to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. It relates to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. RANDALL. Then it ought to be offered now.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is proceeding to vote.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. When the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asked for a vote it was under a misapprehension, and I understand that he now withdraws that demand in order that I may offer my amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I demand the regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. This is the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. I corrected myself as to the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I can bring in my amendment at the end of line 295, and I will ask to be recognized for that purpose when that paragraph is read.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. CANNON; and it was rejected—ayes 49, noes 70.

The Clerk read as follows:

For engravers', printers', and other materials, except distinctive paper, and for miscellaneous expenses, $130,240, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, to come in at the end of line 295.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, at the end of line 295, the following: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as subjecting these appointees to the civil-service rules.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order on that proviso.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to say to the gentleman offering the amendment that there is nothing in the paragraph now that does that.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I understand that, but I understand also that the officer in charge of the department claims that these appointments are subjected to the civil-service rules.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order that that proviso is not in order upon this bill, for the reason that it changes existing law.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I desire to be heard on that point of order. In answer to the point made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] I desire to state that by no construction of any existing law that I am aware of can this proviso be considered to be in conflict with it. There is no law which places the Bureau of Engraving and Printing under the civil-service rules. Further than that, there is no order in accordance with any existing law that I am aware of that places it under those rules.

The object of this amendment is to secure an expression of Congress guiding and directing an officer who arbitrarily undertakes, and, as we think, by a subterfuge, to run his department for party purposes, and who has been so determined to run it in that way that even when he has been compelled for want of funds or for want of work to dispense with employés who were put there under a former régimé of different politics, he absolutely refused either to dismiss those employés or to place them on furlough, so that if the time should come when there would be an increase of force these same persons who had been put there under the control of a different political party should be called again to their positions; thus by his own arbitrary action not only assuming to put his department under rules which do not apply to it, but in that way absolutely excluding from appointment any new employés. Now, I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to point me to any provision of law or any regulation adopted under the civil-service law which places this bureau under civil-service rules.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON], in discussing the point of order, has seen proper to discuss the merits of this amendment. It is necessary, in order that I should make myself clearly understood, that I should state what I believe to be the facts touching this bureau. I read from the estimates transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury the following:

From these figures it appears that it is proposed to execute in 1887, at a cost of $815,390, an amount of work which would have cost $940,888.70 at the rates which prevailed in 1885. The reduction or saving is therefore $125,498.70, which sum accurately represents the result of the economies which have recently been instituted in the bureau, and which have caused the reduction in the estimates for 1887.

Now what are the facts touching this bureau and the law which controls it? From the time it was organized under the lead of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]—because this Printing and Engraving Bureau is his child—up to this time it has been claimed that this bureau, at the beck and nod of either party, has been the dumping-ground, if you please, for persons who could not be gotten into employment anywhere else under this Government.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know whether you allude to me as having anything to do with this. I had nothing to do with it.

Mr. CANNON. I said, from the time the Printing and Engraving Bureau was authorized and organized originally under your lead, because you are responsible more than anybody else for the creation of that bureau——

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think I am.

Mr. CANNON. I recollect very well the debate at that time; I recollect on what bill the provision for the creation of this bureau went through. But that is merely incidental. I say it is claimed that in years past members of all parties have gone to that bureau and obtained employment for people, not with the view so much for the benefit of the public service as to the placing of people in employment.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Is it not a fact that there is a new "reformer" at the head of that bureau?

Mr. CANNON. I have no authority to speak personally concerning the head of that bureau; but it is a fact that the Committee on Appropriations state in the report accompanying this bill that there is a great saving in that bureau—a saving to the amount of $125,000 per annum.

Now, the gentleman from West Virginia complains that somebody in that bureau refuses to make appointments and removals as they are wanted. I judge from the tenor of his remarks—and certainly it is the logical result—that if he can have his way we are to have the old order of things in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Oh, no.

Mr. CANNON. If you are to have the old order of things there, so be it. Take the responsibility for it, and have it so. But I am not going to sit silently by here and see you, in this report upon the sundry civil bill and in these appropriations, claim virtue for your administration in these reforms, and at the same time revile public officers for the very thing for which you claim credit, and undertake to break down the very principle by which these economies have been wrought.

For this reason I have made the point of order. The gentleman from West Virginia says his proposition does not change existing law. If it does not, it is at any rate new legislation, and in either event it is subject to the point of order under Rule XXI.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I made no attack upon the economic administration of this bureau. The gentleman from Illinois charges me with wanting to restore the old state of affairs. I say to him frankly that I want to break down that old state of affairs, which was the employment of Republicans and the political ostracism of Democrats.

Mr. CANNON. It is claimed that employés are appointed there without reference to party, and only with reference to their ability as plate-printers, engravers, &c.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I want to turn the Republicans out and give the Democrats a chance for employment. I express myself openly on this question, and I want to give that expression by legislation here.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Are the two wings of the party united on that? [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this is a mere question of public policy for this Congress to consider. I challenge any member of the House to show me any law authorizing the application of civil-service rules to appointments in that bureau. In violation of the law, the officer now in charge of that bureau claims that appointments made there are subject to the civil-service rules. I repeat, so determined is he that the old appointees shall remain and no new employés be appointed that under this claim that the bureau is subject to civil-service rules, he has refused to discharge even those for whom he has neither employment nor pay, but keeps them upon a suspended list, to be returned to employment and pay whenever the opportunity may arise. And if this additional force the gentleman from Illinois seeks to put upon this bill is granted, these same persons who have been there all this time, who he says were put there for base purposes and not for the public good, will be restored to their positions.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope now we will have a decision and proceed with public business.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to speak to the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to know whether the civil-service rules apply to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. It is not advised as to that fact.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I am not surprised to hear the attack made on the present administration.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But he is not a Democrat.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Who?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Why, Mr. Graves, the head of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Turn him out then and put another in.

Mr. CUTCHEON. He is a Cleveland Republican.

Mr. REED, of Maine. You put him in, and so long as you retain him you are responsible for him.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, President Cleveland, when he came into office, found at the head of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing Mr. Burrill, who was considered to be a Republican, an offensive partisan. Mr. Burrill was removed and Mr. Graves put in, as the gentleman well knows, by Mr. Cleveland, after he had been at the head of a division of the Treasury Department for some months.

Mr. RANDALL. That has nothing to do with the point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I am coming to the point of order, as the gentleman will discover.

Mr. REED, of Maine. This is a matter of inducement.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes; as a matter of inducement. It was a matter well known to the President, who placed Mr. Graves at the head of this Bureau of Engraving and Printing because he was not an offensive partisan. I say, therefore, I am suprised at this attack made by the gentleman from West Virginia on the administration.

I am surprised for another reason, and this is a further inducement, I may say, on the point of order, that in 1884 the great Democratic party of New York went to the people on the subject of civil-service reform, and because they claimed to be par excellence civil-service reformers they captured the so-called Mugwumps and succeeded in electing Mr. Cleveland to the Presidency. His title to the Presidency to-day rests upon the civil-service-reform vote of the State of New York; for if it had not been for the Mugwump support and the Mugwump votes he would not be where he is to-day.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. You are entirely misinformed.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for a decision on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet been advised whether the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is under the rules of the Civil Service Reform Commission.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a decision.

The CHAIRMAN. As at present advised the point of order is sustained.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the Chair sustains the point of order of course further remark on my part is unnecessary.

Mr. RANDALL. You convinced him. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Is it not true that the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is under civil-service rules to-day.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I do not know.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is organized on that principle to-day.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. It has been assumed in this debate the civil-service rules have not been extended.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Under this administration of the Government they have been.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The rules as laid down by the Civil Service Commission do not apply to this bureau at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question which the Chair would like to have answered is whether the civil-service rules apply, or whether they have been extended over the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The officer in charge claims they do, and he has acted on the theory that the civil-service rules do apply to that bureau.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. They do not, in fact, apply at all to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. CUTCHEON. He has been acting on that theory, that the civil-service rules do apply to that bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet had an answer to his question as to whether the civil-service rules have been extended to this bureau or not.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that the rules as laid down by the commission, in pursuance of law, do not apply legally to the government of that bureau, but the officer in charge of it claims, and claims publicly, that they do control him in all his appointments. He has publicly stated he would make no appointments except under those rules.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you understand the Civil Service Commission, with the approval of the President, has extended the civil-service rules of that department?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I understand on the contrary that they have not been extended.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Has not the President of the United States recognized the civil-service rules as having been extended to that department, and has he not further recognized competitive examinations for appointments under that Bureau of Engraving and Printing?

The CHAIRMAN. He may have recognized competitive examinations, but the extension of the civil-service rules to that Bureau of Engraving and Printing by competent authority is another thing. If these civil-service rules have been extended by proper authority over that bureau at the present time, the Chair will overrule the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the point of order be decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, in order that the committee may know exactly what it is called to vote upon, I ask for the reading of the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia.

The amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] was read.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. In order that the committee may know what they are going to vote upon, I wish to state that I am informed that the rules of the civil service do not apply to that bureau, and Mr. Graves says so himself. I think I may say he has informed the committee they had extended the civil-service rules to that bureau.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I believe I have the floor. Now I do not desire to do Mr. Graves or anybody else injustice.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MILLS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested, joint resolution of the following title, namely:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 5) authorizing the payment of C. H. Mann, a messenger in the reporters' gallery; and, without amendment,

The joint resolution (H. Res. 57) to print an addition to a report on wages ordered to be printed January 17, 1884.

Also that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which concurrence was requested; namely:

A bill (S. 1042) to pay B. S. James for transporting the United States mails; and

A bill (S. 2719) to amend the laws relating to the inspection of steam-vessels.

The message further announced the passage of House concurrent resolutions as follows:

A resolution to print reports of consuls of the United States on cattle-breeding and dairy-farming; and

A concurrent resolution to print the report of the Commissioner of Education for the year 1884–'85.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives to the bill (H. R. 5866) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Knoxville, Tenn., and had appointed Mr. LOGAN, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. COCKRELL managers on the part of the Senate.

Also, that the Senate insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives to the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK managers on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I was on my feet to offer an amendment to line 295, after the word "Treasury." I think it would be more appropriate to come in there; and then the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia, as a proviso, could come in afterward. I would therefore ask consent to offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The section will be still open to amendment after the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia is disposed of.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am very frank to state that the object of this amendment is to give a chance to the administration, or party in power, to control to some extent the offices to be run by that party; and I want to proclaim for one that while I repudiate the doctrine that "to the victor belongs the spoils," because it is a vulgar way of putting a correct principle [laughter], I do claim that to the administration or the dominant party belongs the right to run that administration according to its own responsibility.

No sensible people ever sent out their armies to be officered by their enemies; no business man ever undertook to run his business under the control of his rival; and certainly no party can undertake intelligently to administer the affairs of any free government while those who seek to destroy it have power to repeal its laws.

I repeat, and want to say now distinctly in the hearing of the House, that the civil-service rules do not govern properly these appointments; and you will find that the man who is there in charge now, and the man who immediately preceded him, of his own arbitrary will has undertaken to apply these rules to cover appointments there, and has told Senators and Congressmen that the rules did apply and he could do nothing except under them. This is simply a construction of his own. He has himself undertaken to legislate notwithstanding the laws passed by Congress to exclude at least one-half of the respectable and intelligent people of this country from Government employment there.

I complain, Mr. Chairman, that this sort of arbitrary legislation by a majority, or by a party in power, is a literal deprivation of the rights of one portion of the people of this country to which they are entitled under the law making them eligible to office. If these rules do not apply, and this officer has undertaken to apply them, I insist that this Congress should express itself upon the subject in such a way that there can be no mistaking it in the future. If he is honest, and if he has made an error, then it can do no harm, for this casts no reflection upon him; but if he is dishonest and partisan, it curbs him in the execution of his partisan purposes. It is not an assertion that this officer has necessarily done what is wrong, nor that he is corrupt. I do not mean to say that he is corrupt. It may be that he is honest and straightforward as any man in the Government; but he has formed an opinion which in the opinion of Congress is contrary to the law, and has taken it to be his duty to extend the civil-service rules to appointments to be made by him. Now we are providing for this bureau. We create these offices by legislation. We are called to perform a public duty; and I claim it is the duty of Congress to express itself clearly and plainly upon the subject.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I had supposed that nothing would induce me to express one single sentiment or occupy a moment's time in this discussion; but I have heard it stated here as a sound principle over and over without apparent contradiction that to the victor belongs the spoils, and I challenge and deny that piratical sentiment.

It was not even the sentiment of the older and better Democracy. It was born of corruption. It begets corruption. It is itself corrupt. No citizen of this Union has a right to demand an appointment to office because he is a Democrat. No citizen of this Union has a right to demand an office because he is a Republican. He only has a right to demand it because he is an American citizen and because he is honest and competent. There is no other test.

As a politician, sir, I wish such unwise men as the gentleman from West Virginia, politically, should have the ascendency of that party. No party now in this country could live with such avowed principles. It may be considered proper on the mountain-tops and in sparsely settled districts, but it is not the popular doctrine, because it is a dangerous one to be held by any great party. There is no strength, but infinite mischief, in it.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Did not your party flourish under it for twenty-five years?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. It did, or in spite of it; but it went out because it continued to hold or practice that doctrine too long.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. How long was the Republican governor recently elected in Ohio in office before every Democrat was turned out and a Republican put in his place?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. It is not so to-day. Nor is it possible for these men to understand——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. How many Democrats are left?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. General Grosvenor is on the way here and will give my colleague the information he desires. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I prefer that the gentleman now on the floor should explain it himself.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I decline to be interrupted, as I have little time.

Mr. MCKINLEY. The Democrats that escaped across the Ohio River were out of the State at the time the governor was making appointments.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. They were the elected officers. The others stuck as long as they could.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I understand that I hold the floor, although it would seem I have not much to do with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio declines to be interrupted and will proceed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I was about to observe that no political party can grow or exist, whether it be the Republican or Democratic, that avows the political doctrine that "to the victors belong the spoils." Talk about this being a matter of strength. If there had been no patronage to be given and to be quarreled over the Republican party would have been in power to-day. It is a cause of weakness everywhere, and the more of it that you get the more you will be weakened.

Take it all. I hope, speaking as a party man, that you will turn out every office-holder that you can reach, and do it quickly. But at the same time do not understand that it would be either wisdom for you or safety to the country. When I speak as a patriot I deplore this anxiety that the politicians have to get at the flesh-pots of Egypt. I deplore it as having a tendency to bring home to us more corruption than encircles us now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is one thing to preach, another thing to practice. The Republicans preach well. They always have; but their practice has been very different from their preaching. Their practice recently in Ohio has been very different from the preaching of my colleague who has just taken his seat. The new governor had hardly got warm in his seat before a clean sweep was made in that State. So much for Republican consistency in Ohio.

While on the floor I desire to say for myself that I believe in civil-service reform.

The time has gone by, it must be conceded, when a "clean sweep" can take place in this country. What may have been possible or practicable in the time of Jackson, when there were few offices, and what may have been all well enough then, is no longer to be thought of with sixty millions of people and a hundred and twenty thousand office-holders. It is impracticable now to turn things over in that way with every change of party control of the Government; and when we shall have, as we will in a quarter of a century, nearly a hundred millions of people and two hundred thousand office-holders, it will be simply impossible to change all officers. Nor would it be desirable if it were possible. It could not operate otherwise than disastrously to the public service, in which the great mass of the people have a far greater interest than in who shall hold office. The political offices, the heads and chiefs, should change, in order that the policy of the party the people have put in power may be carried out without friction or retardation.

The political friends of the administration should fill all such places. But the merely clerical or ministerial offices are different. This division of the civil service ought to be made non-partisan and kept so. But it has not been so. It is not so now. And, Mr. Chairman, there never will be a state of rest in the civil service until a better state of equilibrium in these offices has been reached—a state in which the offices shall have become shared fairly between the parties. I am in favor—and I wish it could be put so in the law—of giving preference to Democrats in all appointments until they hold a fair share of the offices of the Government. We can reach a state of equilibrium in no other way, and there will be no peace until we do. That state, I maintain, can only be reached by a fair distribution of the offices, and we might as well say so and meet the issue, and the sooner the better. I am in favor, therefore, of Democrats being appointed to fill all offices until they have a fair share. There I am willing to rest, but not short of that.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a vote.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a minute. I desire to read for the benefit of gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber from the writings of a great man on the condition of the civil service in the country in 1876. I read from volume 2 of Tilden's Public Writings and Speeches [laughter on the Republican side], at page 490.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Was it sent as a message to this Congress last December? Is this in cipher?

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. No, it was not; and I know you have not read it, and it will do you a great deal of good to hear it read. You evidently anticipate some unpleasant reading, or your side of the House would not display such deep agitation.

In the canvass of 1876 the Federal Government embarked in the contest with unscrupulous activity. A member of the Cabinet was the head of a partisan committee. Agents stood at the doors of the pay-offices to exact contributions from official subordinates. The whole office-holding class were made to exhaust their power. Even the Army, for the first time, to the disgust of the soldiers and many of the officers, was moved about the country as an electioneering instrument. All this was done under the eye of the beneficiary of it, who was making the air vocal with professions of civil-service reform—to be begun after he had himself exhausted all the immoral advantages of civil-service abuses.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I would like to know if the original of that was in the ordinary letters of the alphabet or in cipher?

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. It is one of the unpublished ciphers that your committee did not publish but suppressed.

Mr. ROGERS. It was tattooed. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCOMAS. Oh, you are "too-too." [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Gentlemen, that is very refreshing reading for some of you. I commend it to your party leaders who have since turned civil-service reformers now that you are out. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to give the Chair the desired information as to whether these appointments come under the civil-service rules or not. I find that all those which are above $720 are embraced under the rules.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that debate now close upon this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars on all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury in payment of the appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures and obligations of the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the gentleman will not make any point of order, because the contest is to be made upon this bill as to whether we shall issue one and two dollar greenbacks or silver certificates. I understand full well that if this House decides to issue greenbacks that does away with the silver certificates, and we shall never hear any more of them. Therefore I want the contest made here and now.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STORM. I renew it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I desire to be heard. There is no point of order pending, as I understand it.

Mr. STORM. I withdraw the point of order, to save time.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on the amendment, and I hope no point of order will be made. I have only a word or two to say. I wish to say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] that no amendment has been adopted for the issue of one and two dollar greenbacks, but simply an amendment to preserve those that are now outstanding. That is all. And now, Mr. Chairman, I join hands with my brother from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], and am in favor of his amendment.

Mr. BLAND. Then let us have a vote.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend, in line 239, by striking out "$30,240" and inserting "$41,820."

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote.

Mr. CANNON. I believe I am entitled to the floor, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on this amendment?

Mr. CANNON. I believe I am entitled to the floor. This is the amount——

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that the other side should be taken.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I can not proceed if I am interrupted.

Mr. RANDALL. The negative vote was not taken.

The CHAIRMAN. It was. The Chair was waiting for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to ascertain whether he wished to take the floor. The Chair began stating the question, and then the gentleman said that he desired to take the floor.

Mr. CANNON. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] was adopted, as I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. And now you want to increase the amount, and that I do not desire done.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] appears to be always happy when he abounds in words. He may fill this bill with amendments, but they will amount to nothing unless he provides the means of carrying, enforcing them—the money to put the machinery in motion. He has got his amendment adopted authorizing, as I understand it, all the money appropriated by this bill to be paid out in one and two dollar silver certificates, and now he sits down happy. But where is the money to come from to print those certificates?

How are they to be gotten into circulation? I suppose these questions are of no importance to the gentleman from Missouri. He is ready to rest upon his laurels. I call his attention to this point so that he may offer another amendment. As near as I can estimate roughly it will cost to make the plates and provide the paper and do the engraving and employ the workmen to issue these certificates from $150,000 to $200,000, and unless the appropriation is made to do this work the gentleman's amendment will not be enforced.

Being of a somewhat practical turn I thought I would call attention to that matter. My amendment, however, has in view to increase this appropriation so as to provide for the printing of small bills. When I drew it I had in my mind one and two dollar greenbacks.

Speaking of these one and two dollar greenbacks, I wish to say a word upon that question, which I have not had an opportunity to discuss. Do gentlemen know what the policy of the Treasury Department and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is? I will tell you. Greenbacks are not taxable under the law; they are the only money of this country that is not taxable. Gold is taxable, silver is taxable, silver certificates are taxable. Now when you take from the millions of the people their one and two dollar greenbacks and have converted them into large bills, put them in the hands of capitalists at the money centers, they will lie in their coffers non-taxable at least to the amount of their reserve. So that you take from fifty millions of the people this portion of the money of the country and put it in the hands of a few, who to this extent escape taxation. You have declared in favor of the clause immediately preceding these two clauses of the bill, but when the proposition is before you to appropriate money for printing these one and two dollar notes so as to give the people the money that they want, the money that they plead for, you sit quiet and refuse to vote out of the Treasury the money necessary to print these one and two dollar greenbacks. If you do this I want the responsibility fixed upon the Democratic majority in this House. For this reason I wished, at the risk of straining the patience of the committee, to say what I have said on this question.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I have voted all the time to appropriate for printing these small notes.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] whether the appropriation under the head of engraving and printing does not cover this matter to which he has referred.

Mr. CANNON. No; there is no money appropriated to cover it—not a dollar, not a cent. All that we have in the bill to carry out the gentleman's amendment is a mere proclamation—a verbal declaration of intention, but no appropriation of money.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I understood that the appropriation for printing United States notes was adopted. If I was in error in that respect——

Mr. CANNON. The Committee of the Whole adopted the mere words, but refused the money for the printing; and so the proposition amounts to nothing as it now stands.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The amendment adopted on motion of the gentleman from Illinois increased the appropriation, as I understood.

Mr. CANNON. That applied only to one clause. The effective proposition in the second clause to increase the printing force and give the money necessary to carry out the provision was rejected. In other words, a great many men on the other side of the House when that question came up were content to rest on their laurels and did not support the proposition to appropriate the money for the issue of these small notes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. As I understand already we have increased the appropriation in this bill to a sufficient amount to cover the reissue of greenbacks, including one and two dollar notes; and it is only when these notes are mutilated that they are to be renewed.

As to the question between the one and two dollar greenbacks and the silver certificates of less than $10, I am in favor of both classes of currency. If the total volume of money be, for instance, a thousand millions, it does not make the least difference in the world whether fifty millions or one hundred millions be in the form of one and two dollar notes. Let that question be determined by the people themselves, the total volume of the currency remaining the same in either case. The danger is in having too much in very large denominations. Nor does it make the least difference in the world whether the greenbacks be of the smaller denominations and the silver certificates of the larger, or the greenbacks of the larger denominations and the silver certificates of the smaller. The arithmetic of the gentleman from Missouri in this respect I think is at fault. All I care for is to prevent contraction and keep the volume of the currency adequate to the demands of the business of the people, allowing them to determine in what denominations it shall circulate. That can be determined safely in no other way.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that sufficient money is appropriated in the bill to pay for the reprinting of all mutilated greenbacks that may come in.

Mr. RANDALL. There are about thirty-seven millions of one and two dollar greenbacks——

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. They are not all mutilated, however.

Mr. RANDALL. No, they are not all mutilated; and it is impossible for me to conjecture how much it will take to reprint those that are mutilated, or what amount will come in. I can, however, secure from the bureau an estimate on this subject.

Mr. CANNON. My friend from Pennsylvania will allow me to say that the estimate is all here. One hundred and eight thousand dollars is the estimate, if you provide for printing the small bills.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I do not know whether that estimate embraces only the reprinting of mutilated notes——

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Of course we do not reprint any others. Under the amendment which has been adopted the Department can not call in small notes which are not mutilated.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not exactly what was in contemplation by the bureau officer in making that estimate for $108,000.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No; it was intended to take them all in. But we have prohibited that. I think, therefore, we have provided enough in the bill; but I am not sure as to that, and I would not like any mistake on that point.

Mr. RANDALL. I will learn what is required in this respect, and so far as I am concerned I will see that in good faith the money is given in some way before the bill becomes a law if this paragraph should remain in it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is sufficient.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say that.

Mr. CANNON. I read from the Book of Estimates:

The Treasurer of the United States estimates that there will be required during the fiscal year 1887, 6,000,000 sheets of United States notes and certificates, if the printing of one and two dollar notes is resumed. In the absence of any legislation on the subject it is assumed that the issue of those denominations will be resumed, and the estimate is accordingly so made as to provide for the printing of 6,000,000 sheets.

Then follows in the same connection the estimate, which is $108,000 more than we have provided for.

Mr. RANDALL. This reprinting being confined to mutilated notes, whether you require three millions of sheets or whether you require a hundred thousand dollars, I propose to find out exactly whether it will or not. When that fact is ascertained the committee will see the money is given in this bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. BRUMM. To print these certificates?

Mr. RANDALL. For both.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his amendment?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; on that statement I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Expenses of light-vessels: For seamen's wages, rations, repairs, salaries, supplies, and incidental expenses of thirty light-ships, $200,000.

Mr. FINDLAY. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 316:

And also the sum of $60,000 for the construction of a light-ship with steam fog-signal to be located off the entrance of Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is there any law authorizing that appropriation?

Mr. FINDLAY. I am in position to answer that question satisfactorily, and I am obliged to the gentleman from Ohio for asking the question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the point of order be reserved.

Mr. FINDLAY. There can be no point of order raised against this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to going back.

Mr. FINDLAY. It is not going back.

Mr. RANDALL. And it is not germane to this paragraph.

Mr. FINDLAY. I am not going back.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not germane.

Mr. FINDLAY. It is perfectly germane.

Mr. RANDALL. This is for the maintenance of the Light-House Establishment, but if the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland were offered in the proper place and in the proper manner I should not object. The appropriations here are for the Light-House Establishment as in existence at the present time, and therefore this proposition for the construction of a light-ship is not germane.

Mr. FINDLAY. Why, sir, you can not expend anything for the repair, salaries, supplies, and incidental expenses of a light-ship unless you first have the light-ship.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes.

Mr. FINDLAY. The light-ships necessarily precede the expense of keeping up light-ships.

Mr. RANDALL. This is general in its character, and is for the purpose of maintaining the Light-House Establishment already in existence.

Mr. FINDLAY. Let us have this debate in order. Let all the objections you have to the amendment be suggested, and then I will answer them.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order this is not germane to the pending paragraph.

Mr. FINDLAY. I understand the objection of the distinguished chairman of the committee is that it is not germane to the paragraph, and that the foundation for that is this——

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. FINDLAY. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the point of order.

Mr. FINDLAY. Let the gentleman state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the point of order that this appropriation is not authorized by any particular law.

Mr. FINDLAY. It is authorized by law, and if you will wait you will hear me read the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. If you will produce the law, very well.

Mr. FINDLAY. You reserve your point of order. I told you there was a law, and I was in the act of reading the law when the distinguished chairman of the committee raised another point of order that it was not germane to the paragraph. I was answering the objection that this was not germane to the paragraph by reason of the fact that the paragraph made appropriation for expenditures relating to light-ships. Now, on the 22d of April last this act was passed:

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be constructed and established a first-class light-ship, with steam fog-signal, off the entrance of Chesapeake Bay, the cost of which shall not exceed $60,000: Provided, The construction of said light-ship shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder after advertisement, and that said light-ship shall be built in an American ship-yard.

That is the law to-day, and why the committee did not make appropriation to carry out this law I am not advised. To-day for the Delaware Bay there is not only one light-ship but two light-ships, and at the entrance of the Delaware Bay there is a buoy, a bell-buoy as they call it, and a very important range-light; and yet on comparison of the statistics I have had the time to collect in reference to the commerce of Chesapeake Bay the latter is vastly more important than that of the Delaware, not merely in itself, but also by reason of the tributaries that enter the Chesapeake. What have you to the Delaware? You have the single tributary, the Schuylkill. What have you above the entrance of this river into Delaware Bay? The two single ports of Chester and Wilmington. Now, to the Chesapeake Bay there is that great feeder the Potomac River; the other great feeder the Patapsco; farther down the bay you have the York and James Rivers, and on the Eastern Shore you have feeders also; and not only that, but here is the capital of the nation, you may say, at the entrance of the bay. Here is the great city of Baltimore; you have the Naval Academy at Annapolis; the cities of Norfolk, Richmond, Newport News, Hampton; all of these places are directly and vitally connected with the entrance of the bay. Why, we have expended already seven or eight millions of dollars in cleaning out our channels of the different tributaries that enter that bay, and about half a million more is necessary, all of them being dependent upon the entrance of the bay. Now, I need not go and can not go into all of the facts and figures which are before me; but right here I will say that this proposition to construct a light-ship came first in the shape of a recommendation from the Light-House Board.

Then there was a unanimous report of the Committee on Commerce of this House favorable on the bill, which passed the House without objection and passed the other House without objection and has become a law; and if I had an opportunity to state all of the facts connected with it I think gentlemen would agree with me in the proposition that there never was a clearer case made out before the House than this, nor could there be shown a greater necessity for any appropriation than the appropriation proposed here. It is a small amount, only $60,000. As far as the estimate is concerned the House has already passed upon it.

The House has said without objection that there is a vital necessity for such a light-ship and at such a cost, and the question is no longer upon us as far as the House is concerned, but all that we have to deal with is the point presented here, whether we shall or shall not appropriate the money.

I therefore, without going more into the details or into these facts or figures, do hope that there will not be objection made to the introduction of the amendment here; and I would particularly say to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania that the reason why the amendment was not offered to the bill at what he supposes to be the proper time and place was due to the fact of my absence from the House, under the leave of the House, at the time that portion of the bill was reached. I was absent from the House under leave, as I said before, discharging what I conceived to be an important duty elsewhere; but if I had been present the amendment would have been offered at the proper time and in the place the gentleman from Pennsylvania supposes to be the proper place.

But I do not wish to be understood as admitting that the amendment is not germane at this particular point. It simply provides for the construction of a light-ship, appropriates the money for that specific purpose, the authority for which already exists, and is offered in connection with that paragraph which provides for the maintenance of light-ships.

What is there that is impertinent or irrelevant in such an amendment at this point? The only ground assigned is that there is another part of the bill which refers to the appropriation of money for light-ships. I claim, though, Mr. Chairman, that because there is such another part of the bill it does not make this irrelevant or impertinent here, although the logical symmetry of the bill might have been better preserved if the amendment had been incorporated elsewhere. But in deciding the question I hold it is not one of verbiage, not a mere question of words, but the vital and essential point is whether or not it is in substance germane.

Now inasmuch as the particular paragraph concerning the expenditure of money upon light-ships is under consideration, an amendment which provides for the construction of a light-ship itself can not be irrelevant in substance, and, after all, the objection urged is that in the construction of a bill like the bill now pending, which is built up in paragraphs, there might have been possibly a structural propriety in introducing the amendment at another point; but as far as the substance of the amendment is concerned, the thing itself, it can come in here as well as at any other point. I submit the point of order to the decision of the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that so far as my recollection serves me there never was an estimate. There certainly never was an estimate as originally given to the committee for this light-ship. I have no opposition to offer to the proper lighting of the Chesapeake Bay; but I maintain that the point of order is well founded in this, that this is not germane to this paragraph of the bill. This paragraph of the bill has connection with the maintenance of the service and not with the construction of the light-ships. That would properly belong under the paragraph which has been passed, headed "light-houses, beacons, and fog-signals," &c. I dislike very much to take advantage of a member's absence, of course; and if the House is going to vote this in, if the point of order be overruled, I must insist that it should go at the end of the paragraph to which it properly belongs and be placed in its proper position in the bill. That can be done by unanimous consent if the House adopts the amendment.

Mr. FINDLAY. Of course if unanimous consent is given I have no objection where it comes in. It is a matter of no moment, and if that consent be given I will be obliged to the committee, and they may put it in where they please.

The CHAIRMAN. It would have been more proper to have been incorporated in some of the provisions on pages 7, 8, and 9; but inasmuch as the section under consideration relates to the Light-House Establishment, and as this is an expenditure involved in that connection, and inasmuch as this ship is provided for by law, and this section relates to the general subject, the Chair overrules the point of order and will submit the amendment to the committee.

The question being taken on Mr. FINDLAY'S amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. Now I ask that that amendment may go in at the right place.

Mr. FINDLAY. I have not the slightest objection to that.

Mr. RANDALL. It can follow line 193.

There being no objection, the amendment was inserted after line 193.

The Clerk commenced to read the first paragraph under the heading "Coast and Geodetic Survey."

Mr. RANDALL. We have now reached a point in the bill where a condition operates that was agreed upon when the general debate on the bill was allowed to be omitted. I then agreed that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] should control one hour of general debate, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] should control one hour—the one touching the scientific bureaus, the other touching the general provisions of the bill. I would like now to limit that debate to the two hours I have indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes that general debate on this paragraph shall be limited to two hours.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman from Alabama should not want an hour, and will be satisfied with half an hour, or if the gentleman from Kansas should not want more than thirty minutes, then I would propose a shorter time for general debate.

Mr. HERBERT. I would like to have a half hour on the Coast Survey, and then when we reach the provision for the Geological Survey to take thirty minutes upon that.

Mr. RANDALL. Would you not take it all now?

Mr. HERBERT. If agreeable to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the committee, I would prefer having half an hour on the one subject and half an hour on the other. I understand the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] desires to speak now.

Mr. RANDALL. How much time does the gentleman claim?

Mr. RYAN. I do not know how much time I shall occupy, probably less than an hour.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is it agreed that this debate be limited to the speeches of the two gentlemen who have been named? Is everybody else to be cut out from participating in general debate on these questions?

Mr. RANDALL. The committee will remember I secured an omission of general debate on certain conditions; and this was one of the conditions, that the gentleman from Kansas should have one hour and that the gentleman from Alabama should also have an hour to speak with regard to the scientific bureaus.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. My understanding of the arrangement was that the general debate on the scientific bureaus was not to be limited to one hour.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to speak?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not know that I do, but I want to hear the gentleman from Alabama on the Geological Survey, and then I may desire to speak. I do not care about the Coast and Geodetic Survey. As to the other, I may want to make some remarks; therefore I do not desire to limit debate on the Geological Survey.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not know that I desire to participate in the general debate. But it seems to me there should be room left thoroughly to explain these scientific bureaus and their operations.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing to allow the debate to extend to 5 o'clock, and will seek to have a vote by paragraphs to-morrow if private business should be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to close general debate at 5 o'clock.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to occupy a little time in reviewing some of the provisions of this bill. Perhaps before its consideration under the five-minute rule had been begun I ought to have done so. I shall, however, now endeavor to call the attention of the House to some conspicuous features of the bill. As has already been learned by the members of the House from the report, the bill carries about $5,000,000 less than the current law. This will be accounted for very largely, almost wholly, by the absence of provisions in this bill of matters which were completely provided for by the current law.

It will be observed from the report itself that among the items thus omitted from this bill but which appear in the current law will be found the provisions for the French and American Claims Commission, the survey of the boundary line between the United States and Mexico, provisions for the Pension building, the Hot Springs improvement, the Fort Brown military reservation, the military depot at Saint Paul, Minn., the Lafayette statue, the Utah penitentiary, the Montana penitentiary, the World's Industrial Exposition at New Orleans, and miscellaneous items amounting in the aggregate to over a million and a half of dollars.

It will also be observed that the current law carries appropriations for seventy-five buildings under the head of "Public Buildings." The current law appropriates for buildings $1,852,677 more than the pending bill. This grows chiefly out of the fact that the current law carries appropriations for seventy-five buildings, whereas the present bill carries appropriations for only thirty-six buildings. Thus you will discover there is $1,852,677 upon this item alone of difference between the current law and the pending bill.

Then allow me to call the attention of the House to the item of public printing. The pending bill carries $250,000 less for public printing than the current law. Now the appropriation for the public printing for the current year was wholly inadequate and a large deficiency occurred. There is little doubt, I think none whatever, that the deficiency under the provisions of this bill upon this item will reach the sum of $250,000 at least.

The current law carried an appropriation of $400,000 for artificial limbs, it being the fifth year, when provision had to be made under the law for that purpose. This bill carries for that object perhaps all that is necessary, but the amount is only $200,000, making a difference of $200,000.

For surveying the public lands the current law makes an appropriation of $300,000; the pending bill gives only $50,000. For collecting the revenues from the sales of public lands the difference between the appropriation in the current law and that in the pending bill is $50,000; that is to say, the pending bill carries $50,000 less than the current law for that expenditure. For quarantine service, what is known as the epidemic fund, this bill carries nothing, whereas the current law carries $300,000. These items go to make up very largely the difference between the volume of money appropriated by the current law and the amount carried by the pending bill.

Now, in regard to the public printing. As I have already stated, it seems to me that a deficiency is unavoidable unless the amount of this bill shall be increased. The total appropriation, including the deficiency already appropriated, for public printing for the current year is $2,481,500—$481,500 more than this bill provides. It is the judgment of the Public Printer, upon the closest estimate he has been able to make, that the cost of printing for the next fiscal year can not be less than $2,250,000.

I beg leave now to call the attention of the House to the appropriation to maintain the Federal courts of the country. In the first place, let me state that the amount appropriated in the pending bill is exactly the amount provided for in the current law for this object, but it must be borne in mind that for the last and the current fiscal years there are large deficiencies in this branch of the public service. The deficiency for last year was $330,000; the deficiency for the current year amounts to $355,000.

Now be it understood that expenditures in this branch of the service are simply created by the operation of law. The compensation for the attorneys, the compensation for the marshals, the compensation for the clerks, the compensation for jurors, the compensation for witnesses are all provided for by public law, and, whether we appropriate little or much, unless we stop the courts the expenditure will be the same. It is no economy, in my judgment, indeed it is scarcely patriotic, to make an insufficient appropriation for this item of the public service. It has been demonstrated that the courts can not be operated for less than $340,000 or $350,000 more than this bill carries. By reason of inadequate appropriations the courts of the country were closed during a portion of the last fiscal year. By reason of inadequate appropriations for the current fiscal year the courts all over the country have been greatly embarrassed and in some instances they have been closed.

The people are in favor of an economy that will meet only the just needs of the service, but they are not in favor of an economy that cripples the public service and closes the temples of justice.

For collecting the revenues from the sales of public lands the Commissioner of the General Land Office says that he needs $1,129,000 for the next fiscal year, but this bill gives him only $800,000.

Mr. HOPKINS. What excuse does the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations give for bringing in an appropriation which falls so far short of the amount required to run the courts of this country?

Mr. RYAN. The chairman of the committee can doubtless answer that for himself. I certainly can not state his reasons. The fees of the officers who collect the revenues from the sales of public lands are created by law, and must be provided for either in this bill or by a deficiency bill. The Commissioner of the General Land Office says that he must have to meet the demands of the next fiscal year for this service $329,000 more than is here given.

Already there has been much discussion upon the floor of this House regarding the printing of one and two dollar bills. It has been already determined by the House that ones and twos shall be printed and issued in lieu of mutilated currency of corresponding denominations. It has also been already provided by the House in this bill that one and two dollar silver certificates shall be issued. Now, the provisions of this bill leave out of consideration altogether the expenditure for printing ones and twos in exchange for mutilated currency of corresponding denominations.

It does not take into consideration at all the cost of printing the one dollar and two dollar silver certificates. For the distinctive paper needed for printing in the neighborhood of eighteen millions of ones and twos to replace mutilated notes the Department asks for $22,446. This is not provided for here at all. The cost of labor for printing these notes, which will be a considerable sum, is not provided for in this bill. The cost of printing the one and two dollar silver certificates will largely exceed the cost of printing the one and two dollar notes to be issued in exchange for mutilated currency, and no provision is here made to meet it.

The item in the bill making provision for the repairs of furniture for public buildings carries but $150,000, whereas the Secretary of the Treasury says that he needs $300,000 for that purpose. Lest there might be some misapprehension about it, lest there might not have been sufficient care taken in preparing the estimates for this item, I went personally to see Mr. Smith, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and asked him to make a revised estimate for this expenditure upon the lowest possible basis.

In reply he says that it will cost for the new buildings alone which must be furnished during the next fiscal year $222,000; and he specifies the public buildings, twenty-two in all. Then he says that if the public building at Baltimore shall be completed this year, as probably it will be, it also will have to be furnished during the next fiscal year at a cost of $30,000 additional, making necessary for this service an appropriation of $252,000. So that there will necessarily be a deficiency for this service of at least $100,000.

Mr. CANNON. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the majority of the Committee on Appropriations, now that these public buildings are constructed, propose to let them stand idle rather than vote $100,000 or $150,000 to furnish them?

Mr. RYAN. The appropriation in the bill for furnishing these new buildings and for furnishing the old buildings where furnishing may be necessary, and for making all repairs of furniture, is but $150,000. The Secretary of the Treasury says that at least $100,000 more will be absolutely necessary for this purpose. Here is an itemized list giving the amount required for each building; and although I have not time to read it, an inspection of it will show that the estimates are really very modest.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether that information was furnished to the committee when the bill was being prepared?

Mr. RYAN. They had the estimates before them of $300,000 for this object.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then do the majority of the committee give an excuse for bringing in the bill with such a deficiency?

Mr. RYAN. It is fair to say that the expenditures for the current year will be much less; but that is because there were fewer buildings to furnish—because the occasion for the expenditure did not exist.

Now, I want to call attention to the appropriation for public-land surveys. The Commissioner of the General Land Office tells us that he needs $250,000 for that purpose. I submit that under all the circumstances this is a very modest estimate for the survey of the public lands. Now, this bill carries an appropriation of only $50,000 for that purpose. And here is an illustration of extravagant economy: To hire others to expend that $50,000, not to do the work themselves, but to hire others to do the work involving the expenditure of that $50,000, we provide fourteen surveyors-general, with several clerks for each, and office-rent for all of them at a cost of $130,000 per annum, not to do this work but simply to superintend it, simply to let the contracts, simply to get others to do it.

I undertake to say that there is not a business man in the world who, if he should attempt to pay out $130,000 to compensate agents to hire others to perform $50,000 worth of work, would not be regarded not only as unfit to transact any business under heaven, but as a fit subject to be taken before a commission of lunacy.

Yet I want to say that although we appropriated $300,000 to survey the public lands of the country for the current year, I am informed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office that he has as yet expended but $84,000 of that sum, and all this since the 1st day of January last. Up to that time, with all this expensive machinery existing, he had not expended a dollar of that money for the surveys of the public lands, and I think only about $9,000 of it for the inspection of some surveys that had already been made. Either we should survey the public lands or we should abolish this expensive machinery which is maintained for no other purpose than for the survey of the public lands.

Mr. CANNON. Would not that put out of office a number of people now holding positions under the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. RYAN. Yes, sir; it would put a goodly number out of office.

Mr. CANNON. How would that suit the majority in this House?

Mr. RYAN. So much for the items in the bill to which I have already referred. I do not myself observe any of those evidences of economy in the public expenditures which we were so vociferously promised by this administration. The total expenditures for 1884, including everything, were $338,141,034.10. The total expenditures for 1885, including everything, were $355,877,205.75. For the current year the expenditures will be $341,468,931.78.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Does that include the river and harbor bill?

Mr. RYAN. I was about to come to that. If you will take from the expenditures for 1885 the river and harbor expenditures, because there were none for the present year, we shall have only $450,073.97 expended in the current year less than in the last year; so that practically there is no diminution in the expenditures thus far.

For the next fiscal year the expenditures will not be less than $390,000,000. I do not think they can be one dollar less. And I base my judgment upon the following statement: The amount of the regular annual appropriations made up to June 2, and proposed by the regular appropriation bills as they have been acted on by Congress, not including the regular deficiency or the fortification bills, is $251,124,140.36. Now add the deficiency estimates. I do not know what the amount of the bill will be, but it will approximate I presume to this amount, $6,529,053.82; take the fortification expenditures of the last year as a measure of what they will be this year, and we must add for fortifications $725,000; then add the amount necessary for refunding duties under the Oberteuffer decision, $5,000,000; add also the amount necessary to complete and arm the new cruisers authorized by the act of March 3, 1885, and to give the full amount estimated for the pay of the Navy for 1887, $3,000,000; then add the judgments against the United States in favor of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, $906,314.42, which I suppose will be provided for before we adjourn; and finally add the permanent annual appropriations, including sinking fund and interest, $118,910,955, and we have a total of $386,195,468.60.

It is not unreasonable to suppose that will be increased by the Senate so as to bring the amount up to $390,000,000 in round numbers as the total expenditure for the next fiscal year. It will therefore be observed that the expenditures for the next fiscal year will exceed those of the current year by more than $33,500,000; and will exceed those of last year by over $34,000,000; and will exceed those of the fiscal year 1884 by $52,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have taken no account here of the cost of a new navy, so imperatively demanded for national defense.

No account is here taken of the cost of coast defense, without which our great centers of commerce on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and on the great lakes are an easy prey to the naval forces of other nations.

No account is here taken of the educational bill which has passed the Senate and for which there is an apparent majority in this body.

No account is here taken of the bill to remove the limitation from the arrears-of-pension law.

No account is here taken of the Mexican pension bill, which has already passed this House and will pass the Senate in a few days.

No account is here taken of the several bills which have passed the Senate and are pending in the House providing increased pensions for Union soldiers who lost an arm or leg in the service; pensioning Union soldiers who were prisoners of war; pensioning Union soldiers incapable of labor and without other means of support.

These, Mr. Chairman, are all pressing upon us as imperative obligations.

Whether the revenues will be adequate to meet such expenditures in the next fiscal year can not now be definitely determined. That will largely depend on the degree of prosperity which may prevail. Should general business increase the revenues will correspondingly increase. Should there be general depression the revenues will diminish.

I can not affirm that any increase of taxation will be necessary. It is, however, reasonably certain that we can not reduce taxation unless we resort to the methods of Mr. Buchanan's administration for meeting the ordinary expenses of the Government—borrow the money. Such a policy would be offensive to the American people and hurtful to the credit of the Government.

If there must be increased taxation to meet the Government expenditures the scheme of taxation must be just to all. Any scheme of taxation which selects out from among the whole people a particular class exclusively to bear the burden of war obligations will be unjust. Any such scheme of taxation to pay pensions creates a powerful interest against the whole pension system, tending to destroy it altogether. Any scheme of taxation that in effect shifts the payment of the war obligations of the Government almost exclusively on one section of this country will be as odious as unpatriotic.

But, Mr. Chairman, what assurance are the people receiving from the administration itself that it is making even an honest effort to curtail the expenditures of the Government? Let us see!

The administration asks for $1,456,977.64 more for public buildings than is given in this bill.

It asks for $1,346,252 for light-houses, of which sum only $327,056 is provided in this bill.

It asks for the revenue-cutter service nearly half a million of dollars more than this bill provides. It asks for navy-yards and stations $4,598,337.41, of which this bill gives but $316,595.95.

For the service covered by this bill the administration asks Congress to appropriate $36,054,659. Of that sum this bill only gives $21,300,852.04.

The administration declares it ought to have $15,000,000 more for the service covered by this bill than is deemed necessary by the committee that reported it, and it is not improbable the House will agree mainly in the judgment of the committee. The administration, having presumably patriotically studied the needs of the public service for the last year and a half, asks Congress to grant $339,589,552.34 for expenditures in the second year of its power, and this does not include over $40,000,000 asked for by it in the miscellaneous estimates.

The House responds to that by declaring that more than $30,000,000 of that sum are not necessary for the public service for that year. In other phrase, the administration asks for more than $30,000,000 in excess of the amount the House determines to be necessary for the public service in the next fiscal year; and if we add the miscellaneous demands of the administration, the miscellaneous estimates, this sum will be increased to more than $70,000,000. I leave the administration to dispute with the House whether the one is wantonly wasteful touching the public expenditures or whether the other deliberately and unpatriotically refuses to vote the supplies indispensable to the just demands of the public service. [Applause.]

I will reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty-one minutes of his time remaining.

The Clerk read as follows:

Coast and Geodetic Survey:

For every expenditure requisite for and incident to the survey of the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts of the United States, including the survey of rivers to the head of tide water or ship navigation; deep-sea soundings, temperature and current observations along the coasts and throughout the Gulf Stream and Japan Stream flowing off the said coasts; tidal observations; the necessary resurveys; the preparation of the Coast Pilot; a magnetic map of North America; and including compensation not otherwise appropriated for of persons employed on the field-work, in conformity with the regulations for the government of the Coast and Geodetic Survey adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury; for special examinations that may be required by the Light-House Board or other proper authority; and including traveling expenses of officers and men of the Navy on duty; for actual subsistence to officers of the field force while on field duty, at not exceeding $2 per day each; outfit, equipment, and care of vessels used in the survey, and also the repairs and maintenance of the complement of vessels, to be expended under the following heads: Provided, That no advance of money to chiefs of field parties under this appropriation shall be made unless to a commissioned officer or to a civilian officer who shall give bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct.

Mr. HERBERT rose.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry. It is, What is included now in the term "Geodetic Survey?"

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman, having made the inquiry, which perhaps he will answer in the course of his remarks.

Mr. HERBERT addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] proposes that general debate shall close at 5 o'clock.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If that be so I do not care to occupy the time.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman from Kentucky does not want to speak to-night I am willing to accommodate him by yielding to him in the morning.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. There may be some gentleman who desires to occupy the time now with regard to the Coast Survey.

Mr. GLOVER. I desire to occupy five minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I have found it very easy, and I fancy most men do, to make a strong argument if you may assume at pleasure the facts upon which that argument is based. A very strong presentation was made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] of the relative cost of the triangulation, the topography, the hydrography, and the miscellaneous expenses. As I understood him, that showing was very much to the disadvantage of those who had been engaged in the detailed attention to the topography. In quoting Professor Hilgard, the gentleman from Alabama neglected to say that the professor expressly stated that the estimate of two-tenths, three-tenths, and four-tenths did not include the cost of publication and indeed, did not include the money drawn in salaries of officers and men in the Navy.

It is necessary, therefore, to reform his figures upon that proposition. He referred only to that portion of the Coast Survey appropriation called "party expenses." If the naval appropriation is added, the total "party expenses" will show a proportion of about one-tenth for triangulation, two-tenths for topography, six-tenths for hydrography, and one-tenth miscellaneous. These figures do not include the cost of supervision or calculation.

Mr. HERBERT. I expressly stated that the calculation made by Mr. Wheeler included the naval expenses, and that eliminating that item there were twenty millions expended; and upon that basis I made the estimate.

Mr. GLOVER. So much for that, Mr. Chairman. Now, when a map is made which is simply intended to aid the sailor, to enable him to sail from headland to headland, it is, of course, right to omit the details of the topography; but I think I can show that the Hydrographic Bureau as well as the Coast Survey makes two kinds of maps, and, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] has compared the maps of the two bureaus with each other to the disadvantage of the Coast Survey on account of the great amount of topography shown in its maps, I desire to refer him to three maps made in part by the Hydrographic Office and in part by the Coast Survey. I have not supposed that the Ozark Mountains, in the State of Missouri, were a marine landmark, but in this map published by the Hydrographic Bureau in 1885—not belonging to a system of maps that had fallen into "innocuous desuetude," but to the latest series—I find a topographic chart showing the course of all the small rivers and showing (in part 2) in the State of Missouri a very pretty sketch of the Ozark Mountains.

This, I say, is the work of the Hydrographic Bureau. Now, it is perfectly apparent that when the Coast Survey came to deal with the harbor of New York, the greatest harbor in this country and possibly in the world, they ought to have gone into a great many more details than they would in dealing with harbors of minor importance; and, therefore, it is hardly fair to put that forward as a specimen of their average work. But I wish now to call attention to this map of the harbor of Corinto. I find there are some gentlemen on this floor who do not know anything about this harbor; one gentleman suggested that it was on the coast of Florida; but I find that it is on the west coast of Central America. Upon this map of that harbor I find a very pretty sketch of some town lots; I find the custom-house located, and the consulate, and the course of a line of railroad. I think, Mr. Chairman, that this minuteness has less justification than that which the gentleman has found in the maps of the Coast Survey.

Mr. HERBERT. And you find me condemning that kind of work wherever it was done.

Mr. GLOVER. I have found the gentleman speaking with commendation of the course of the Hydrographic Office in this respect in comparison with that of the Coast Survey. Now, this is a hydrographic map, published in May, 1885, and I wish to say, in conclusion, that if these maps are so long in reaching the public as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] states, it is somewhat curious that I have selected, at haphazard, these maps, two of which are dated in 1885 and one in 1886.

As has been well stated, where an object is above the line of the water so as to be within the range of vision from the sea it must necessarily be put upon the map, and no additional expense is incurred by putting in intermediate objects, be they large or small, which must necessarily aid in locating the main object. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not prepared this subject, and I do not desire to detain the House longer. I have noted a serious discrepancy in the figures of the gentleman from Alabama and a very unfair comparison between these two systems of maps, and that is all I desire to call the attention of the House to at present.

Mr. RANDALL. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, when I asked the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] as to whether it could possibly be that the Coast Survey had been engaged in resurveying the coast of Long Island, for instance, solely for the purpose of making corrections in the artificial topography of the land there, I stated that I was very much surprised to learn, according to the answer of my friend from Alabama, that Professor Hilgard had based the resurvey, apparently, solely upon that ground. The citation to show that he had done so was this: "The country is building up on the shores of Long Island, for instance, so that you would not recognize the shores from the old landmarks."

That citation is given in the minority report as assigning the reason for the resurvey of the coast of the island. Now, I had supposed that in any given case where a resurvey was made it would be clearly justified by some change in the coast line or in the submarine formation.

Mr. HERBERT. I did not give that citation in the minority report. I stated it on the floor. I cited that from a printed article, not from the report.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now I find the fact to be that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY] asked this question:

Q. You have spoken of the coast survey on the Atlantic as being completed in four years and of the Pacific in nine years?

A. Yes, sir. I say expressly the work in the field will take at least so many years.

Q. What is the fact as to whether, on the completion of the service, there will not have to be continuous surveys?

A. I consider it will be necessary to have about five hydrographic and five shore parties, or perhaps four hydrographic parties and four shore parties at work continuously, keeping up the coast maps, coast pilots, &c., between the eastern boundary and the Rio Grande on the Gulf coast. That I consider as necessary for the maintenance of aids to navigation, such as light-houses and buoys, and on account of the charts of the coast and sailing directions gradually becoming obsolete, simply by the changes that take place, very largely artificial, in the harbors and most important channels. In our harbors the action of the sea, throwing up sand, and the counter action of land waters, carrying down silt, cause notable changes in the channels, and it is necessary to keep constant watch on important places like New York, Boston, Philadelphia, &c. In New York, indeed, the custom has been to make an examination every year of some part of the harbor. During the summer we have a vessel there, and continually correct the chart of New York entrance. That is a barred harbor, entirely dependent upon the balance of forces between the action of the sea throwing up the sands and the ebb-tide scouring channels through it.

I cite this simply to show that, as I supposed, the Coast Survey base their action in making resurveys upon the necessity of new soundings and of realigning the coast on account of changes which nature is constantly carrying on along our coast.

Mr. HERBERT. Does not the gentleman remember that I condemned them for not making those new soundings and resurveys often enough; that I said they ought to have resurveyed, for instance, Nantucket Shoals; that instead of spending money in this way where it ought to have been spent in resoundings, they were doing this expensive and extravagant topographical work on the shore, where it is of no use? Does not the gentleman recollect that is the exact point I made?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understood the gentleman to make such an observation in the early part of his remarks, but I got the impression that in reply to my direct question he intimated that the costly resurvey of Long Island was being carried on for the purpose of realigning fences and peach orchards.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask general consent that the debate on the Coast and Geodetic Survey be closed.

Mr. LOWRY. I hope that will not be done. I understood the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] desired to address the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the gentleman from Kentucky waives any request of that kind.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. As I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania desired to close this debate this afternoon, I decided not to detain the committee with any remarks on this subject.

Mr. LOWRY. I understood the gentleman from Kentucky expected to address the committee to-morrow morning. I had concluded that I would ask for a few minutes to allude to the attitude of the joint commission upon the subject referred to by the gentleman from Alabama, not for the purpose of entering into any controversy in regard to this appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood the gentleman to say that he wanted no more than ten minutes; if so, he might go on now, or if he prefers to speak in the morning, I desire to accommodate him.

Mr. LOWRY. I prefer that.

Mr. RANDALL. As the gentleman says he prefers not to speak this evening, I modify my request so as to give the gentleman ten minutes in the morning. I want to be accommodating.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that general debate on the Coast and Geodetic Survey be closed after ten minutes shall have been occupied to-morrow. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. REAGAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Several messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 810) granting a pension to Charles J. Esty;

A bill (S. 856) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Dayton, Ohio;

A bill (S. 1133) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Hunter Hardie;

A bill (S. 1217) for the relief of Henry Bellion;

A bill (S. 1390) for the relief of B. Frank Patterson;

A bill (H. R. 1836) for the relief of Libbie C. Montis;

A bill (H. R. 2067) for the increase of pension to Zebulon S. Tompkins;

A bill (H. R. 5546) for the erection of a public building at Asheville, N. C.; and

A joint resolution (H. R. 185) for the printing of certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Joseph Rankin.

PURCHASE OF LAND NEAR SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I send to the desk the report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. 7183) to authorize the purchase of a certain tract of land near San Antonio, Tex., having met, after a full and free conference have agreed and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

B. M. CUTCHEON,
J. LAIRD,
DANIEL ERMENTROUT,
Managers on the part of the House.
F. M. COCKRELL,
O. D. CONGER,
BENJAMIN HARRISON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following statement accompanying the report was read:

The conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill 7183 make the following statement of the effect of the action of the conference:

It leaves H. R. 7183 precisely as passed by the House of Representatives, and adds thereto, by way of amendment as additional sections, Senate bill 753, which has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, precisely as recommended by the House committee.

B. M. CUTCHEON,
DANIEL ERMENTROUT,
J. LAIRD,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the Senate amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to sell the military reservation known as Fort Brady, in the village of Sault Sainte Marie, in the State of Michigan, except that portion lying north of Water street extended, which shall be reserved for canal and wharf purposes, and except the plot of ground now occupied as a military cemetery, which shall also be reserved. In disposing of said property the Secretary of War shall cause the grounds to be platted in blocks, streets, and alleys, corresponding as near as may be with the plat of the village of Sault Sainte Marie, and in lots not exceeding one quarter of an acre in each, unless with due reference to the requirements of the houses and buildings now located on said grounds. The Secretary of War shall also cause the lots to be appraised and sold at public or private sale, at not less than the appraised value, having first been offered at public sale. The expense of advertising, appraisement, survey, and sale shall be paid out of the proceeds of said sale, and the balance paid into the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. 4. The Secretary of War is also authorized to purchase grounds in or near the village of Sault Sainte Marie, suitable and sufficient for fortification and for garrison purposes, and construct thereon the necessary buildings, with appurtenances, sufficient for a four-company military post, to be known as Fort Brady, in accordance with estimates to be prepared by the War Department; and a sufficient sum of money, not exceeding $120,000, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of War to comply with the provisions of this act: Provided, That the title to the lands authorized to be purchased under the second section of this act shall be approved by the Attorney-General.

"SEC. 5. That in platting these grounds the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may reserve all that part of the reservation lying south of Portage street, to be set apart and kept by the municipal authorities of Sault Sainte Marie as a public park for its citizens and the people of the United States.

"SEC. 6. That section 1 of this act shall not be of effect until the purchase of a new site provided for in section 4 shall have been effected."

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose the purport of this proposition is understood. If liable to objection, I wish to reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER. It is a conference report.

Mr. HOLMAN. If put on by the conference committee I wish to know by what authority it is put on. Or was the amendment put on by the Senate?

Mr. CUTCHEON. It was put on by the Senate. The original bill passed the House, and the Senate amended it by putting on additional sections. The conference committee has unanimously agreed to it. The bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs. Indeed we may say the bill was draughted by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill in its present shape will pass. All I can do is to say I am satisfied a mistake is made. I am acquainted with the locality. The Government is parting with property which will be sold under moderate safeguards. That the military post is to be kept up in that vicinity is one of the certainties of the future.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The bill provides the present site shall not be sold until the new site has been secured.

Mr. HOLMAN. And, Mr. Speaker, a more unguarded bill was never put before Congress.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House stands adjourned until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock a. m.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Petition of James Williams, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers in the case of James Williams—to the same committee.

By Mr. CATCHINGS: Petition of Martha R. Blanton, of Washington County; of Mattie H. Garnagin, of Mary Deen, of Bolivar County; of Samuel Chase, of Rowena Clarke, of William Whitaker, and of Antonet Walsh, of Warren County, Mississippi, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DAVIS: Petition of Alexander McKennon and 53 others, merchants, underwriters, and others, in favor of the erection of a light-house at Peaked Hill Bars, Cape Cod, Massachusetts—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Memorial of the Constitution Club of New York city, expressing its views of the letter carriers' bills—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. T. J. HENDERSON: Petition of Emma Sanger, Joseph Little, and others, citizens of Amboy, Ill., praying that a pension may be granted to Louis H. Sanger—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HISCOCK: Petition for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KELLEY: Petition of 70 citizens of Coryell County, Texas, praying that Congress will at an early day increase the duties on wool, worsted and woolen goods, and yarns—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Juliana Bromley, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LIBBEY: Map to accompany bill for the improvement of naval-hospital grounds at Portsmouth, Va.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MATSON: Petition of Dr. J. T. Strong and 50 others, citizens of Hendricks County, Indiana, for a pension to Mrs. G. Conatz—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of James C. Raye, of Hartford, Kans., relative to pensions—to the same committee.

Also, petition of members of Elvira Post, No. 174, Grand Army of the Republic, Madison, Kans., for pension legislation—to the same committee.

By Mr. MORRISON: Memorial of the Constitution Club, favoring letter-carriers' bill—to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petition of James W. Kingon, Company E, Twenty-second Illinois Volunteers, and Company H, Forty-second Illinois Volunteers, asking to have charge of mutiny removed—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL: Petition of Mary Beers, widow of Robert B. Beers, Company A, Seventieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PETTIBONE: Petition of Henderson Lynch, of Green County, Tennessee, asking that his claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SENEY: Petition of Cyre Field and other officers of Keller Post, No. 128, Grand Army of the Republic, of Bucyrus, Ohio, favoring Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNYDER: Petition of J. R. J. Wilson, of Clay County; of Joseph Jarrett and of Samuel Tuckwillen, of Greenbrier County, West Virginia, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STEELE: Petition of William Millspaugh and 50 others, of New Cumberland, Ind., for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STRAIT: Papers relating to the claim of Frederic Iltis for an invalid pension—to the same committee.

By Mr. J. M. TAYLOR: Petition of Isaac M. Hudson, administrator of James Love, asking a reference of his case to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TUCKER: Memorial of the supreme judges of Indiana, praying for a Federal code of procedure—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. A. C. WHITE: Petition of soldiers and citizens of Saint Petersburg, Clarion County, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MILO WHITE: Resolutions of Burdick Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Spring Valley, Minn., in favor of Senate bill 1886—to the same committee.

By Mr. WILLIS: Remonstrance of the Board of Trade of Louisville, Ky., against House bill 8745 for the erection of a low bridge at Saint Louis, Mo.—to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 25, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings; when, on motion of Mr. BUTLER and by unanimous consent, its further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of May 24, 1886, a report from the Chief of Engineers and Maj. Peter C. Hains, Corps of Engineers, in regard to the construction of a Government bridge across the Potomac River from Observatory Point to Arlington gate; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication and accompanying papers will be printed, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The map and other exhibits will not be printed unless specially ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was going to suggest that the question of printing had better be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication, with the accompanying papers, without the maps, will be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of the 18th instant, certain information as to the amount of additional compensation ascertained to be due to postmasters and late postmasters under the act of March 3, 1883, for the payment of which no provision has been made; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COMMANDER H. E. MULLAN.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I beg to present a letter from H. E. Mullan, of Maryland, and I ask to have it read. It is a letter addressed to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the letter will be read. The Chair hears none.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

913 F STREET NORTHWEST, Washington, D. C., June 24, 1886.

DEAR SIR: In the official RECORD of the proceedings of the Senate of the 23d instant you are reported as having made the following statement in connection with Senate bill No. 2661:

"We have had a very serious experience within the last four or five years in the sinking of the Ashuelot by a man who had been court-martialed and dismissed for drunkenness. By importuning he was restored," &c.

This statement does me great injustice and is contrary to any facts to be found of record; and believing that you would not intentionally in your place on the floor of the Senate or elsewhere misrepresent or do me a wrong, I hasten to explain to you the following, which perhaps formed the basis of your remarks as above quoted:

After a service of nineteen years, beginning in 1857, I appeared in the year 1876 before an examining board for promotion to the grade of commander. Said board failed to recommend me for promotion and assigned no reason for their adverse action. From the great injustice and wrong done me by the action of said board I appealed to Congress in a frank, open manner, and asked that the proceedings of said board as appeared to said Congress might be set aside, declared null and void, and that I be permitted to appear before a board to be selected by the Secretary, composed of officers unprejudiced and unbiased and who would be fair and impartial. This was accorded me. I appeared before said board, and at my request my whole naval career, since my original entry to date, was carefully and with scrutiny inquired into, and after such inquiry said board recommended me for promotion and I was accordingly promoted. From that date there was no complaint by the Department till the year 1883, when I was forced before a court, a majority of whose members were my juniors in rank, and every one of whom has been benefited by his vote on said court.

As to the Ashuelot, whose loss no one more deeply regretted than myself, I shall only now say that I was not intoxicated on that sad occasion, nor was the loss of said vessel due to any such cause, nor will the record as it stands today, viewed by any lawyer, prove that such was the fact.

I am now engaged with all the energy becoming an officer and a gentleman in attempting to vindicate myself and show to the world the great injustice and wrong done me in this connection.

Very truly,

H. E. MULLAN, of Maryland.

Hon. M. C. BUTLER,
United States Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I have had that letter read as an act of justice to Commander Mullan, and I feel it due to him and to myself to state that when, after the sinking of the Ashuelot, he applied for restoration to his position in the Navy after he had been court-martialed and dismissed the Navy, it became my duty as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs to investigate the case, which was referred to me as a subcommittee to report to the full committee upon the bill which had been presented to the Senate.

I gave the matter the fullest and most conscientious attention and investigation, and discovered that he had been charged with drunkenness and had been court-martialed, convicted, and dismissed; and upon that I based the statement to which he refers and which he says did him injustice.

I trust that this gentleman will vindicate himself, as he says he is trying to do. I have not one particle of feeling against him, and it would cause me the deepest possible pain if I supposed that any utterance of mine on this floor had done the humblest man in this country injustice.

We are protected by the Constitution for language uttered here in debate and can not be called to account for it; but I have never availed myself of that privilege, and I trust I shall never so far forget myself as to do so to do, as I said, the humblest citizen of this country injustice.

I have thought it due to Mr. Mullan that this letter of his should go in the RECORD and that he should have all the benefit which it may afford him.

The letter was laid on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a telegraphic memorial of the Board of Trade of Portland, Oreg.; which will be read at length.

The memorial was read, and ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

PORTLAND, OREG., June 24, 1886.

To Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The following was unanimously adopted at a meeting of the Board of Trade held to-day:

Whereas the interests of the Pacific northwest and Portland, its commercial metropolis, demand the completion of a competitive line connecting Portland and the Pacific Ocean with the Columbia River basin and the Atlantic seaboard; and

Whereas there now remains unfinished only 75½ miles of the Northern Pacific Cascade branch, the completion of which would create the competition so much needed, and at the same time open a new and competing route from Portland to the most productive portions of Eastern Oregon and Washington, and make our city the terminus of another and the only unbroken transcontinental line; and

Whereas it is understood that the passage by the House of Representatives of the Dolph forfeiture bill as amended by Senator VAN WYCK would make it impossible for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to secure the capital for the completion of its Cascade branch and great Cascade tunnel: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Board of Trade of Portland, Oreg., That we look upon the declaration of forfeiture of the land grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company appointing [appertaining] to the uncompleted portion of its Cascade branch as tending to greatly injure the most vital interests of the people of the Pacific northwest.

Resolved, That we must earnestly and urgently protest against such forfeiture, and that we call upon our Representative in Congress to do all in his power to prevent such forfeiture.

Resolved, That we most heartily indorse the course of our Senators, Messrs. DOLPH and MITCHELL, in opposing the adoption of the Van Wyck amendment by the Senate, and that we commend the broad and statesmanlike views which they have expressed in this connection and which have completed their action.

Resolved, That the president of the board of trade be instructed to telegraph these preambles and resolutions to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Senator DOLPH, Senator MITCHELL, and Representative HERMANN.

C. H. DODD,
Vice-President Portland Board of Trade.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of 30 citizens of Locust Grove, Ohio, and a petition of 3 citizens of Amenia, N. Y., praying for the passage of the bill taxing imitation butter; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present resolutions of Charlton Post, No. 143, of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Richland, Iowa, in the nature of a petition, praying that Congress will pass, notwithstanding the objections of the President as expressed in his veto message, the bill granting a pension to J. D. Haworth. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH presented a petition of citizens of Shoshone County, Idaho Territory, praying for the annexation of the Pan Handle of Idaho to Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. CULLOM. I present resolutions adopted by the directors of the Chicago Board of Trade, remonstrating against any abridgment of the facilities and resources of the United States Signal Corps. As the resolutions are brief, I ask that they be read.*

The resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; as follows:

BOARD OF TRADE, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, Chicago, June 23, 1886.

Copy of preamble and resolutions passed by the board of directors of the Board of Trade of the City of Chicago at their regular meeting held on the 22d instant:

Whereas this board is advised that it is seriously contemplated by the Congress of the United States to curtail the meteorological service of the Government; and

Whereas such service in its present complete and satisfactory condition is of great advantage to this board and of incalculable benefit to the varied interests of this city and to the large extent of agricultural country which it represents: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Board of Trade of the City of Chicago hereby earnestly deprecates any proposed abridgment of the present facilities and resources of the United States Signal Service department, believing that such abridgment or curtailment would be of very great injury to the business of this city as well as to the region tributary thereto.

Resolved, That a copy of the above preamble and resolution be forwarded to the Representatives and Senators in Congress from the State of Illinois.

Attest:

GEORGE F. STONE, Secretary.

Mr. BUTLER. I present a letter of Mr. Samuel V. Niles, a reputable lawyer of this city, and a gentleman of the highest character and distinction, in relation to the bill (S. 1361) for the relief of Robley D. Evans and Richard M. Green. Inasmuch as the bill is on the Calendar, I ask that the letter lie upon the table, to be considered in connection with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. HARRISON presented the petition of John G. King and 109 other ex-soldiers and citizens of Dearborn County, Indiana, praying for the passage of the bill granting pensions to soldiers and sailors in the Army and Navy of the United States in the war of the rebellion and to their widows and orphans, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of James A. Smith and other lieutenants of the Signal Corps of the Army, praying that Congress may provide for their promotion, or, in lieu of that, for their transfer, without loss of rank, to the line of the Army as vacancies may occur in the grade of second lieutenants; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of the American Wine Company, Collins Brothers' Drug Company, and other citizens of Saint Louis, Mo., praying for a certain amendment of section 3328 of the Revised Statutes in relation to imitation and spurious wines; which was referred to the Committe on Finance.

Mr. PAYNE presented four telegrams from business firms of Cincinnati, Ohio, protesting against the passage of the so-called oleomargarine bills; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHACE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2600) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to make police regulations for the government of said District, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2626) granting a pension to Silas K. Haines, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2584) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to condemn land on Rock Creek for the purposes of a park, to be called Rock Creek Park, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the joint select committee of Congress on the Newburg (N. Y.) monument and centennial celebration of 1883, submitted a report thereon; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. DOLPH. The Committee on Coast Defenses, to whom was referred the amendment proposed to be introduced by myself to the bill making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, have instructed me to report the same back with an amendment, and to ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR MILLER.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2732) to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John F. Miller, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 810) granting a pension to Charles J. Esty;

A bill (S. 856) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Dayton, Ohio;

A bill (S. 1133) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Hunter Hardie;

A bill (S. 1217) for the relief of Henry Bellion;

A bill (S. 1390) for the relief of B. Frank Patterson;

A bill (S. 1836) for the relief of Libbie C. Montis;

A bill (S. 2067) for the increase of pension to Zebulon S. Tompkins;

A bill (H. R. 3037) relating to the licensing of vessels engaged in towing to carry persons in addition to their crews;

A bill (H. R. 5546) for the erection of a public building at Asheville, N. C.;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 57) to print an addition to a report on wages ordered printed January 17, 1884; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 185) for the printing of certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Joseph Rankin.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 2741) for the relief of soldiers and sailors who enlisted or served under assumed names, while minors or otherwise, in the Army or Navy during the war of the rebellion; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 2742) authorizing the Secretary of War to have an iron bridge constructed from the Naval Observatory grounds across the Potomac River to the Arlington estate; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2743) to secure an equitable classification and compensation of certain officers of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2744) to reduce the rate of postage on letters to 1 cent per ounce and the price of postal cards to one-half of a cent each; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2745) directing the Secretary of the Treasury Department to pay all balances in the Treasury of the United States to their just and true owners or heirs; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2746) to amend the national banking act by adding an additional section; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2747) to create the department of transportation, and to make the secretary thereof a Cabinet officer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2748) to protect certain mining and agricultural industries in the United States of America; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2749) relating to the manufacture of the money of the United States of America; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2750) to destroy usury and banking for profit within the jurisdiction of the United States of America by creating certain banking powers and duties of the Treasury Department; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I desire to have it specifically stated that I have presented all these bills by request.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2751) for the relief of D. W. and Minna H. Glassie and Joseph C. Nash; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 2752) granting a pension to Maria Churchwell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONGER introduced a bill (S. 2753) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of James Gafney, late private in Company D, Ninth Michigan Cavalry; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2754) to restrict the use and sale of opium in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is quite informally drawn, and I introduce it by request. It is accompanied by some other papers throwing light on the subject; and I trust, as of course we know will be the case, the Committee on the Judiciary will give attention to so important a matter, and report a bill in proper terms to reach the evil, which it seems is extending with considerable rapidity not alone in the District of Columbia but in the Territories and States of the country.

Mrs. Charlotte Smith has made some investigations and appeared before the Committee on Education and Labor with facts drawn from her own observation, and also with letters from medical gentlemen in different parts of the country calling attention to this important matter, and it is principally at her instance that I now call the attention of the Senate and of the committee to the matter. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2755) to improve the paper currency of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2756) for the relief of Henry C. De Ahna; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2757) for the relief of Florida Kennerly; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 2758) granting a pension to Arthur M. Thorp; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 72) to print 10,000 copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the International Sheep and Wool Show held in Philadelphia in September, 1880; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations with the accompanying papers.

Mr. MAXEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MONEY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER (by request) submitted the following resolutions; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Whereas each nation makes its own metallic or paper money a legal tender for all public and private debts;

Whereas the interest-bearing bonded debts of all nations are growing with frightful rapidity;

Whereas there is and of right ought to be some known way for each nation, as a nation, to free itself from the rapacity of usury, at least within its own jurisdiction and upon its own credit;

Whereas the laboring masses in all nations are loudly calling for legislative relief from national usury and debts;

Whereas it has been said that the interest-bearing national debts have been created since 1657, A. D., and now exceed $50,000,000,000, with an annual interest tax of fully $3,000,000,000, which with metallic money alone means eternal national interest-bearing debts;

Whereas some other régime of money is demanded of Congress and is being considered not only in America but Europe likewise: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That this House should and does hereby boldly agree to investigate this great question as it never has been done since this Government was founded, and for that purpose it does hereby appoint a select committee on the money of the United States, to be composed of one fair-minded member of each standing committee of their body, and he shall be chosen by such standing committees within one week after the adoption of this resolution.

Resolved further, That the aforesaid committee shall investigate that subject very thoroughly, and shall report by bill or otherwise on or before the third Monday in December next.

Resolved still further, That the aforesaid committee shall have the power to sit during the recess of Congress, to send for persons and papers, to employ a clerk, and to have and exercise all other necessary powers.

Resolved yet still further: That the sum of $5,000 be and are hereby appropriated for its legitimate expenses out of any public money not otherwise appropriated.

DEBT AND USURY.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER (by request) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the honorable Secretary of the Treasury Department be and is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain and to make public the following information as soon as possible:

1. The present face value of mortgages on record within the United States.
2. The indebtedness of municipalities, parishes, counties, States, and of the United States.
3. The annual interest liability on the above.
4. The capital and net profits of all banks, by whatever name known, within the jurisdiction of the United States, by years, and, if possible, from January 1, 1868, to January 1, 1886, to the intent that all possible and proper information may be obtained, classified, tabulated, aggregated, and diagramatized so that debt and usury in every phase may be seen as it is felt in every hamlet in the land.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to have it specifically noted that I have submitted these two resolutions by request.

PRINTING OF PUBLIC LAND BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to inquire if the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes, has been sent to the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerks are not advised at the desk, but it has probably been sent.

Mr. COCKRELL. If it has not been sent, I suggest that it ought to be printed with the amendments as it was passed by the Senate, so as to facilitate the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the ordinary course it will be printed at once when presented to the other House. Does the Senator from Missouri desire an order to print the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it would be better to have it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection it will be so ordered. The Chair hears no objection.

PAPERS IN VETOED PENSION CASES.

On motion of Mr. BLAIR, it was Ordered, That the papers in the following list of vetoed private pension bills be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

Louis Melcher (S. 2186), petition.
Edward Ayers (S. 363), papers.
Dudley B. Branch (S. 146), papers.
Harriet Welch (S. 1383), papers.
Marilla Parsons (S. 342), papers.
Robert Holsey (S. 1287), papers.
James Butler (S. 2025), papers.
Elizabeth De Krafft (S. 2223), papers.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 1357) authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims; and

A bill (H. R. 7183) to authorize the purchase of a certain tract of land near San Antonio, Tex.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7481) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HATCH, Mr. WINANS, and Mr. PRICE the managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following joint resolusions:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 5) authorizing payment of C. H. Mann, messenger to the reporters' gallery; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 183) providing for printing the first annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. SEWELL. If the morning business is through, I move to take up the bill for the relief of Fitz-John Porter.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 67) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, in discussing this question, which has been so frequently before the Senate of the United States, I desire first to have the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 67) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter.

Whereas the board of Army officers convened by the President of the United States by special orders numbered 78, headquarters of the Army, April 12, 1878, to examine into and report upon the case of Fitz-John Porter, late a major-general of the United States volunteers and a brevet brigadier-general and colonel of the Army, having by their report of March 19, 1879, stated that, in their opinion, "justice required at his (the President's) hands such action as may be necessary to annul and set aside the findings and sentence of the court-martial in the case of Maj. Gen. Fitz-John Porter, and to restore him to the positions of which the sentence deprived him, such restoration to take effect from the date of dismissal from the service;" and

Whereas the President, on the 4th day of May, 1882, remitted so much of the sentence of said court-martial remaining unexecuted as "forever disqualified the said Fitz-John Porter from holding any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States:" Therefore, that justice may be done the said Fitz-John Porter, and to carry into effect the recommendations of said board,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Fitz-John Porter, late a major-general of the United States volunteers and a brevet brigadier-general and colonel of the Army, to the position of colonel in the Army of the United States, of the same grade and rank held by him at the time of his dismissal from the Army by sentence of court-martial promulgated January 27, 1863, and, in his discretion, to place him on the retired-list of the Army as of that grade, the retired-list being hereby increased in number to that extent; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only: Provided, That said Fitz-John Porter shall receive no pay, compensation, or allowance whatsoever prior to his appointment under this act.

Passed the House of Representatives February 15, 1886.

Attest:

JNO. B. CLARK, JR., Clerk.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not wish to weary Senators in elaborating the points which have been heretofore presented, but I do think that if Senators could divest themselves of a great desire to do a certain act, whether right or wrong, and would return once more to the landmarks of the Constitution and examine this question with reference thereto there would not be such a persistent effort on the part of the friends of Fitz-John Porter to pass a certain kind of a bill with a certain class of words in it.

I have called attention heretofore to the phraseology of the bill which has always been presented to Congress, seeming as though there was a determination to force a bill with a character of phrase and word in it different from that of any other class of bills passed, that is to say, with reference to any class of bills passed where there was a doubt in reference to either the propriety or the constitutionality of the act.

Let me examine this measure for a moment and ask lawyers on either side of this Chamber to calmly consider this question in reference to what they deem a proper construction of the Constitution of the United States.

What is this bill? It proposes, first, that the President may do a certain act; that he may appoint Fitz-John Porter to a colonelcy in the Army of the United States; that is to say, he may nominate him to the Senate and after confirmation appoint him to that office, and then place him on the retired-list with that grade, the retired-list to be opened, if I may use that term; or, in other words, a vacant colonelcy is created on the retired-list, for what purpose? "For this purpose only." That is the language of the bill. "For this purpose only" means what? It means that the President shall fill that office with the name of Fitz-John Porter, and none other; in other words, if he does not appoint that person to that office the office ceases.

Allow me to call the attention of Senators to that which they have read over and over again and studied and understand perhaps better than I do. Let us examine for a moment the power of the President under the Constitution and see whether he is to appoint by direction of Congress or whether he is to appoint by and according to his own judgment and his own volition. Speaking of the power of the President the Constitution says:

He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.

What is the meaning of that? The President "shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties." That means, as I understand it at least, that the President may make an agreement with any foreign power in reference to regulations that shall operate between the two governments, and it shall be sent to the Senate, and if satisfactory to two-thirds of the Senate then he is authorized to exchange treaties, and the agreement becomes of binding force between the two nations.

Will any Senator here claim that the House of Representatives has any power whatever to agree to a treaty, to formulate a treaty, to consent to a treaty, except being a part of the Congress of the United States to pass laws in connection with the Senate in furtherance of or for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of a treaty? I presume nobody will contend that the House of Representatives has any other power in the matter; yet we find that in the language in reference to the making of treaties the Senate consents and advises. Then the treaty is put in force by the President by an exchange of treaties.

I only speak of this to show that in connection with the very same provision following the treaty-making power is the power of the President to nominate to the Senate persons for the purpose of holding certain offices:

And he shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint embassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

I merely call attention to this provision that the President of the United States shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint officers to all the offices except as otherwise provided by law. I ask any Senator here what the Senate or the House of Representatives has to do with the selection of the man whom the President of the United States shall nominate to a colonelcy in the Army of the United States? Where does the House of Representatives get the power to advise the President of the United States whom he shall appoint to office? Where does the Senate derive the power from the Constitution of the United States to dictate to the President what person he shall nominate to any office whatever where it rests in the power of the President to nominate and the Senate to confirm?

It has been said by Senators in response to this proposition when I have called attention to it heretofore that the fact that bills have been passed within the last few years authorizing the President to do certain things and appoint certain persons to offices has become a precedent and thereby becomes the construction of the Constitution. If every bill that is passed through Congress in violation of the Constitution becomes a precedent so that the Constitution is to be construed hereafter according to that precedent, it would not take very long for the Congress of the United States to change the whole structure of the Constitution. I do not believe in that doctrine. I do not believe that a few bills passed through Congress can change the Constitution of the United States.

I will put a case on all fours with the pending bill, and I will ask any lawyer on the other side of the Chamber to answer the proposition. Suppose the Congress of the United States should to-morrow pass a law increasing the number of the judges on the Supreme Bench; suppose we increase the number by four, and you provide in that bill in this language: "That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint to the office of supreme judge John Doe, Richard Roe, Stephen Johnson, and Benedict Arnold" to fill the four vacancies created by act of Congress on the Supreme Bench, and then in conclusion the act says: "And for this purpose only are these four offices created." For what purpose? For the purpose of appointing these four men, and for no other purpose. Is there a lawyer in the Senate of the United States who will contend that it is not an abridgment of the President's prerogative, and an infringement upon the Constitution of the United States?

But it is said this is the appointment of a colcnel in the Army. What is the difference? It is an office, and the Constitution of the United States provides in so many words that the President of the United States shall nominate to the Senate and by and with its advice and consent he may appoint. So if you can dictate to the President whom he shall appoint to an office and at the same time declare that if he does not fill the office with that name then the office shall cease, tell me why Congress can not appoint the man to the office without the President of the United States? It can do so upon the very same theory that it is proposed to tell the President an office is created if he will put a certain man in it, and if he does not put that man in it the office ceases.

If that is the only power or authority the President has, the Congress of the United States upon the same parity of reasoning can itself appoint the man to the office without reference to the President, for the President is merely doing what? He is not acting in the capacity of President in the selection of the officer according to his own judgment; the only capacity in which he is acting is as the agent of Congress to transmit the name and that is all, not in his capacity as President exercising his judgment, but merely in the capacity of a clerk registering decrees of Congress by sending the name and for no other purpose, a mere clerk without judgment of his own being exercised in any sense. You deprive him by this act of the exercise of that judgment as President of the United States; and yet grave lawyers, in the Senate for years, have stood up and said that it is no violation of the Constitution. I ask any lawyer in the Senate, and I have asked the same question before, to stand up and give me a reason for the consistency of this position with the Constitution of the United States, and I have never found one to make answer.

If when a bill violates the Constitution, Senators are so determined that it shall be rammed down the throats of those who do not believe in it, merely to have a certain phrase in the bill, they have the responsibility of doing it. But, sir, I have been taught to respect the Constitution I care not which way it cuts, and whenever I see it is to be violated I try at least to prevent it. We ought not to be so eager, we ought not to be so anxious to do a thing to gratify somebody as to be willing to ride rough-shod over the Constitution, the President, and everything else.

For seventy-five years the construction of that portion of the Constitution has been as I have stated it. You can not find anywhere where this has been passed upon whenever it has been raised in the days gone by, that it has not been given the very same construction that I have given it to-day.

It has been violated in some instances within recent years by putting captains or somebody on the retired-list. That was done over my protest in the Senate, but it was a small thing and no one would listen for a moment to the proposition whether it violated the Constitution. I have frequently called the attention of the country to the fact which I have suggested, how easy it is to remedy the proposition; but no, the bill must be passed just in these words and none other, according to its friends' desire.

Now, let me ask another question. The Constitution provides that any person who has incurred disabilities under the Constitution and laws of the United States may have those disabilities removed by a vote of two-thirds of both Houses of Congress. Suppose a bill is introduced in the Congress of the United States for the purpose of relieving disabilities. It is voted on. It is provided in that bill that the person who asks to be relieved of his disabilities shall be relieved of them if the President of the United States will do a certain act which is indicated to him by the Congress of the United States. Would not that be in violation of the Constitution? The Constitution provides that it shall take two-thirds of the votes to relieve the disabilities, but you would make it depend upon an act of the President instead of the way provided in the Constitution, and whenever that is done it is as clearly a violation of the Constitution of the United States as if you squarely ran against the face of it and said the Constitution is all bosh.

So, too, when you deprive the President of his power, the right which he has to nominate to the Senate, from his own selection, you violate the Constitution.

I might be asked what is my view about the power of the President nominating to the Senate and the Senate confirming. I heard the question once asked in the Senate by a lawyer whether the Senate did not have a right to consent to the appointment of a man to a civil office before his name was sent in? I said no, I thought not, because that would be the Senate appointing to the office and asking the President to consent, instead of the President nominating the officer and asking the Senate to consent. I thought that was a reversal of the proposition as it was stated in the Constitution. But I heard that position stated on the floor by a man who is said to be a fine lawyer, and doubtless is, at least he thinks so. It only shows how far we go in certain directions when we are anxious to have a thing done; that we then go to almost any extreme, violate our own judgment and our own conscience in reference to the thing in order to carry a pet object through.

If this thing obtains and becomes the construction of the Constitution, let me put this case: Suppose the Congress of the United States should be largely Republican in both branches, and the President should be a Democrat, or vice versa, having a certain number of officers to appoint to carry on the Government. Suppose Congress passes an act declaring that the President is authorized, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, to nominate John Fish to be postmaster at New York, and that the office is made vacant "for this purpose only." What would that law mean? It would mean that the President might appoint that man to be postmaster at New York, and if he did not he could not appoint anybody. In other words, to make it plainer, suppose we created another post-office in New York city, or in Brooklyn, a new office, and say the President may appoint a certain person nominated to the Senate, and if the Senate consent to it then this man shall become postmaster, and the office is created "for this purpose only." For what purpose? For the purpose of this man being appointed to it, and if he is not appointed the office ceases.

Will any one tell me that this would be a fair construction of the Constitution? Will any one tell me that that is not taking the power that is given to the President by the Constitution out of his hands and putting it in the hands of Congress? It is a well-known fact that the legislative departments of governments encroach upon the prerogatives and rights of the other departments when permitted to do so. The reason the President vetoed a similar bill which passed in almost the very same language of this bill to-day was on the ground that Congress had no right to create an office and tell the President whom he should appoint, and he vetoed it, in my judgment, upon purely constitutional grounds.

Mr. President, I have merely called the attention of the Senate to this provision of the Constitution as applicable to the bill as attempted to be passed by the Congress of the United States. As a matter of course, I do not expect it to have any weight, for I have always noticed when the Senate of the United States has a determination fixed in its mind to do an act it turns a deaf ear to everything, no matter whether it is based upon law or fact, to do the act it desires. That has been the case often, not with the Senate in this Congress alone but with others, and I only made these suggestions thinking that in this day and age of the world grave Senators might at least for one time halt for the purpose of examining this question prior to forcing this measure upon the President of the United States and upon the country.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the Senator from Illinois will allow me to interrupt him before he passes from this branch of his argument, I will call to his attention a change of the bill to meet the case he has suggested, and with his permission I will read it so that he may comment upon another feature which is presented naturally as it seems to me from the considerations he has already urged. Suppose the bill were to read:

An act for the relief of John Doe.

Whereas the board of United States judges convened by the President of the United States to examine into and report upon the case of John Doe, late a district judge of the United States, having by their report stated that, in their opinion, "justice required at his (the President's) hands such action as may be necessary to annul and set aside the findings and sentence of the United States court in the case of John Doe, and to restore him to the positions of which the sentence deprived him, such restoration to take effect from the date of dismissal from the service;" and

Whereas the President remitted so much of the sentence of said United States court remaining unexecuted as "forever disqualified the said John Doe from holding any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States:" Therefore, that justice may be done the said John Doe, and to carry into effect the recommendations of said board,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint John Doe, late a United States district judge, to the position of United States district judge of the State of New Jersey, being the position he held prior to the sentence of the court which tried him, and, in his discretion, to place him in such position as judge, list of judges being hereby increased in number to that extent; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only: Provided, That said John Doe shall receive no pay, compensation, or allowance whatsoever prior to his appointment under this act.

I suggest to the Senator that that makes an exact parallel, simply carrying out his idea in the matter.

Mr. LOGAN. That would be a case on all fours with this case, for the Congress of the United States to take a judge who had been impeached, to illustrate, and dismissed from the bench and his place filled, and then by an act of Congress to create another judgeship and provide that if the President puts the man who has been dismissed back in the newly created judgeship he may do it, and if not the office ceases. That is creating an office by act of Congress and telling the President who he is to put in, and if he does not put that man in the office ceases and it shall not be filled. That is the proposition precisely.

I ask any lawyer here, I care not who he is—the Senator from New Jersey, the promoter of this bill, is himself a lawyer—to explain to me why this is not in violation of the Constitution of the United States. I ask any man on either side for an argument in favor of this position according to the construction of that provision of the Constitution which authorizes the President to nominate to the Senate and the Senate to consent to the nomination, so that the person may be appointed to office. I want an answer. If I am wrong on the law and the construction of the Constitution of the United States, I wish to know it.

But some say it is merely permitting the President to do an act, permitting him to do an executive act, a political act. Sir, the President performs his acts of an executive, or political, character according to the laws of the United States, and it is the duty of Congress to pass no other character of laws, only those which are constitutional and which do not abridge the rights of any of the departments of the Government, but to keep within the purview and meaning of the Constitution. We are restricted in the Constitution the same as the other departments. Within those bounds we ought to keep and we ought not to go beyond them.

However, I shall leave that branch of the subject and take up the next branch of the case, which has to a certain extent been commented on by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. I have maintained in the Senate and elsewhere that for the violation of an order of a commanding officer, for a refusal to obey it, or for failing to obey it, the law under the articles of war fixes the penalty of death, or any other punishment which the court-martial may deem proper. This man was tried and convicted upon evidence that I have heretofore stated, fairly and truthfully. I have no prejudice against this man, and without prejudice I have tried to place the evidence fairly before the country so that it might be judged of impartially; but it has been spread before the country time and again by the friends of this man in a distorted shape—in fact presented in such a way as to be without truth as its basis. By a misapprehension of the facts many have protested the innocence of Porter. I now state, in the commencement of my examination of the testimony, that there has not been one statement made in reference to the condition of the two armies or the troops at the time, or the troops that confronted this man, that has one solitary fact to stand upon, and I will demonstrate it. I have done it over and over again, and I shall do it now. It is by this deception and misrepresentation that letters have been obtained from great men in this country sympathizing with this man because as stated he had been improperly found guilty.

But I do not consider this to be the trial of Fitz-John Porter. This bill is a mere dodge, for it was determined by the Supreme Court of the United States about the time that this case was first argued in the Senate that the judgment of a court known as the courts-martial of this country when approved by the President was final, and there is no power to reopen and re-examine the case. I maintained it as the law that the judgment of a court-martial was the same thing when approved by the President of the United States as a decision of the Supreme Court of United States, that their decision when approved was final, and that there was no power to reopen and re-examine it.

That being the case, you ignore the court's decision and provide that this man shall be placed back although dismissed, when you have no power to reopen and revise the judgment. But you whip the devil around the stump by putting a man back in the same place from which the court-martial dismissed him. You have no power whatever to revise the judgment of the court, still you do revise it, you do overturn it, you do declare it null and void, and you do put him in the position he occupied at the time he was dismissed. If that is not a reversal of the judgment, if that is not a reopening and rehearing of it, in an indirect mode, then I do not understand it.

But as I have maintained before, this is not the trial of Fitz-John Porter. He has been tried. This is the trial of Abraham Lincoln, who approved the sentence. This is the trial of James A. Garfield, General Hunter, and the brave and honest men who sat upon the court-martial with them, and who tried and pronounced him guilty. We are told that they erred; that new discoveries have proved their mistake. If I do not demonstrate to the Senate, or the country, whether the Senate may hear me or not, that every particle of evidence before that court upon which they found him guilty is substantially confirmed by the reports of confederate officers as well as Union officers, I will agree that Fitz-John Porter was not guilty.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator give me the reference of the case in the Supreme Court of which he spoke, if he has it convenient?

Mr. LOGAN (handing a paper). If the Senator will look through this argument he will find it. I referred to it and quoted it in my former argument.

Now, let us see whether I am correct or not. The first proposition I state is that Fitz-John Porter failed to comply with the order of his commanding officer and not because he could not comply with it. I will put the order in my argument. It is the same order read by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] yesterday, and in the following words:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
Bristoe Station, August 27, 1862—6.30 p. m.

GENERAL: The major-general commanding directs that you start at 1 o'clock to-night and come forward with your whole corps, or such part of it as is with you, so as to be here by daylight to-morrow morning. Hooker has had a very severe action with the enemy, with a loss of about three hundred killed and wounded. The enemy has been driven back, but is retiring along the railroad. We must drive him from Manassas, and clear the country between that place and Gainesville, where McDowell is. If Morell has not joined you send word to him to push forward immediately; also send word to Banks to hurry forward with all speed to take your place at Warrenton Junction. It is necessary, on all accounts, that you should be here by daylight. I send an officer with this dispatch who will conduct you to this place. Be sure to send word to Banks, who is on the road from Fayetteville, probably in the direction of Bealeton. Say to Banks, also, that he had best run back the railroad trains to this side of Cedar Run. If he is not with you, write him to that effect.

By command of Major-General Pope:

GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Colonel and Chief of Staff.

Maj. Gen. F. J. PORTER,
Warrenton Junction.

P. S.—If Banks is not at Warrenton Junction leave a regiment of infantry and two pieces of artillery as a guard till he comes up, with instructions to follow you immediately. If Banks is not at the junction instruct Colonel Cleary to run the trains back to this side of Cedar Run, and post a regiment and section of artillery with it.

By command of Major-General Pope:

GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
Colonel and Chief of Staff.

But before proceeding to that I desire to refer for a moment to the statement of the Senator from New Jersey yesterday in reference to the character of Fitz-John Porter prior to this charge. I have never assailed the character of Fitz-John Porter prior to his conduct in the presence of the enemy. I have never said aught against his conduct prior to that time. The Senator said he was a graduate of West Point. That is true. So was Robert E. Lee; so was General Johnston, and so was Jefferson Davis. The Senator said he was a brave soldier in the Mexican war. So was Robert E Lee; so was Jefferson Davis. The Senator said that up to that time he never had been accused of anything. Up to the time that Jefferson Davis and Mr. Lee undertook to break up this Government they never had been accused of treason.

So it is not what the man did before, but it is what he did then. What did he do or what did he fail to do? Fitz-John Porter conspired with other officers to what effect? That no officer should command the armies of the East unless satisfactory to him and his allies. The Senator from New Jersey smiles, but the evidence shows it too plainly to be disbelieved. When McDowell commanded at the first battle of Bull Run and this country, misunderstanding the facts, said he had lost that battle, will the Senator believe me when I tell him that Fitz-John Porter was the cause of the disaster of the first battle of Bull Run? I state that in my judgment it is a fact.

I say that Fitz-John Porter and two or three other men whom it is not necessary to mention were determined that no man should command the Eastern army not satisfactory to them. Your Eastern army was successful under Grant, but when Grant took command of it Fitz-John Porter and his allies were no longer in that army to conspire against their commander. Had these men then been in command of their corps and armies, then Grant never would have succeeded. Thanks to Lincoln and Stanton for having discovered their designs and relieved them from further retarding the success of the Union arms.

Sometimes people forget history. Let me state the facts sworn to. Joseph E. Johnston was in command of nine thousand men on the 16th day of July, 1861, and 9 miles from him to his front was General Patterson with twenty-two thousand men. General Patterson was directed by a positive order from General Scott to attack Johnston, or if he could not attack him to hold him there so that he could not re-enforce Beauregard in front of McDowell at Manassas. That order was sent. General Sanborn had been sent from Washington city to urge him forward to attack. He went to him and was put in command of eight thousand of General Patterson's troops. General Patterson was preparing to attack Johnston, only 9 miles to his front. While he was making that preparation this general was ordered to the advance. He cut a road, and sent a part of his men down very close to Johnston's camp.

General Patterson directed the order to be issued to attack Johnston. This general was notified, and he was to be ready to attack the next morning, but when the order was directed to be issued it was not issued. Why? Fitz-John Porter was the adjutant-general of General Patterson, and Fitz-John Porter protested that Johnston had been re-enforced by twenty thousand men and it was dangerous to attack. Patterson said no, he was determined to attack. He (Porter) then insisted on Patterson sending for some of the other officers to consult, Colonel Abercrombie and Colonel Thomas. Finally he consented. They came to his camp and under the influence of Fitz-John Porter they caused Patterson to change the order, and, sir, instead of attacking the next morning the order was issued for a retreat, and he retreated 20 miles to Charlestown, with these men to bring up the rear, Stuart's cavalry covering Johnston's movement to Manassas. Johnston passed over the river in the night, and on the 19th of that month Joe Johnston landed at Manassas and took command of the confederate army at the battle of Bull Run with every man he had there save a few sick, and Patterson was kept 20 miles away from his camp under the influence of this man Fitz-John Porter.

Yet you talk about his being a great general, a brave man and patriotic. That was his patriotism in 1861. Why did he do this? McDowell and Pope never could win a battle and never did in the East where Porter and his friends were. They were never supported. The majority of the people of this country believe that Beauregard had command at Manassas, and that Joe Johnston got there on the evening of the battle; that he came in there with three or four thousand men on the evening of the battle and attacked McDowell on the flank. That is the general impression, but that is not true. As I said, Johnston was there on the 19th and took command of the army; that his whole force arrived there on the 20th except one brigade, and that brigade arrived on the day of the battle; and his whole force was there in that battle, and it was Johnston's force that McDowell fought the major part of the day instead of Beauregard, and under the influence of this man, Patterson was led away and made to retreat, so that Johnston could be unembarrassed in his march to Manassas or Bull Run.

I ask the Secretary to read what I send to the desk, taken from the sworn testimony on the conduct of the war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The Secretary will read the extract desired.

The Secretary read as follows:

The extraordinary conduct of General Patterson at this critical period, when everything seemed to depend upon his exertions, was afterward the subject of inquiry by the Joint Committee on the Conduct of the War. The testimony taken by that committee makes it clear, to any unprejudiced mind, that while Patterson himself may have been loyal to the Union, he was weak enough to be swayed from the path of duty by some of the faithless and unpatriotic officers with whom he had partly surrounded himself—and especially by Fitz-John Porter, his chief of staff. Let us examine the sworn testimony of two or three witnesses on this point.

General Charles W. Sanford, who was second in command under Patterson, and in command of Patterson's left wing, testified [see pages 54-66, Report on Conduct of the War, volume 3, part 2] that he was at a council of war held at the White House, June 29, when the propriety of an attack on the rebel lines at Manassas was discussed; that he objected to any such movement until Patterson was "in such a position as to prevent the junction between General Johnston's army and the troops at Manassas;" that on the 6th of July he was sent by General Scott, with four picked New York regiments, to Patterson, and (waiving his own seniority of rank) reported to that general at Williamsport; that Patterson gave him command of a division of eight thousand men (and two batteries) out of a total in his army of twenty-two thousand; that he "delivered orders from General Scott to General Patterson, and urged a forward movement as soon as possible;" that there was "some delay at Martinsburg, notwithstanding the urgency of our matter," but they "left there on [Monday] the 15th of July, and went in the direction of Winchester"—down to Bunker Hill—Patterson with two divisions going down the turnpike, and Sanford taking his division a little in advance and more easterly on the side roads so as to be in a position to flank Johnson's right; that on that afternoon (Monday, July 15) General Patterson rode up to where Sanford was locating his camp.

Continuing his testimony, General Sanford said: "I was then within about 9 miles of Johnston's fortified camp at Winchester. Patterson was complimenting me upon the manner in which my regiments were located, and inquiring about my pickets, which I had informed him I had sent down about 3 miles to a stream below. I had driven out the enemy's skirmishers ahead of us. They had some cavalry there. In answer to his compliments about the comfortable location I had made, I said: 'Very comfortable, General; when shall we move on?' He hesitated a moment or two, and then said: 'I do not know yet when we shall move. And if I did I would not tell my own father.' I thought that was rather a queer speech to make to me under the circumstances. But I smiled and said: 'General, I am only anxious that we shall get forward that the enemy shall not escape us.' He replied: 'There is no danger of that. I will have a reconnaissance to-morrow, and we will arrange about moving at a very early period.' He then took his leave."

The next day (Tuesday, July 16) there was a reconnaissance on the Winchester turnpike, about 4 or 5 miles below the General's camp. He sent forward a section of artillery and some cavalry, and they found a post-and-log fence across the Winchester turnpike and some of the enemy's cavalry on the other side of it. They gave them a round of grape. The cavalry scattered off and the reconnaissance returned. That was the only reconnaissance I heard of while we were there. My own pickets went further than that. But it was understood the next afternoon that we were to march forward at daylight. I sent down Colonel Morell with forty men to open a road down to Opequan Creek, within 5 miles of the camp at Winchester, on the side-roads I was upon, which would enable me in the course of three hours to get between Johnston and the Shenandoah River and effectually bar his way to Manassas. I had my ammunition all distributed and ordered my men to have twenty-four hours' rations in their haversacks independent of their breakfast. We were to march at 4 o'clock the next morning. I had this road to the Opequan completed that night. I had then with me in addition to my eight regiments, amounting to about eight thousand men and a few cavalry, Doubleday's heavy United States battery of 20 and 30 pounders and a very good Rhode Island battery. And I was willing to take the risk, whether General Patterson followed me up or not, of placing myself between Johnston and the Shenandoah River, rather than let Johnston escape. And at 4 o'clock (July 17) I should have moved over that road for that purpose, if I had had no further orders. But, a little after 12 o'clock at night (July 16-17), I received a long order of three pages from General Patterson, instructing me to move on to Charlestown, which is nearly at right angles to the road I was going to move on, and 22 miles from Winchester. This was after I had given my orders for the other movement.

* * * * * *

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. And that left Johnston free?

A. Yes, sir; left him free to make his escape, which he did.

* * * * * * *

Q. In what direction would Johnston have had to move to get by you?

A. Right out to the Shenandoah River, which he forded. He found out from his cavalry, who were watching us, that we were actually leaving and he started at 1 o'clock that same day with 8,000 men, forded the Shenandoah where it was so deep that he ordered his men to put their cartridge boxes on their bayonets, got out on the Leesburg road, and went down to Manassas.

Q. (By the CHAIRMAN). Did he [Patterson] assign any reason for that movement?

A. I was, of course, very indignant about it, and so were all my officers and men; so much so that when, subsequently, at Harper's Ferry, Patterson came by my camp, there was a universal groan—against all discipline, of course, and we suppressed it as soon as possible. The excuse given by General Patterson was this: That he had received intelligence that he could rely upon that General Johnston had been re-enforced by twenty thousand men from Manassas, and was going to make an attack upon him; and in the order which I received that night—a long order of three pages—I was ordered to occupy all the communicating roads, turning off a regiment here, and two or three regiments there, and a battery at another place, to occupy all the roads from Winchester to the neighborhood of Charlestown, and all the cross-roads, and hold them all that day, until General Patterson's whole army went by me to Charlestown; and I sat seven hours in the saddle near a place called Smithfield, while Patterson, with his whole army, went by me on their way to Charlestown, he being apprehensive, as he said, of an attack from Johnston's forces.

Q. (By Mr. Odell.) You covered his movement?

A. Yes, sir. Now the statement that he made, which came to me through Colonel Abercrombie, who was Patterson's brother-in-law, and commanded one division in that army, was that Johnston had been re-enforced, and General Fitz-John Porter reported the same thing to my officers. General Porter was the chief of Patterson's staff, and was a very excellent officer and an accomplished soldier. They all had got this story, which was without the slightest shadow of foundation; for there had not a single man arrived at the camp since we had got full information that their force consisted of twenty thousand men, of whom eighteen hundred were sick with the measles. The story was, however, that they had ascertained by reliable information of this re-enforcement. Where they got their information I do not know. None such reached me; and I picked up deserters and other persons to get all the information I could; and we since have learned as a matter of certainty that Johnston's forces never did exceed twenty thousand men there. But the excuse Patterson gave was that Johnston had been re-enforced by twenty thousand men from Manassas, and was going to attack him. That was the reason he gave then for this movement. But in this paper he has lately published he hints at another reason—another excuse—which was that it was by order of General Scott. Now, I know that the peremptory order of General Scott to General Patterson, repeated over and over again—was this—I was present on several occasions when telegraphic communications went from General Scott to General Patterson—General Scott's orders to General Patterson were that, if he were strong enough, he was to attack and beat Johnston. But if not, then he was to place himself in such a position as to keep Johnston employed, and prevent him from making a junction with Beauregard at Manassas. That was the repeated direction of General Scott to General Patterson; and it was because of Patterson's hesitancy, and his hanging back, and keeping so far beyond the reach of Johnston's camp, that I was ordered to go up there and re-enforce him, and assist him in any operations necessary to effect that object. The excuse of General Patterson now is that he had orders from General Scott to move to Charlestown. Now, that is not so. But this state of things existed: Before the movement was made from Martinsburg, General Patterson suggested to General Scott that Charlestown would be a better base of operations than Martinsburg, and suggested that he had better move on Charlestown, and thence make his approaches to Winchester; that it would be better to do that than to move directly to Winchester from Martinsburg; and General Scott wrote back to say that, if he found that movement a better one, he was at liberty to make it. But General Patterson had already commenced his movement on Winchester direct from Martinsburg, and had got as far as Bunker Hill; so that the movement which he had formerly suggested, to Charlestown, was suppressed by his own act. But that is the pretense now given in his published speech for making the movement from Bunker Hill to Charlestown, which was a retreat, instead of the advance which the movement to Charlestown he first proposed to General Scott was intended to be.

* * * * * * *

Q. (By the CHAIRMAN.) Was not that change of direction and movement to Charlestown a total abandonment of the object which you were pursuing?

A. Entirely an abandonment of the main principles of the orders he was acting under.

Q. And of course an abandonment of the purpose for which you were there?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. (By Mr. ODELL.) Was it not your understanding in leaving here, and was it not the understanding also of General Scott, that your purpose in going there was to check Johnston with direct reference to the movement here?
A. Undoubtedly. It was in consequence of the suggestion made by me at the council at the President's house. * * * And upon the suggestion of General Scott they wanted me to go up there and assist Patterson in this movement against Johnston, so as to carry out the point which I had suggested of first checkmating Johnston before the movement against Manassas was made here.

* * * * * * *

Q. (By the CHAIRMAN.) Would there have been any difficulty in preventing Johnston from going to Manassas?
A. None whatever.

* * * * * * * *

Q. (By the CHAIRMAN.) I have heard it suggested that he (Patterson) undertook to excuse this movement on the ground that the time of many of his troops had expired, and they refused to accompany him.
A. That to my knowledge is untrue. The time of none of them had expired when this movement was made. All the troops that were there were in the highest condition for the service. These three-months men, it may be well to state to you who are not military men, were superior to any other volunteer troops that we had in point of discipline. They were the disciplined troops of the country. The three-months men were generally the organized troops of the different States—New York, Pennsylvania, &c. We had, for instance, from Patterson's own city, Philadelphia, one of the finest regiments in the service, which was turned over to me, at their own request; and the most of my regiments were disciplined and organized troops. They were all in fine condition, anxious, zealous, and earnest for a fight. They thought they were going to attack Johnston's camp at Winchester. Although I had suggested to General Patterson that there was no necessity for that, the camp being admirably fortified with many of their heavy guns from Norfolk, I proposed to him to place ourselves between Johnston and the Shenandoah, which would have compelled him to fight us there, or to remain in his camp, either of which would have effected General Scott's object. If I had got into a fight, it was very easy, over this road, I had just been opening, for Patterson to have reinforced me and to have come up to the fight in time. The proposition was to place ourselves between Johnston's fortified camp and the Shenandoah, where his fortified camp would have been of no use to him.
Q. Even if you had received a check there, it would have prevented his junction with the forces at Manassas?
A. Yes, sir; I would have risked a battle with my own division rather than Johnston should have escaped. If he had attacked me, I could have taken a position where I could have held it, while Patterson could have fallen upon him and repulsed him.
Q. (By Mr. Odell.) Had you any such understanding with Patterson?
A. I told him I would move down on this side road in advance, leaving General Patterson to sustain me if I got into a fight. So, on the other hand, if he should attack Patterson, I was near enough to fall upon Johnston's flank and to support Patterson. By using this communication of mine to pass Opequan Creek—where, I had informed Patterson, I had already pushed forward my pickets (two hundred men in the day and four hundred more at night), to prevent the enemy from burning the bridge—it would have enabled me to get between Johnston and the Shenandoah River. On the morning (Wednesday, July 17) of our march to Charlestown, Stuart's cavalry, which figured so vigorously at Bull Run, was upon my flank all day. They were apparently about eight hundred strong. I saw them constantly on my flank for a number of miles. I could distinguish them, with my glass, with great ease. Finally, they came within about a mile of the line of march I was pursuing, and I sent a battery around to head them off, and the Twelfth Regiment across the fields in double quick time to take them in the rear. I thought I had got them hemmed in. But they broke down the fences and went across the country to Winchester, and I saw nothing more of them. They were then about 8 miles from Winchester, and must have got there in the course of a couple of hours. That day (Wednesday, the 17th) at 10 o'clock—as was ascertained from those who saw him crossing the Shenandoah—Johnston started from Winchester with eight thousand men, forded the Shenandoah, and got to Manassas on Friday night; and his second in command started the next day with all the rest of the available troops—something like nine thousand men, leaivng only the sick, and a few to guard them, in the camp at Winchester—and they arrived at the battlefield in the midst of the fight, got out of the cars, rushed on the battlefield, and turned the scale. I have no doubt that if we had intercepted Johnston, as we ought to have done, the battle of Bull Run would have been a victory for us instead of a defeat. Johnston was undoubtedly the ablest general they had in their army.
Col. Craig Biddle testified (pp. 194-198, ibid.) that he was General Patterson's aid-de-camp at the time. In answer to a question by the chairman he continued:
"I was present, of course, at all the discussions. The discussion at Martinsburg was as to whether or not General Patterson should go on to Winchester. General Patterson was very full of that himself. He was determined to go to Winchester, but the opinions of all the regular officers who were with him were against it. The opinions of all the men in whose judgment I had any confidence were against it. They seemed to have the notion that General Patterson had got his Irish blood up by the fight we had had at Falling Waters, and was bound to go ahead. He decided upon going ahead, against the remonstrances of General [Fitz-John] Porter, who advised against it. He told me he considered he had done his duty, and said no more. The movement was delayed in consequence of General Stone's command not being able to move right away. It was then evident that there was so much opposition to it that the general was induced to call a council of the general officers in his command, at which I was present. They were unanimously opposed to the advance. That was at Martinsburg.

* * * * * * *

Q. While at Bunker Hill, the night before you left there, were any orders issued to march in the evening?
A. I think there were such orders.
Q. Did not General Patterson issue orders at Bunker Hill, the night before you marched to Charlestown, for an attack on the enemy?
A. I think such orders were written. I do not think they were issued. I think General Patterson was again persuaded not to make an advance.
Col. R. Butler Price, senior aid to Patterson, testified (pages 185-194, ibid) as follows: * * *
"Q. (By Mr. GOOCH.) Was it not the intention to move from Bunker Hill to Winchester?
"A. Yes, sir. At one time General Patterson had given an order to move from Bunker Hill to Winchester. He was very unwilling to leave Johnston even at Winchester without attacking him; and on the afternoon before we left Bunker Hill he decided to attack him, notwithstanding his strong force.
"Q. Behind his intrenchments?
"A. Yes, sir; it went so far that his order was written by his adjutant, General [Fitz-John] Porter. It was very much against the wishes of General [Fitz-John] Porter; and he asked General Patterson if he would send for Colonel Abercrombie and Colonel Thomas and consult them on the movement. General Patterson replied: 'No, sir; for I know they will attempt to dissuade me from it, and I have made up my mind to fight Johnston under all circumstances.' That was the day before we left Bunker Hill. Then Colonel [Fitz-John] Porter asked to have Colonel Abercrombie and Colonel Thomas sent for and consulted as to the best manner to carry out his wishes. He consented, and they came, and after half an hour they dissuaded him from it.
"Q. At that time General Patterson felt it was so important to attack Johnston that he had determined to do it?
"A. Yes, sir; the order was not published, but it was written.
"Q. You understood General Patterson to be influenced to make that attempt because he felt there was a necessity for detaining Johnston?
"A. Yes, sir; to detain him as long as he possibly could.
"Q. That order was not countermanded until late on Tuesday, the 16th, was it?
"A. That order never was published. It was written; but at the earnest solicitation of Colonel [Fitz-John] Porter it was withheld until he could have a consultation with Colonel Abercrombie and Colonel Thomas."

Mr. LOGAN. That statement is taken from the sworn testimony of General Sanford and other officers, and is to the effect that General Patterson was dissuaded by Fitz-John Porter, his adjutant-general—for that is exactly what the evidence says—from issuing the order to attack Johnston after he received the positive order from Scott; that by the persuasion of Fitz-John Porter the order was not issued, and the consultation was held and a retreat agreed on instead of an advance, which gave Johnston that night the chance to leave Winchester and go with his forces to Bull Run or Manassas, where in combination with the troops of Beauregard they outnumbered the troops of McDowell, for which reason the battle resulted as it did.

I say Fitz-John Porter was the cause of the loss of the first battle of Bull Run. Why do I say so? I say so for the reason that the troops of McDowell fought at 4 o'clock in the afternoon three brigades of Johnston's command, and at a time when Rickett's battery was knocked to pieces by a Virginia regiment and started a stampede, and Beauregard's army was off on the left and was not in contact with the army of McDowell at the time. Therefore, if Johnston's nine thousand men had not been on that ground and fought the battle in connection with Beauregard's, McDowell would have been successful, for up to 4 o'clock he was successful, and had driven the enemy during the day, and the stampede was caused by one brigade of Johnston's troops, which came in and struck the flank of McDowell.

Therefore, I am justified in the assertion that by Fitz-John Porter persuading Patterson with 22,000 men to retreat from Winchester where Johnston had but 9,000, instead of attacking him, caused the failure of the first battle of Bull Run. Why did he do this? He did it, in my judgment, because McDowell was in command, as he showed up to the time he was dismissed his enmity to McDowell and Pope by sneers, by criticisms, and, in every way possible that he could show, his vindictiveness and his feeling toward these men.

So I insist that it was a part of the programme that no man should command the army of the East unless of their own choice, and as long as either McDowell or Pope did command they were thwarted by Porter and his friends. I shall show when I come to that point what one of those gentlemen stated in a telegram on the very day of the second battle of Bull Run to President Lincoln in reference to Pope getting out of his own scrape. It will not do for Senators to say that this man is being persecuted, when in every case where either McDowell or Pope were in command he caused their defeat by his own improper conduct.

So I assert that he caused the loss of the first battle of Bull Run as well as the second. The sworn statement that I have read, given by the officers under Patterson, who were present, sworn to by men who wanted to attack Johnston, sworn to by men who had troops prepared for the assault, shows that Patterson was dissuaded from giving the order through the influence of Fitz-John Porter. Therefore I say he caused the disaster of the first Bull Run, as well as the second.

Yesterday we were told that there was a change of sentiment on this subject. There may be, but I have not discovered it. I have not treated this case by sending resolutions up to the desk to be read from from some army post, or the letter of some soldier. I have treated it from the testimony. When Senators speak about a change of sentiment I can show in my room to-day thousands of letters and hundreds of resolutions to their one, from Grand Army posts, if I was so disposed; but I do not argue cases in that way. I argue this case from the facts, and not from outside letters claiming that Porter is being persecuted.

I do not consider that it is persecution to defend the action of men like Lincoln and Garfield and other men who condemned this man; and, as God is my judge, I would stand over the dust of Lincoln and swear to his act being honest and just; and, sir, I will take my chance of being judged by honest men to-day and by my God hereafter by the side of men who will to-day defame the name of Lincoln for the benefit of a man guilty of base treachery, and especially when men will undertake to distort or change the evidence for such a purpose.

Ah, sir, strange times these! The evidence of that is that if a man is a Democrat, and wants relief through Congress, he will always find Republicans enough on this side who will join that side to pass whatever bill is necessary for the purpose. You gentlemen on the opposite side make this a party question; and why? You gentlemen who were down in the confederacy know nothing about this case except what you have read. You did not know anything about the trial when it went on, about the feelings of the people, about the facts as then known, but now distorted. You come now and vote without reference to facts, out of pure sympathy for this man and out of a feeling against any act of Lincoln's. There are men on this side who are always ready to do apparently the same thing, and yet they claim great admiration for Mr. Lincoln.

It is strange, however, Mr. President, that every person who has been restored to the Army with high rank who was dismissed from the service or resigned because he was in sympathy with the rebellion was a Democrat and has been restored by votes of Republicans, who are ever ready to restore to honorable position Democrats, and at the same time to sneer at and criticise their own friends who made honorable records for themselves in defense of their country.

Why, sir, the highest pensions yet given have been given to Democrats, and your restorations to high places in the Army have been Democrats. It seems that in the minds of some that everything that the Republican party did during the war was wrong, and everything that Democrats did was right. We were told a few years ago that the legislation of the war should be reversed. It is being done every day, and it is being done by the votes of a few Republicans who seem to think that the way to sustain their friends is to declare everything done by them to have been wrong.

To-day we are sitting on the trial of Lincoln, Garfield, Hunter, and all of those men whose acts we once applauded, with Fitz-John Porter, the condemned man, as the prosecutor; and he finds his defenders on this side of the Chamber. He does not need any on that side to speak for him.

But, Mr. President, let us examine the facts for a moment. I do not, however, expect to convince any one by them, no matter how strong they may be, for if men are determined to do a thing they will do it no matter whether it is right or wrong; but let us see what the facts are. What was this man convicted of by a court-martial? Not because he was a Democrat, that was not it; but because he violated the law by disobeying orders that were given to him by General Pope, his commanding officer; because he not only violated the law in disobeying the orders, but because he showed by his letters and his language a contempt for his superior officer and an insubordination that could not be submitted to by any one in command of forces.

The evidence shows that on the 27th day of August, 1862, General Pope sent an order to Fitz-John Porter at Warrenton to start with his command to Bristoe Station at 1 o'clock the next morning. That was the morning of the 28th. That order was received at 9 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. Some of his generals under him were in his tent at the time. What was his language? Gentlemen who have commanded forces, no matter on which side, will understand this. Instead of saying to his officers, "Gentlemen, here is an order; our forces, our comrades, are in a battle at Bristoe Station"—there General Hooker and General Early had fought a battle that evening; our forces, as he was notified, were engaged, and that he must be there by daylight the next morning in order to re-enforce them—what did he say? What would you gentlemen have said? I ask any of you. His response was, "Gentlemen, there is an order for you to sleep on." That was his language sworn to. The Senator said he was advised otherwise, but those are exactly his words—"there is an order for you to sleep on."

General Butterfield and one or two others who were present said their troops were tired, and they consulted awhile. The Senator said yesterday it was a rainy night and thousands of wagons were in the road. I had at one time occasion to make figures and show how many wagons strung out, with four mules, would fill the road from Bristoe Station to Warrenton, which amazed some of the gentlemen who were talking about thousands of wagons. I will not go into that as it is not necessary.

What did he do? Did he move at 1 o'clock? Did he did get there at daylight? The Senator says there was no necessity for his getting there. How did he know that? How could he determine that there was no necessity? He received the order. He was under orders, and the evidence shows that no orders were issued by him to his troops except to tell them to be ready to move at 3 o'clock. His adjutant-general issued no order except the mere satement to be ready to move at 3 o'clock, except that the adjutant-general of General Morell went around and notified the troops.

Now, what did he do? Did he move at 3 o'clock even, instead of 1 as ordered? The Senator will not say so. Did he move at daylight? The Senator will not say so. He did not mount his horse until after sunrise, which is sworn to by witness after witness, and General Berdan, who was there in charge of the Berdan Sharpshooters, states the fact that he himself passed through the camp of the sleeping men after 3 o'clock with his command, and General Porter never mounted his horse until after sunrise, after he got his breakfast; and then he arrived at the head of the column at what time? At daylight? No, sir. The Senator said yesterday about 8 o'clock. That only shows how inaccurate he is. The sworn testimony is at 10.30. The sworn evidence of the general commanding is that he took out his watch when Porter arrived at the head of the column and it was ten and a half o'clock.

Why is it that men will state things that exist only in their own imagination? We might as well state the facts as they are. Fitz-John Porter was just as much justified in getting there at 10.30 o'clock if he did not move at the hour he was ordered, as at any other time; but that was the hour; he did not move until after sunrise, and the same Senator said yesterday it was a dark night and he could not move. Let us see whether he could or not.

I ask you, gentlemen, in a plain common-sense way to look at this thing. Why could he not move? The evidence shows that the trains were out of the way by 1 o'clock; that there was a dirt road on either side of the railroad that he could have marched over. It is shown by a great many witnesses, commanders of troops and others not commanding—I do not wish to read the names but I will give those of Murray, Hill, and Campbell, and fourteen others who swore positively that they marched that night, and one of the witnesses swears to marching with a brigade square across the country near Bristoe Station within a few miles of it and went into camp.

What else? After Early and Hooker had their fight at Bristoe Station, Early, after 8 o'clock at night, marched with his division, wagons and everything, from there to Centreville, and General Jackson marched that night his command from Centreville to Sudley Springs where he formed his line of battle the next day, and you tell me that Fitz-John Porter could not march 9 miles when a force of thirty thousand men that night on different roads marched the same number of miles and were ready to form a line of battle!

Mr. President, if you want to put this man on the retired-list, in God's name do it just because you have the numbers to do it, but do not do it by stating things that are not true. Do it because you have the power to do it, and not by trying to deceive the country and make the people believe a thing that is not the fact, and which has not been stated in the testimony. I assert that the evidence of Early, of Jackson, and their reports and those of others show that they moved that night, and yet this man could not move because it was dark, and he is a great soldier we are told!

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator said that the fact was that Early had been in a fight, and he said also he was out. Early says nothing about that.

Mr. LOGAN. The evidence shows that Porter was told that Hooker had but five rounds of ammunition left.

Mr. SEWELL. That occurred the day afterward.

Mr. LOGAN. The evidence is as I stated it. I understand the testimony about as well as anybody; I have read it about as often. But no matter about that; it would not change the night if he had no ammunition. Then, tell me why he did not move when every portion of the army of the enemy around him was moving the whole night and forming their lines, and he could not move to the support of one division commanded by General Hooker? Why, sir, it is perfectly astounding to one's common sense and comprehension to be told that a man could not move 9 miles when whole armies were moving at the same time.

That is not all. The night has never been so dark and the rainfall so heavy that the little Army of the Tennessee on the Mississippi River under the late Ulysses S. Grant could not and did not move. Never. I have seen that army move in the night, and I could name the time when it looked as if the windows of heaven were all opened and pouring down, and when it was so dark that the men had to almost feel their way sometimes to find the road; and yet they were able to fight a battle the next day at 12 o'clock.

Almost the only division confronting Jackson's whole army was in a fight that evening and expected to be attacked next morning at daylight, and he was asked to move 9 miles to be there at daylight to support his comrade who was facing that whole army, and he could not do it on account of the darkness of the night, and said: "Gentlemen, there is something for you to sleep on." That is the great soldier, that is the great patriot, that is the man who has been persecuted, that is the man who has been followed and pursued year after year, but now is going to get his rights, says the Senator. He had his rights years ago, a portion of them.

Let me state a little piece of secret history right here that I have not ventured to state before, but I will state it now. We all know of President Lincoln's kindly heart. When parties were excited all over the country, when it was questionable even in the North, as all here know, whether or not we should not have almost insurrection among our own people, and when everything had to be done to prevent trouble in the rear of our own Army, that poor man who has gone to his long home whispered kindly, "For God's sake do not require me to shoot a Democrat at this time." Not only that, but in Mr. Robert T. Lincoln's testimony before the board he swears that his father told him that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the sentence of death. And yet we are told that this man has been persecuted. There is the sworn testimony, just as I have repeated it.

There is one order then that he disobeyed. Not only that, but he did not try to obey it. There is something in an officer trying to obey an order although he may fail; but he did not try. He did not tell his men to get ready to move to be there by daylight. He did not tell them to move at 1 o'clock, 3 o'clock, or any other hour. He did not try to move. He did not move. When he did move he moved in such a manner as to be there at half past 10 at the head of his column.

The evidence sworn to by the quartermaster, Colonel Myers, who had tharge of the trains, shows that he parked the trains by the side of the road in the woods, and that if Porter had moved at any time between the hour that he was to start and daylight in the morning the trains would have been out of the road, but he moved so late in the morning that the head of the trains had come out after being parked in the woods and had entered the road and disturbed his passage for a short time. That is the evidence.

He disobeyed that order; and it will not do to offer the excuse that there was no fight the next morning. It is true there was none; but he did not know that it would be so; he did not understand that there was to be no fight. Pope thought he would be attacked next morning. It was perfectly natural for him to think so with thirty thousand men in his front, and he with only one division at Bristoe Station. Of course he supposed he would be attacked. The division there was Hooker's. The other divisions were on toward Thoroughfare Gap, so that he had to call them back next morning. I say Porter disobeyed that order.

Now, let us take the second part of the case, and I am not going to detain the Senate by reading, but I will show the facts in my statements as I cite them from the sworn testimony. Now, the question between the Senator and myself I will state in about this way: I believe the Senator says that if there was not a force in front of Porter at the time when he was ordered to fight sufficient to overcome him he was not justified in refusing to obey the order. I think the Senator will agree to that; but the Senator insists that there were twenty-five thousand men right in his front, and therefore he would have been destroyed if he had advanced to the assault.

If that were the case and you gentlemen were jurors to-day and the question turned upon whether there were twenty-five thousand or eight thousand men in his front, he having many more than eight thousand—if that was the only question in the case how would you determine it? You would determine it by the evidence. If the evidence proved that there were twenty-five thousand men in his immediate front, as the Senator says, you might determine it in his favor perhaps, although it was his duty to attack, no matter if there were twenty-five thousand in his front. It can not be denied that all the reports, both of Union officers and confederate officers at the time of the battle when all understood the facts and reported them, no matter what may have come over the minds of some since out of friendship, that all disagree with the claim of Porter and the statement of the Senator. I make the assertion that you can not find a single report of an Union officer or a confederate officer that will sustain the statement of the Senator from New Jersey; but every report contradicts it. If that is so and you were jurors to decide this case, how would you decide it—on the testimony or against the testimony merely because you desired it that way? Would that be the decision, tell me?

I am not going to discuss all these orders; I am not going to call up the joint order to McDowell and Porter, but the proposition as to what he did at the time, that we may not confuse matters but have the facts in a nutshell. What is it? He moved under orders to Dawkin's Branch. We will all agree to that. Here is the road running to Centreville from Gainesville down here. [Indicating]. Here is Dawkin's Branch; here is the Manassas Gap Railroad running up here to Gainesville. [Indicating.] Here is the road that Porter was on running from Bristoe Station to Gainesville. [Indicating.] Over here is the turnpike, and here is the battlefield of Groveton. [Indicating.] Dawkin's Branch is nearly 3 miles from Groveton. Dawkin's Branch is 5 miles from Gainesville and 2½ miles from Pageland lane. He moved, the Senator says, with eleven thousand men. I will take his statement, but the report of Fitz-John Porter himself says he had fourteen thousand that morning. His morning report shows fourteen thousand men, and yet the Senator says eleven thousand men. I will take the eleven thousand for the sake of the argument. When he arrived at Dawkin's Branch at 11 o'clock there was nothing but a little line of cavalry away up on a hill in his front. He was at Dawkin's Branch with his corps. McDowell with his corps was moving behind him; coming up and finding that it was not convenient for them both to get in there, McDowell went back to Bethel Chapel and took that road with his command and King's division, moved off to the right and joined Pope, so that he went into the line of Pope's army against Jackson and left Fitz-John Porter at Dawkin's Branch. These are the facts, up to this point.

The evidence shows that the firing commenced at daylight and the battle proper opened at 9 o'clock. General Lee says in his report, and so does Longstreet, that having encamped beyond Thoroughfare Gap on the night of the 28th, at daylight the morning of the 29th they heard the firing, and believing a battle was on hand, they hurried to get forward. They came forward with their troops to Pageland Lane. There Longstreet formed a double line on the right of Jackson with quite a space between them, so that when he moved down he would come in exactly on his (Jackson's) right. That was on the road from Thoroughfare Gap or Gainesville to Centreville, called the turnpike road.

Off to the left of Pope, but not facing Longstreet as stated, 2½ or 3 miles away, was Fitz-John Porter at Dawkin's Branch with the head of his column. His troops staid there the whole day while the battle was being fought, which was of a furious character, and the adjutant-general's reports show that the losses on the 29th were more than the losses on the 30th. General Jackson states that his whole command was engaged, some thirty thousand men, and on the Union side the reports show that the whole command was engaged, every regiment, and the regiment that the Senator commanded on that day was so furiously engaged, as he himself says in his own report, which I have here, that he got out of ammunition and had to change his battalions, shift their positions one in place of the other, on that account. Is not that so? Here is his own report showing that fact, and yet the argument has been made all the time that there was no battle on the 29th, that it was a mere skirmish, and that therefore Fitz-John Porter was not required to take part in it; and yet the reports show that the battle lasted from 9 o'clock in the morning until 11 o'clock at night, and the losses on our side were heavy, seven thousand being killed, wounded, and missing. That is the report of the medical department.

That being the case, why is it that this man did not go there to the support of his own friends? He said because he was confronted by twenty-five thousand men and therefore he could not go. Now, let me give the facts as they are sworn to. Fitz-John Porter was not at Dawkin's Branch after he first went up there with his corps. He went back himself to Bethel chapel, 3 miles to the rear, and there he staid under a tree the whole day, and his entire corps was lining that road with arms stacked from 11 o'clock in the morning until after 8 o'clock that night. These are the facts, sworn to by his own officers and men. During the day General Sturgis came up with his brigade, rode over on the old Manassas Gap Railroad and discovered the enemy up that road and told Porter that batteries were being put in line to assault Pope, but no attention was paid to it; and what did Sturgis get for his suggestion? He got ordered back. So it was with others. Other men made suggestions.

The artillery and musketry fire continued all day, and the soldiers heard it and were panting for battle with the enemy for the protection of their own friends; and this man lay there under an oak tree. He says that twenty-five thousand men were in his front and he 3 miles from his own front. How did he know? How did he ascertain? Who told him? It is to be found nowhere in the testimony. In his first statement before the court-martial he claimed that there were fifteen thousand troops in his front, and now he changes it to twenty-five thousand. How did he know that? He not only claimed that these men were in his front, but at the same time that he knew they were in his front, he says the woods were so thick he could not march his men through them to General Pope. If that was the case, how could he tell there was anybody in his front? Yet that is what he states. Was he in communication with the enemy? If not, how did he ascertain what he claims? No one else discovered it then or since, except in imagination.

Now, let us go a little further. The Senator says, or at least intimates, that the old maxim "that you must march to the sound of the enemy's guns" is not a correct principle. "A true soldier will march to the sound of the enemy's guns." The Senator does not believe that, because if he did he would condemn Porter, for Porter did not do it. Porter heard the guns all day. He did not form a line of battle except of one regiment across the branch, and then withdrew them and hid his men in the woods.

Why did he not march to the sound of the enemy's guns? He was ordered to go to Gainesville in the morning in order to strike Longstreet or any other force that might be coming from Thoroughfare Gap, and he stopped at this place, his troops remained there all day, and he went back 3 miles where he remained. He did not go to the front at all until after he received this 4.30 order, which is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS IN THE FIELD, August 29—4.30 p. m.

MAJOR-GENERAL PORTER: Your line of march brings you in on the enemy's right flank. I desire you to push forward into action at once on the enemy's flank, and if possible on his rear, keeping your right in communication with General Reynolds. The enemy is massed in the woods in front of us, but can be shelled out as soon as you engage their flank. Keep heavy reserves and use your batteries, keeping well closed to your right all the time. In case you are obliged to fall back, do so to your right and rear, so as to keep you in close communication with the right wing.

JOHN POPE,
Major-General, Commanding.

Then he went out to see what was going on and directed Morell to put a line of battle out, ordered out two regiments and commenced forming a line and then they got an order from Porter to go into camp for the night. That was the way he complied with that order, and yet the Senator says he carried out the order as far as he could. It was very strange that he could not move when General Lee and General Longstreet both report that they put Wilcox's division, after being withdrawn from Jones, into the fight after 6 o'clock against McDowell. Porter could not go in, but the commanders on the other side could. Is not that a strange process of reasoning by which to arrive at a correct conclusion about these things when one set of men can do that which the other can not, and why? For want of disposition and nothing else. If Porter had followed the old maxim and moved to the sound of the enemy's guns, he would have moved right on and attacked Longstreet no matter how many men he had.

I made the statement here once before, and if any of you will read General Grant's story of the battle to which I allude you will find it corroborated, that thirty thousand men were in line assaulting two divisions of about ten thousand men, one little brigade of not over twenty-five hundred men; and a general officer moved through the woods around in the rear of those thirty thousand men and opened fire on their rear, stampeded the whole army, captured thirteen pieces of cannon and more men than his brigade had. This occurred during the war at Champion's Hill. There was one little brigade of twenty-five hundred men that took the chance of being destroyed, but they did it to save the other two divisions, and stampeded the whole thirty thousand of the enemy. This was the proper feeling and determination.

Porter had eleven thousand or fourteen thousand men. He did not move. If he had he would have been destroyed, he says. This thing of destroying an army is an absurdity, unless you get them inside of a fort, or a place where it is impossible to get out. Men who know anything about war know better. Fitz-John Porter knows better.

Now, let me see whether the Senator is justified in saying that there were twenty-five thousand men in Fitz-John Porter's front. I will take no testimony whatever to condemn the statement except the testimony of confederates. Here is General Longstreet's report made soon after the battle. I ask your attention to his report, for that is what the friends of Porter rely upon, and I will read a letter to you afterward to show you that he did not claim more than twenty-five thousand men in his whole command present and not present.

General Longstreet, in his report, says:

HEADQUARTERS NEAR WINCHESTER, VA., October 10, 1862.

* * * * * * *

Early on the 29th (August) the columns were united, and the advance to join General Jackson was resumed. The noise of battle was heard before we reached Gainesville. The march was quickened to the extent of our capacity. The excitement of battle seemed to give new life and strength to our jaded men, and the head of my column soon reached a position in rear of the enemy's left flank and within easy cannon-shot.

On approaching the field some of Brigadier-General Hood's batteries were ordered into position, and his division was deployed on the right and left of the turnpike, at right angles with it, and supported by Brigadier-General Evans's brigade. Before these batteries could open the enemy discovered our movements and withdrew his left. Another battery (Captain Stribling's) was placed upon a commanding position to my right, which played upon the rear of the enemy's left and drove him entirely from that part of the field. He changed his front rapidly, so as to meet the advance of Hood and Evans.

Three brigades, under General Wilcox, were thrown forward to the support of the left, and three others, under General Kemper, to the support of the right of these commands. General D. R. Jones's division was placed upon the Manassas Gap Railroad—

Not on this road [indicating] that Porter was on—upon the Manassas Gap Railroad, to the right and in echelon with regard to the three last brigades. Colonel Walton placed his batteries in a commanding position between my line and that of General Jackson, and engaged the enemy for several hours in a severe and successful artillery duel. At a late hour in the day Major-General Stuart reported the approach of the enemy in heavy columns against my extreme right. I withdrew General Wilcox with his three brigades from the left, and placed his command in position to support Jones in case of an attack against my right. After some few shots the enemy withdrew his forces, moving them around toward his front, and about 4 o'clock in the afternoon began to press forward against General Jackson's position. Wilcox's brigades were moved back to their former position, and Hood's two brigades, supported by Evans, were quickly pressed forward to the attack. At the same time Wilcox's three brigades made a like advance, as also Hunton's brigade of Kemper's command.

These movements were executed with commendable zeal and ability. Hood, supported by Evans, made a gallant attack, driving the enemy back till 9 o'clock at night.

* * * * * * *

Three brigades, under General Wilcox, were thrown forward to the support of the left, and three others, under General Kemper, to the support of the right of these commands. General D. R. Jones's division—

Speaking of Jackson's command—was placed upon the Manassas Gap Railroad, to the right and in echelon with regard to the three last brigades.

The Manassas Gap Railroad ran between the turnpike and the road upon which Porter was. He was a mile and a half at least from the Manassas Gap Railroad. There was a high piece of ground there at the Manassas Gap Railroad, and this man Jones went over there and planted a couple of pieces of artillery on this mound or rise in the ground. Longstreet, speaking of the position of his troops, says:

Colonel Walton placed his batteries in a commanding position between my line and that of General Jackson, and engaged the enemy for several hours in a severe and successful artillery duel. At a late hour in the day Major-General Stuart reported the approach of the enemy in heavy columns against my extreme right. I withdrew General Wilcox with his three brigades from the left, and placed his command in position to support Jones in case of an attack against my right.

That is where Jones was on the Manassas Gap Railroad.

After some few shots the enemy withdrew his forces, moving them around toward his front, and about 4 o'clock in the afternoon began to press forward against General Jackson's position.

To show you that they are mistaken when they speak of moving up against his right, it is stated that this column was moving against Longstreet's right, but Longstreet shows that it was McDowell's force that was moving; McDowell was moving up on that road, and coming in here late in the afternoon and moving on down to the left of Pope, so that they commenced pressing back and threw out his right; Jones being on the extreme right over on the Manassas Gap Railroad. Now follow that a little further.

After some few shots the enemy withdrew his forces, moving them around toward his front, and about 4 o'clock in the afternoon began to press forward against General Jackson's position. Wilcox's brigades were moved back to their former position.

That shows that it was not Porter's forces, because Porter's forces never pressed against Jackson's position or against Jackson's men. They were never within 3 miles of Jackson's men during the whole day; and so it was McDowell's forces, and not Porter's.

Wilcox's brigades were moved back to their former position, and Hood's two brigades, supported by Evans, were quickly pressed forward to the attack.

Wilcox was sent to the right to support D. R. Jones, as I said yesterday and I continue it that way for the sake of the argument, and I believe that is the fact although this would seem to show differently, though I think that is the meaning of it—Wilcox was sent forward to support Jones on the Manassas road, but he said at 4 o'clock the enemy having withdrawn he withdrew Wilcox and put him back in support of Evans. Evans had gone into the fight at Groveton. So he withdrew Wilcox at 4 o'clock, and then at 4 o'clock, according to Longstreet's own report, there was not a soldier anywhere near Fitz-John Porter except the command which was on the Manassas Gap Railroad.

Now let me put these things together and see how many troops that would make. What was Longstreet's force? Longstreet had Hood's division, Kemper's division, Jones's division, and Wilcox's division. There were four divisions under Longstreet on that day, the 29th, in and around Groveton. Longstreet says in his letter that "twenty-five thousand men was my command all told." What does he mean by "all told?" If he means twenty-five thousand on the battlefield that is one thing; if he means to include Anderson's division that is another thing. Anderson's division was assigned to Longstreet, yet Anderson's divison, according to General Lee's report and Anderson's own report, did not arrive until the night of the 29th. It was not on the battlefield that day, so that Logstreet had on that day four divisions, Hood's, Kemper's, Jones's, and Wilcox's. What does he say? He put Kemper and Hood and Wilcox in on the left, and he put Jones on the Manassas Gap Railroad to his right afterward, and withdrew Wilcox to support Jones. Then at 4 o'clock he withdrew Wilcox and sent him to support Evans, and Evans was the commander of one of the brigades of one of those divisions. Then at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, according to Longstreet's report—

Hood's two brigades, supported by Evans, were quickly pressed forward to the attack.

That was at 4 o'clock. Hood's division with Evans's brigade was quickly pressed forward to the attack, and Wilcox's division—not a brigade but a whole division—was sent to the support of Evans. Where were they? As Longstreet said they were engaged on Jackson's right at Groveton, at least 2½ or 3 miles from where this man Porter was; and yet is said there were twenty-five thousand of the enemy in his front. Where do they get the twenty-five thousand from? Where did they come from? From D. R. Jones's division? How many did D. R. Jones have? Will some gentleman tell me? Did he have over five thousand men? Did he have six thousand? If Longstreet had twenty-five thousand men in the four divisions, that would make over six thousand in each division. Three divisions were away, were engaged in the battle at Groveton, and one division in front of Porter, and it could not possibly have been over six or seven thousand strong. There is what General Longstreet says. I do not know whether he understood his own command or not. He was said to be a very efficient general; at least I have always understood so. There is his report made directly after the battle, stating these facts; it has never been contradicted, but is supported by the reports of all his commanders.

In order to sustain what I say about that, let me call your attention to General Longstreet's letter to Fitz-John Porter written long after, in 1875:

My command (twenty-five thousand in round numbers) was within supporting distance of General Jackson—

He does not say anything about Fitz-John Porter—

My command (twenty-five thousand in round numbers)—

He does not say how many, but in round numbers about twenty-five thousand, were in supporting distance of Jackson at the time Porter mentions eleven or twelve or whatever it was. He claims but twenty-five thousand in his whole command.

Make the division to suit yourself and he could not have had over six or seven thousand men in front of Porter at any time, and then not in his front but near enough to be within striking distance of one another. So this story about Fitz-John Porter having twenty-five thousand men right in his front to eat him up is not true, and men who read these facts know that it is not true.

It was insinuated that one of the greatest men of the age had said there were twenty-five thousand men in Porter's front, and therefore he ought not to have attacked. Admit that he said that. He said that based upon what? Based upon the hypothesis that there were twenty-five thousand men there in his front, proven by testimony. If this great general who said that could he have had the facts given to him to show that twenty-five thousand men were not there his opinion would have been very different, but he was led to the belief absolutely by the persistent statements of men such as have been made here that there were twenty-five thousand men in Porter's front. Then he said if that was the case he was justified in not attacking. Read his letter. It is based on the idea that there were twenty-five thousand men in Porter's front.

In order that we may not be mistaken about this thing, let me read what General Lee says, the report of Robert E. Lee. And I am reading the reports as they were made by these generals at the time, and reading the reports as printed by this board which excused Porter, copied from the confederate records here in the War Department by the friends of Porter, copied to justify him, and let me read you the justification. If you will read the report of this board—and there is where these people all go for their testimony—you will find that it has made this false impression all over this country by stating that Porter had twenty-five thousand men in his immediate front when there is not one scintilla of testimony to be found anywhere that would justify anybody in making such a statement. Let me read carefully what General Lee said:

I now desire to call attention to the report of General Robert E. Lee of the first day, second Bull Run, August 29, 1862. It is as follows:

* * * * * * *

On the morning of the 29th the whole command resumed the march, the sound of cannon at Manassas announcing that Jackson was already engaged. Longstreet entered the turnpike near Gainesville, and moving down toward Groveton the head of his column came upon the field in rear of the enemy's left, which had already opened with artillery upon Jackson's right, as previously described. He immediately placed some of his batteries in position, but before he could complete his dispositions to attack the enemy withdrew, not, however, without loss from our artillery.

Longstreet took possession (position?) on the right of Jackson, Hood's two brigades, supported by Evans, being deployed across the turnpike and at right angles to it. These troops were supported on the left by three brigades under General Wilcox, and by a like force on the right under General Kemper. D. R. Jones's division formed the extreme right of the line, resting on the Manassas Gap Railroad. The cavalry guarded our right and left flanks, that on the right being under General Stuart in person. After the arrival of Longstreet, the enemy changed his position, and began to concentrate opposite Jackson's left, opening a brisk artillery fire, which was responded to with effect by some of General A. P. Hill's batteries.

Colonel Walton placed a part of his artillery upon a commanding position between Generals Jackson and Longstreet, by order of the latter, and engaged the enemy vigorously for several hours. Soon afterward General Stuart reported the approach of a large force from the direction of Bristoe Station threatening Longstreet's right. The brigades under General Wilcox were sent to reenforce General Jones, but no serious attack was made, and after firing a few shots the enemy withdrew. While this demonstration was being made on our right a large force advanced to assail the left of General Jackson's position, occupied by the division of General A. P. Hill. The attack was received by his troops with their accustomed steadiness, and the battle raged with great fury.

On the morning of the 29th the whole command resumed the march—

Mark the language—

the sound of cannon at Manassas announcing that Jackson was already engaged. Longstreet entered the turnpike near Gainesville and moving down toward Groveton—

Not down toward Dawkin's Branch, not toward Bristoe Station, but Groveton where the battle was raging—the head of his column came upon the field in rear of the enemy's left.

The head of Longstreet's column came upon the field in the rear of the enemy's. That was in the rear of whose left? The left of Pope then engaged with Jackson, not the rear of Porter. The Senator himself will not claim that, but in the rear of the troops engaged with Jackson at Grovetown—

Which had already opened with artillery upon Jackson's right, as previously described. He immediately placed some of his batteries in position, but before he could complete his dispositions to attack, the enemy withdrew—

Now, mark, before Longstreet "could complete his dispositions to attack, the enemy withdrew—not, however, without loss from our artillery. Longstreet took possession (position?) on the right of Jackson, Hood's two brigades, supported by Evans, being deployed across the turnpike, and at right angles to it—

There is Hood's division with two brigades—supported by Evans, being deployed across the turnpike, and at right angles to it.

What is the turnpike? The turnpike from Gainesville to Centreville upon which Groveton is located and upon which the battle was fought, not the Manassas Gap Railroad, not the dirt-road from Bristoe to Gainesville, but the turnpike road 3 miles away from where Mr. Porter was at that time.

These troops were supported on the left by three brigades—

Mark the number—

by three brigades under General Wilcox, and by a like force on the right under General Kemper.

There they are. There is Hood, there is Kemper, and there is Wilcox. The three divisions that I have mentioned are there now at Groveton, on the turnpike road, on Jackson's extreme right, facing our battle line. Now, what else? These troops were supported on the left by these three brigades.

D. R. Jones's division formed the extreme right of the line, resting on the Manassas Gap Railroad. The cavalry guarded our right and left flanks, that on the right being under General Stuart in person. After the arrival of Longstreet the enemy changed his position and began to concentrate opposite Jackson's left.

That was away down; Jackson's right rested exactly on the Groveton road at or near Groveton, and his left down at the Gap railroad near Sudley Springs.

After the arrival of Longstreet the enemy changed his position, and began to concentrate opposite Jackson's left, opening a brisk artillery fire, which was responded to with effect by some of General A. P. Hill's batteries. Colonel Walton placed a part of his artillery upon a commanding position between Generals Jackson and Longstreet—

Walton commanded part of Longstreet's troops, one of his brigade commanders under one of those division commanders—

by order of the latter, and engaged the enemy vigorously for several hours. Soon afterward General Stuart reported the approach of a large force from the direction of Bristoe Station, threatening Longstreet's right. The brigades under General Wilcox were sent to re-enforce General Jones, but no serious attack was made, and after firing a few shots the enemy withdrew.

The explanation of that is this: Porter says and his officers say that they discovered an enemy in force, a few shots were fired, and he ordered his forces to hide in the woods, which they did, and that explains the fact that Lee says the enemy withdrew. Then what did he do?

While this demonstration was being made on our right a large force advanced to assail the left of General Jackson's position, occupied by the division of General A. P. Hill. The attack was received by his troops with their accustomed steadiness, and the battle raged with great fury. The enemy was repeatedly repulsed, but again pressed on the attack with fresh troops. Once he succeeded in penetrating an interval between General Gregg's brigade, on the extreme left, and that of General Thomas, but was quickly driven back with great slaughter by the Fourteenth South Carolina Regiment, then in reserve, and the Forty-ninth Georgia, of Thomas's brigade. The contest was close and obstinate; the combatants sometimes delivered their fire at ten paces.

Then, after going into details, he proceeds to say that the three brigades under Wilcox were then withdrawn and put in support of Evans, just as Longstreet said. Now, according to Lee and according to Longstreet you have three of Longstreet's divisions in battle at Groveton, and Jones over on the extreme right, on the Manassas Gap Railroad threatening Porter, as Porter says, in front, but it was not in front, and I will show you how. Porter's line ran up to this branch. Say the branch is there. [Indicating.] The Manassas Gap Railroad ran along between the road he was on, which was a dirt road—the turnpike, at least a mile and a half away from his line. So it was diagonally across. It might be considered his front if he had thrown out his line to the right, but it was diagonally across, and therefore he considered it in his front. But that is the force which was in his front; that is all the force that was in his front except the short time that Wilcox was there with his three brigades up to 4 o'clock, when he was withdrawn and went into battle. Longstreet and Lee both say that they remained there until 9 o'clock at night. I am reading from Longstreet now.

These movements were executed with commendable zeal and ability. Hood, supported by Evans, made a gallant attack, driving the enemy back till 9 o'clock at night.

There is the statement that these troops of Longstreet were at Groveton opposing Pope's command up to 9 o'clock at night, and yet it has been contended here over and over again that these men were in front of Fitz-John Porter all day opposite Dawkin's Branch. I am perfectly astounded, I must confess, at the statements which are made and reiterated day after day in reference to the position of these troops when every report contradicts them. Longstreet, Lee, Wilcox, Hood, and all of them show that they were engaged there until 9, and some of them say until 11 o'clock at night, in front of Groveton, and at the same time insist that these troops were in front of Porter.

Mr. SEWELL. The left of Longstreet's forces were on Jackson's right.

Mr. LOGAN. The left of Longstreet's forces then were engaged on Jackson's right, were they not? If three divisions of Longstreet were engaged with Pope, how many divisions were left to be engaged with Porter? Only one; and yet you say the whole twenty-five thousand were in front of Porter, while at the same time you admit they were on Jackson's right.

Mr. SEWELL. Longstreet's men were deployed on the right of Jackson. In order to carry out the order of Pope to attack the right flank of Jackson Porter must necessarily have encountered the twenty-five thousand men of Longstreet.

Mr. LOGAN. That is the statement. Let me answer that. In order to carry out the order of Pope, says the Senator, to move on Jackson's flank, Porter must necessarily have beaten twenty-five thousand men. Let us see. All of Longstreet's command were engaged with Pope fighting his troops, except one division. Now, if Porter had attacked, Porter's force would have been fighting these men as well as Pope's force, so there would have been two to one of them and he would not have had to whip twenty-five thousand, because all except six thousand were having about as good a time as they could have at Groveton. They were fighting another set of men, another command. Porter would have had to whip six thousand men and no more; and when he had whipped Jones's division he would have got to Longstreet, who was engaged with McDowell, and would have been on his flank and ruined his army, I do not care what any one says to the contrary.

It will not do for a man to undertake to tell me that no one can know anything about military movements except Porter and his friends, from the fact that we do not understand the question as he does. We do know the difference between one and two, and I know that when eighteen thousand of Longstreet's men were fighting an equal number of Pope's men and McDowell's men, if Porter had attacked with the same number of men there would have been two of us fighting one of them. That much I do know, whether you call it military science or not, and it is an absolute absurdity for any one to tell me that Fitz-John Porter could not attack at 4 o'clock or 6 o'clock or any other time because twenty-five thousand men were in his front. I do not care if all the generals on earth had said it. Because a great general has said that there were twenty-five thousand men in his front, and therefore he was justified in not attacking, the fact is not proved. That general was made to believe that twenty-five thousand men were in his front, but he was deceived, as men are deceived all the time, by false statements. If there were twenty-five thousand men in front of Porter he would have to whip twenty-five thousand men, while in fact there were eighteen thousand of those men then engaged in battle and in a fight with other troops.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. Does he wish it to go to the country that a statement made by a board composed of Schofield, Terry, and Getty is a deliberate falsehood?

Mr. LOGAN. I will answer the Senator. I say it ought to go to the country that the statement made by Schofield, Terry, and Getty is not true. You may call that what you please. It is not true. I do not accuse those men of intentionally falsifying; but I mean that the facts do not sustain their statement, and you make your statement on theirs, and so did that great general of whom you speak, when their statement is not sustained by the facts. I can read testimony as well as they can. I know as much law as either of them, and can judge of evidence as well, and I say their statement is not justified by the facts. You seem to think that because a man belongs to the Army his statements must be taken as true against the judgment of all mankind. I am not in that frame of mind. The board says there were twenty-five thousand men, and therefore you say it and ask, will you contradict those three great men? I say, yes, I will, for the evidence contradicts them, and the evidence tells them that their statement then made about it is not based on the truth.

General Lee says that all of Longstreet's command were in battle at Groveton until 9 o'clock at night except Jones's division and three brigades of Wilcox's division that were withdrawn to support Jones, and then taken from him and sent back at 4 o'clock and remained in battle until 9 o'clock, and the time between 11 o'clock and 4 o'clock, when he was with Jones, and then up to 9 o'clock at night they were withdrawn from Jones, and no men were in front of Porter except Jones's command, which was not over six thousand men. That is a fact testified to, stated by Lee, by Longstreet, by Wilcox, by Walton, and by each and every one of the confederate officers and stated in their reports, and then you ask me to stultify the record because the board says there were twenty-five thousand men there, when there is not a scintilla of testimony to base that assertion upon.

Boards are very nice things sometimes; but their members are unsworn. Some men can obtain position in this country above others; some men are decorated to such an extent that anything they say is taken against the evidence of anybody else. If a man only rubs against a certain school in this country he never can be questioned, no matter what he says. Some of them failed during the last war, and because some of us have questioned their conduct we are to be denounced and by men who fondle for praise. Bend and bow to them if you wish; where I find wrong I will denounce it, no matter from whence it comes.

Now let us go a little further. I say it was Fitz-John Porter's duty to attack the enemy whether he received the order to do so or not. Will the Senator dispute that? Does he not think so? I say that it was Fitz-John Porter's duty to attack the enemy when a battle was going on and he found an enemy in his front whether he received an order or not. What do you say to that?

It is not necessary, the Senator says, to answer it. Let us see. I will read from the report of Fitz-John Porter made July 7, 1862. This battle was fought August 29, 1862. A little over a month before this battle Fitz-John Porter said this:

> In the mean time Sykes, hard pressed on the right, maintaining his ground with all the obstinacy of the regulars and the spirit of the volunteers, required support, and Bartlett's brigade, of Slocum's division, was sent to his relief. A portion, however, of Newton's brigade had already been pushed in to the assistance of his left.

There was another officer, however.

> Previous to the arrival of Slocum's brigade, Reynolds, having repulsed the enemy in his front, and hearing the tremendous contest on his left, had, acting under a true maxim and with the generous spirit of a soldier, moved to the sound of cannon, and led his men, regiment after regiment, where our hard-pressed forces required most assistance.

That is Fitz-John Porter. Reynolds hearing a terrible contest on his left, imbued with the spirit of a true soldier, without orders moved to the sound of the guns and led one regiment after another into the contest. That is what Porter thought of Reynolds at that time. Now, what do you suppose Reynolds thinks of him? A little more than one month before that time, speaking of a brother officer, where he without orders, following the old maxim, led his soldiers to the rescue of his friends—one regiment after another into the contest. I do not think he could complain when he was accused of disobeying orders. When he was ordered to lead his troops into the contest he refused to even lead them with orders, although the sound of the guns was in his ears the whole day. He failed to lead in accordance with orders, and yet he is to be crowned and ornamented by the vote of the Senate as a great soldier and patriot and honorable man that has been crushed in spirit by the infamous conduct of Abraham Lincoln and Garfield and men like them, as you must say when you relieve this man. You put your foot upon the dead bodies of these men and denounce them for having perpetrated a wrong against a man who admits himself, by his very language here, only a little over a month before, the time that he himself failed, when he eulogizes a man for doing what he did not do and passes an encomium upon him as a great and brave soldier because he marched to the sound of the enemy's guns, and he, neither marching to the sound nor in obedience to orders, is claimed on this floor as an example to be held up to this country.

But a few days ago at the academy where he was educated, one of his classmates leaves the impression on his hearers that the reputation of a man who passes through that institution is always sacred; no matter what he may do he can not be denounced; and this country was told right from the rostrum there that this man was a persecuted man, the martyr of the age.

Who has persecuted him? Is he to pursue men like Pope and Lincoln and Stanton and Garfield and Hunter and all these brave men, and ask that their conduct be denounced in this country and his maintained in the violation of law and orders, and while many of these men are in their graves—it is no matter what may be said in derogation of them, provided you sustain the traitorous conduct of this man to his superior officer? Is that the education this country is to have? Are we to be told at West Point that this man is the martyr of the age? There was no other martyr. Lincoln was not a martyr to freedom of course; the men who suffered on the battlefield were not martyrs to the freedom of this great country, but this man who failed to do his duty is the martyr of the age! Future generations will find more martyrs than one and of a different stamp.

Mr. President, when this course of conduct is sustained in the halls that once rang with the voice of patriotism in opposition to the voice of treason, when this man having proved himself treacherous to his commanding officer and unfaithful to his trust, appeals to the country with a majority in one House of his own political friends and almost an equal number in the other, men who have not, perhaps, in times gone by felt toward this great country as we have done, what are we to expect? It ill becomes you to make a martyr of him who was prosecuted and convicted while Lincoln was President. It ill becomes you thus to reverse the law, to reverse the course of our own people, and to reverse the wheels that rolled along the pathway of civilization and freedom, for the benefit of a man who pandered to the prejudices that were greater and stronger than his honor and his patriotism, that he may be given the record of a patriot like Lincoln, Stanton, Garfield, and such men. And yet we find men in this Chamber who were patriots true, and who now come in as shining lights who are willing to record themselves against these dead patriots and against their conduct to sustain the infamy of a living man that they may keep promises or obtain the influence of a certain class. Strike your friends, dead or alive, that your enemies may applaud, is the motto of some. Sir, it is not mine. Why, sir, in all ages every revolution has had its Arnold, every Cæsar has had his Brutus, and the last war had its Porter.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a very peculiar order. General McClellan had been directed by General Halleck to send General Franklin's corps to the support of Pope; that General Franklin started on one day, and on the second day he was 5 miles from where he started, evidently not intending to get to Pope or support him. He never did get there in fact, and he did not try to get there, although he had a full corps.

General McClellan was ordered time and again to press him forward, and yet he gave his orders to Franklin in such a way that Franklin could construe them to go or not to go, and he did not go. During the day of the battle of the 29th of August at 2 o'clock, after McClellan had been ordered time and again to send Franklin to the support of Pope, I desire to read you a telegram that he sent to the President of the United States. I do not suppose very many of you have read this telegram; at any rate it has not been generally known:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, 29th August—2.45 p. m.

That was after the battle had been raging for six hours. Now mark the language:

> The last news I received from the direction of Manassas was from stragglers to the effect that the enemy were evacuating Centreville and retiring toward Thoroughfare Gap.

They had evacuated Centreville on the night of the 27th and gone to Sudley Springs railroad-cut and formed the line of battle, which commenced on the morning of the 29th, and General McClellan, when he was in telegraphic communication with that army as close as that, ought to have known at least the time the confederate forces evacuated Centreville. He says:

> This is by no means reliable. I am clear that one of two courses should be adopted. First, to concentrate all our available forces to open communications with Pope.

He had been ordered time and again to send Franklin to Pope.

> Second, to leave Pope to get out of his scrape and at once use all our means to make the capital perfectly safe. No middle course will now answer. Tell me what you wish me to do and I will do all in my power to accomplish it. I wish to know what my orders and authority are. I ask for nothing, but will obey whatever orders you give. I only ask a prompt decision that I may at once give the necessary orders. It will not do to delay longer.

GEO. B. McCLELLAN, Major-General.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, President.

Was not that a beautiful dispatch for him to send to the President of the United States on the 29th of August, when the battle had been going on for six hours, and he had been ordered for two days to send support to Pope, and he says the first thing to do is to open communication with Pope. There is the manner in which that man Pope was treated, and I am justified in saying that there was a conspiracy against him not to allow him to win a battle, and Fitz-John Porter was a party to it. It was not intended that Pope should win a battle. You may take the letters of Porter, the dispatches of McClellan, the movements of Franklin, and all conspire together to prove the fact that Pope was sacrificed by a conspiracy in which this man Porter was, in my judgment, a chief mover.

There are a good many other things that will come out later, not perhaps in this direction, but in relation to the war, that are not now known, which will convince this country after awhile that there were men in our camps who were not in earnest.

Mr. President, I have but little more to say in reference to this question. This is the fourth time I have discussed it in the Senate. I have always discussed it more fully than I have to-day for the reason that I have heretofore gone through all the orders and read the reports, and the Senate has heard them over and over again. I have omitted everything to-day except to state a few points with reference to two orders and in reference to the disobedience of those orders.

I do not expect to be heard again on this question or to have anything further to say about it, but I want to say in the presence of the Senate that when insinuations are made against men who have tried to do their duty in seeing that this man shall not disgrace the Army by being restored to it, in seeing that our Army shall be kept as pure as possible and as much above reproach as possible, they are made by men with no appreciation of our motives. I have a pride in that little army; I have a pride in the honor of this country and in the glory that is to come to it in the future, I feel as every one ought to feel, that men who failed in the time of trial and of peril in sustaining their country, when they were placed on the side of their Government, should not be loaded with honors now. And if men are so constituted that they can not help allowing their prejudices to override their judgment so as to cause them to unfaithfully perform their duty on account of some particular antipathy toward another individual, they ought not to accept duty on any side.

Our Army should be taught that in this and all other countries armies are made to obey. Armies are made to be subject to the law the same as individuals. Armies are made to be subject to the courts, to be subject to trial, to be subject to punishment, and all that is imposed upon any citizen may be imposed or inflicted upon them.

I say to you now, if this man had been tried by a civil court no one would ever have come before the Congress of the United States and asked that the judgment of the court should be disturbed for one moment in violation of the Constitution, as I believe it is. It is not only that the disgrace is attempted to be wiped out so far as he is concerned that this is to be done, but it is done by the votes of leading men of this country who were opposed to the country during the war, and the reputation of Lincoln and men like him are to be stricken down, so that in future ages that wrong may be written as the right and the right as the wrong.

I say to my friend, who is influenced by friendship for this man—for it is nothing else—and to others, I am willing that in the future my record in this case shall be written by the side of theirs. Men may say what they please to me about persecution. I am doing my duty to my cotunry and the name and fame of better men than Fitz-John Porter ever was or ever will be. Before I would drag the names of Abraham Lincoln and his compeers in the dust for the benefit of this criminal, I would let my tongue become palsied and my right arm drop from its socket. [Applause in the galleries.]

Yet these things are to go on. The men who support this country are to be defamed, the men who controlled it are to be slandered, the men who protected and preserved it are to be vilified; and to-day if a man has the nerve to stand before the Senate and defend the rights of the people who stood by the Government he is denounced as the persecutor of some "saint" like Fitz-John Porter!

It is said to be true that saints sometimes become devils and devils become saints. The Union-loving men are the men now to be slapped, to be kicked, to be cuffed, to be driven from the land. Nobody is to have confidence in them, but if you can find a man who failed in his duty you will find enough Republicans to stand up by the side of the Democrats under the confederate flag against their own which sustained and restored them to honor. Men who want to vote and enlist under the confederate flag in this Chamber have a right to do it. Here was a trial with our Union flag on one side and your confederate flag on the other, and under the Union flag and under its law by trial this man was condemned. The confederate flag that failed now sustains him, and under that flag a few gentlemen on this side enlist for the purpose of sustaining this man who failed at the hour of his country's great need to sustain the commander of his army.

Mr. President, when I find our poor soldiers whom Congress pensions at $8 per month pressing forward every day, the crippled, the halt, the lame, and the blind, when they fail to find evidence by their comrades lost or otherwise to sustain them, and Congress passes a little pitiful pension for them and at the rate of from five to fifteen a day the bills are vetoed by the President of the United States because they are to get $96 a year for sustaining the Union flag, for fighting in bloody battles for their Government, for standing up in time of war, for being willing to die that the Union might live. Their bills are vetoed. Yes, the heavy hand of the Executive falls upon them and there they sleep. At the same time that that is being done under our nose, we find Republicans willing to vote to a man who was a traitor to his commander $3,000 a year for his treachery. In other words, if you want to be paid by the United States liberally for anything be treacherous when you ought to be true; but if you are true when you might have been treacherous, you are to be ignored.

Sir, this is strange, yet it is true. Am I to be told that I am persecuting somebody because I speak of these things? Sir, I will speak of them from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, and I will tell the truth that ought to be told everywhere, that the Democrats and a few Republicans come together to elevate men who have dragged their own names in the dust, while the other side come forward to put their foot upon the claims of the poor and the penniless and the unfortunate, and there is no remedy for them.

If gentlemen think they are making history that will be creditable to themselves by this, let them go on. As for myself I shall appeal while I live to the honor of my country, to the integrity of its people and to the justice of my cause, while I plead the cause of the Union men, the honest men, against those who proved traitors to us at the very time when we trusted them.

The idea, as I said a while ago, is that the only thing to do was to be treacherous when you should be true. Not in this Congress but only a few Congresses ago a man was taken up and put on the retired-list of the Army by a vote of Congress over my protest, who resigned when the war broke out because he would not fight against his State. Sixteen years afterward he was placed on the retired-list of the Army by Republican votes aiding the Democrats. Now, Fitz-John Porter is to be put on the retired-list by the aid of Republican votes in connection with Democrats. It is a Democratic issue everywhere, but the sympathy, the kind-heartedness, the generosity of a few gentleman, who are always more generous to the opposition than they are to their own friends, come to the rescue when the enemy wants anything, but not so often when friends might ask for something.

Republicans fail to come to Congress and ask for this kind of grace. I know three or four Republicans who stand well in the community to-day who were dismissed from the service for conduct unbecoming an officer during the war. None of those have ever asked to be restored. They will not do it because they do not believe it is right. As I said, you can not dismiss a Democrat who ever belonged to the regular Army who will not come back every day and every month and every year and beseech Congress to put him back in the Army and to be fed and clothed the rest of his days, no matter whether he played false or true.

Mr. President, as I said, I am done with this case. I presume it will be settled either one way or the other now, and then it will end so far as I am concerned; but if it stays here for ten years and I stay here that long I want the Senators who are in favor of it to understand that they have got to make the same kind of a fight hereafter, for I believe what I say. I am honest in it. I think this man was a bad man; I think he was treacherous to his commanding officer; I think he entered into a conspiracy against him to ruin him, and did ruin him, and my judgment is he did not get enough; and that was the judgment of as good a President as ever lived on the face of God's earth.

So then I speak against this man and for this country, for its honor; and if a voice could appeal from the tombs of the sainted martyrs who have gone before, who tried this man and condemned him, and who assented to this verdict, there would be but one voice, and that would be that he was honestly and righteously dismissed, and that the men who place him to-day by the side of Grant and Sherman and other men, as has been said in papers read at the desk, are willing to disgrace the names of Grant and Sherman and other honorable men for the purpose of elevating this man, who has disgraced his country and the cloth he wore.

Mr. President, I am done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question——

Mr. LOGAN. I forgot to ask to have printed with my remarks an article by General Pope.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the paper will be printed as a part of the Senator's remarks.

The paper is as follows:

In concluding a previous article for the Century on the second Battle of Bull Run, the following statement was made, namely:

"The transactions at Alexandria and Washington city during these eventful days, as also at Centreville during part of them, are as closely connected with these battles and had nearly as much to do with their results as any part of the operations in the field, but they demand more space than is accorded to a magazine article, and deal with matters beyond the scope of what are understood to be the limits fixed by the publishers of the Century.

"The materials to write a complete account of these matters are at hand, and it is quite probable that the course of events may yet make their publication necessary."

The character of many of the criticisms on this article seems to me to fulfill the conditions indicated in the above-quoted extract, and to make it both necessary and reasonable that I should execute the purpose therein specified.

It will be remembered that in the article for the Century above referred to, I gave in sufficient detail the organization of all the troops in Northern Virginia into one army known as the Army of Virginia. This Army of Virginia was made by bringing together the troops under McDowell, Fremont, and Banks, which were scattered about from Fredericksburg to the Shenandoah Valley, and which, up to that time, had had no official relation or harmony of action with each other.

The force actually disposable when I first assumed command numbered only twenty-eight thousand men, King's division being kept at Fredericksburg by order of the Government. Several of the corps, and many of the divisions and brigades, were badly organized, and to a considerable degree demoralized and discouraged. During the concentration of this force east of the Blue Ridge, General McClellan was attacked in front of Richmond and driven back on the James River, his base of supplies on the Pamunkey River and lines of communication therewith being threatened, and then occupied by the enemy.

When he had reached Harrison's Landing, and his condition was known, the plans for the operations of the Army of Virginia to relieve him were determined.

It was decided, for reasons quite fully set forth in my former article, to withdraw his army from the Peninsula, and unite it with the army under my command along the line of the Rappahannock.

The purpose to unite these two armies, having a powerful and resolute enemy, under able commanders, interposed between them, ready to strike in either direction as might seem most judicious, involved one of the most hazardous and difficult operations of war. It demanded from the force in front of Washington the greatest energy and activity, and forced upon it such extreme danger and difficulty as an army is very infrequently exposed to. It demanded equally from the army which was to be withdrawn from the James River the same energy and activity, and a zeal also, which is not always found in a commander who does not willingly perform the duty imposed upon him by the orders of his government. Unless these conditions on the part of both armies are faithfully fulfilled the chances are altogether against the success of such an operation. Whether the Government was right or wrong in expecting this fidelity in its commanders, even when its orders were not satisfactory to them, I leave to the decision of the Army itself, and to the public sense of the country.

As the enemy pushed his forces to the north with great energy and speed to crush the troops in front of Washington before they could be re-enforced by General McClellan's army from the Peninsula, the army of Virginia necessarily bore the brunt of all the fighting; while the army of General McClellan, exposed to no danger and not attacked at any point during its withdrawal, had nothing to do except urge forward by all possible means its movement to Alexandria, and unite with the Army of Virginia with the least possible delay. That army was holding back the enemy by continual fighting and marching, and with the constant risk of being overwhelmed by very superior forces.

How the Army of Virginia under my command performed its part in this operation I have tried to recount in a former article, and it now remains to tell how the army under General McClellan fulfilled the part which was assigned to and expected of it.

It does not fall properly within the province of this paper to recount in detail or to discuss General McClellan's tardy movements in the withdrawal of his army from Harrison's Landing to make its junction with the army under my command in front of Washington. It will suffice to say that he received the orders to embark his army by the 4th of August, and that the first corps of that army did not move from its camps until August 14. On the 9th General Halleck telegraphed him that the enemy was massing his forces in front of General Pope and General Burnside to crush them and move forward to the Potomac, and that re-enforcements must at once be sent to Acquia Creek, and added, "considering the amount of transportation at your disposal your delay is not satisfactory. You must move with all possible celerity." To which General McClellan replied that "everything has been and is being pushed as rapidly as possible to carry out your orders."

On the 12th, in reply to the most pressing orders from General Halleck for immediate movement, who urged that Burnside had moved thirteen thousand men to Acquia Creek in less than two days, he replied that if Washington were in danger his army could not arrive in time to save it. On the 14th he reported that the movement had begun, and on the 17th he said that he should not feel entirely secure until he had the whole army across the Chickahominy, but that he would then begin to forward troops by water as fast as transportation would permit.

It would be hard to tell what he was afraid of, for on that date and for several days before Lee was at Gordonsville, 70 miles away, with nearly his whole army, and there was absolutely nothing in Richmond or in front of McClellan to endanger his army except the weak corps of D. H. Hill.

On the 10th General Halleck telegraphed him:

"The enemy is crossing the Rapidan in large force. They are fighting General Pope to-day. There must be no further delay in your movements. That which has already occurred was entirely unexpected and must be satisfactorily explained."

Again, on the 21st he was informed that—

"The forces of Pope and Burnside are hard pushed and require aid as rapidly as you can. By all means see that the troops sent have plenty of ammunition. We have no time here to supply them. Moreover, they may have to fight as soon as they land."

Whatever may be thought of the delays thus complained of by General Halleck, it is quite certain from these telegrams that General McClellan knew perfectly well the emergency in which my army was placed, and that the concentration of his army and mine was not being effected in the time expected, and, also, as a consequence, that I was in a critical position and needed help to save my small army from certain misfortune. All this General McClellan knew when he left the Peninsula. I had asked that Franklin's corps and other troops might be sent out to my right at Gainesville.

The movements of this corps furnish a very fair illustration of the manner in which reinforcements were sent forward to, or rather withheld from, the army fighting in front of Centreville; and they are therefore related, in some detail, according to General McClellan's own reports.

On the 23d Franklin's corps started from Fort Monroe. General McClellan left the next day and reached Alexandria on the evening of the 26th. Heintzelman's corps, which had arrived at Alexandria before General McClellan, had gone at once to the front and joined the army under my command near Warrenton Junction without transportation or officers' horses. Porter was understood to be on the march from Acquia Creek to the same point. Of the troops which arrived at Alexandria after McClellan reached there or which were there on his arrival, not a man reached the field of Bull Run or took any part in any of the battles which were fought there during several successive days.

In his official report, dated August 4, 1863, nearly a year after these transactions, General McClellan says as follows, namely:

"It will be seen from what has preceded that I lost no time that could be avoided in moving the Army of the Potomac from the Peninsula to the support of the Army of Virginia, that I spared no effort to hasten the embarkation of the troops at Fort Monroe, Newport News, and Yorktown, remaining at Fort Monroe myself until the mass of the army had sailed, and that after my arrival at Alexandria I left nothing in my power undone to forward supplies and re-enforcements to General Pope," &c.

Is this statement true? Did General McClellan really in good faith do the things he says he did?

He shall himself answer that question, and I shall simply premise his own account of his doings by the statement that during the four days in question, August 27, 28, 29, and 30, severe and bloody battles were being fought at and near Bull Run, and the heavy boom of the artillery was plainly heard all those days in Alexandria and in the streets of Washington.

On the 27th of August General McClellan, who had arrived at Alexandria on the 26th, was charged by General Halleck with the entire direction of sending forward troops and supplies as rapidly as possible to the army under my command. The subjoined dispatches will show how he did that duty and will sustain or disprove his statement heretofore quoted. On the 26th McClellan was informed that Franklin was to go to the front; and on the 27th, at 10 a. m., General Halleck telegraphed General McClellan to have Franklin's corps march in the direction of Manassas as soon as possible. It is proper here to state that the march referred to in this and the following dispatches was over a broad turnpike, which was well known both to General McClellan and to General Franklin.

To this dispatch of 10 a. m., General McClellan replied:

ALEXANDRIA, August 27, 1862—10 a. m.

Telegram this moment received. I have sent orders to Franklin to prepare to march with his corps at once, and to repair here in person to inform me as to his means of transportation. Kearny was yesterday at Rappahannock Station; Porter at Bealton, Kelly's, Barnett's, &c. Sumner will commence reaching Falmouth to-day. William's Massachusetts cavalry will be mostly at Falmouth to-day. I loaned Burnside my personal escort (one squadron Fourth Regulars) to scout down Rappahannock. I have sent for Couch's division to come at once. As fast as I gain any information I will forward it, although you may already have it.

[Signed.] GEORGE B. McCLELLAN,
Major-General.

GENERAL HALLECK,
General-in-Chief.

At meridian General Halleck telegraphed General McClellan the situation of the army under my command:

[Sent 12 m.] WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., August 27, 1862.

Telegrams from General Porter to General Burnside, just received, say that Banks is at Fayetteville; McDowell, Sigel, and Ricketts near Warrenton; Reno on his right. Porter is marching on Warrenton Junction to re-enforce Pope. Nothing said of Heintzelman. Porter reports a general battle imminent. Franklin's corps should move out by forced marches, carrying three or four days' provisions, and to be supplied as far as possible by railroad. Perhaps you may prefer some other road than to Centreville. Colonel Haupt has just telegraphed about sending out troops. Please see him and give him your directions. There has been some serious neglect to guard the railroad, which should be immediately remedied.

H. W. HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

Major-General McCLELLAN, Alexandria.

At 1.40 p. m. General Halleck receives General McClellan's reply dated 12.50 p. m.:

ALEXANDRIA, August 27, 1862—12.50 p. m.

My aid has just returned from General Franklin's camp; reports that Generals Franklin, Smith, and Slocum are all in Washington. He gave the order to the next in rank to place the corps in readiness to move at once. I learn that heavy firing has been heard at this a. m. at Centreville, and have sent to ascertain the truth. I can find no cavalry to send out on the roads. Are the works finished and ready for defense?

GEO. B. McCLELLAN,
Major-General Commanding.

Major-General HALLECK,
General-in-Chief.

[Received 1.50 p. m.]

ALEXANDRIA, August 27, 1862—1.15 p. m.

Franklin's artillery have no horses except for four guns without caissons. I can pick up no cavalry. In view of these facts, will it not be well to push Sumner's corps here by water as rapidly as possible, to make immediate arrangements for placing the works in front of Washington in an efficient condition of defense? I have no means of knowing the enemy's force between Pope and ourselves. Can Franklin, without his artillery or cavalry, effect any useful purpose in front? Should not Burnside at once take steps to evacuate Falmouth and Acquia, at the same time covering the retreat of any of Pope's troops who may fall back in that direction? I do not see that we have force enough in hand to form a connection with Pope, whose exact position we do not know. Are we safe in the direction of the valley?

GEORGE B. McCLELLAN,
Major-General.

Major-General HALLECK, Washington.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., August 28, 1862.

On parting with General McClellan, about 2 o'clock this morning, it was understood that you were to move with your corps to-day toward Manassas Junction, to drive the enemy from the railroad. I have just learned that the general has not yet returned to Alexandria. If you have not received his orders, act on this.

W. H. HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

Major-General FRANKLIN, Alexandria, Va.

To which at 1 p. m. General McClellan (not General Franklin) replied:

[Received 1.05 p. m.]

ALEXANDRIA, VA., August 28, 1862—1 p. m.

General H. W. HALLECK, General-in-Chief:

Your dispatch to Franklin received. I have been doing all possible to hurry artillery and cavalry. The moment Franklin can be started with a reasonable amount of artillery he shall go. In the mean time see Whipple's dispatch; something must be done in that direction. Please see Barnard and be sure that the works toward the Chain Bridge are perfectly secure. I look upon these works, especially Ethan Allen and Marcy, as of the first importance. I have heard, incidentally, that there is no garrison in Ethan Allen, but presume it is a mistake. I have just conversed with Colonel Holabird, and think the enemy is in such force near Manassas as to make it necessary for us to move in force.

GEORGE B. McCLELLAN,
Major-General Commanding.

General McClellan being thus of opinion that "it is necessary for us to move in force," it becomes a matter of interest to observe what efforts are made to that end.

At 3.30 p. m, General Halleck, in a tone that manifests his estimate of the position, telegraphs General McClellan:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., August 28, 1862—3.30 p. m.

Not a moment must be lost in pushing as large a force as possible toward Manassas, so as to communicate with Pope before the enemy is re-enforced. I directed General Barnard to report to you, and do not know where he is. In Barnard's absence Whipple can tell you about the garrisons of the forts. No message from Pope has reached here.

H. W. HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

Major-General MCCLELLAN, Alexandria.

At 4.40 this dispatch is sent:

[Received 7.30 p. m.]

HEADQUARTERS NEAR ALEXANDRIA,
August 28, 1862—4.40 p. m.

General Franklin is with me here. I will know in a few minutes the condition of artillery and cavalry. We are not yet in condition to move; may be by to-morrow morning. Pope must cut through to-day, or adopt the plan I suggested. I have ordered troops to garrison the works at Upton's Hill. They must be held at any cost. As soon as I can see the way to spare them, I will send a good corps of troops there. It is the key to Washington, which can not be seriously menaced as long as it is held.

GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN, Major-General.

Major-General H. W. HALLECK,
General-in-Chief.

And at 4.45 the following reply to General Halleck's dispatch of 8.30 p. m.

[Received 6.15 p. m.]

"CAMP NEAR ALEXANDRIA, August 28, 1862—4.45 p. m.

Your dispatch received. Neither Franklin nor Sumner's corps is now in condition to move and fight a battle. It would be a sacrifice to send them out now. I have sent aids to ascertain the condition of the command of Cox and Tyler, but I still think that a premature movement in small force will accomplish nothing but the destruction of the troops sent out. I report that I will lose no time in preparing the troops now here for the field, and that whatever orders you may give after hearing what I have to say will be carried out.

GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN,
Major-General.

Major-General H. W. HALLECK,
General-in-Chief.

Thus appreciated and replied to by General Halleck at 7.40 p. m.:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., August 28, 1862—7.40 p. m.

There must be no further delay in moving Franklin's corps toward Manassas. They must go to-morrow morning, ready or not ready. If we delay too long to get ready there will be no necessity to go at all, for Pope will either be defeated or victorious without our aid. If there is a want of wagons the men must carry provisions with them till the wagons can come to their relief.

H. W. HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

Major-General MCCLELLAN, Alexandria.

To which General McClellan answers:

[Received August 29—12.20 a. m.]

ALEXANDRIA, August 28, 1862—10 p. m.

Your dispatch received. Franklin's corps has been ordered to march at 6 o'clock to-morrow morning. Sumner has about fourteen thousand infantry, without cavalry or artillery, here. Cox's brigade of four regiments is here, with two batteries of artillery. Men of two regiments, much fatigued, came to-day. Tyler's brigade of three new regiments, but little drilled, is also here. All these troops will be ordered to hold themselves ready to march to-morrow morning, and all, except Franklin's to await further orders. If you wish any of them to move toward Manassas please inform me. Colonel Waagner, Second New York Volunteer Artillery, has just come in from the front. He reports strong infantry and cavalry force of rebels near Fairfax Court-House. Reports numerous, from various sources, that Lee and Stuart with large forces are at Manassas; that the enemy with one hundred and twenty thousand men, intend advancing on the forts near Arlington and Chain Bridge, with a view to attacking Washington and Baltimore.

General Barnard telegraphs me to-night that the length of line of fortifications on this side of the Potomac requires two thousand additional batterymen, and additional troops to defend intervals, according to circumstances. At all events, he says an old regiment should be added to the force at Chain Bridge, and a few regiments distributed along the line to give confidence to our new troops. I agree with him fully, and think our fortifications along the upper part of our line on this side of the river very unsafe with their present garrisons, and the movements of the enemy seem to indicate an attack upon these works.

GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN,
Major-General.

Maj.-Gen. H. W. HALLECK,
General-in-Chief, United States Army.

And thus Franklin's corps, ordered to move on the morning of the 27th had not stirred a foot on the night on the 28th.

Friday, August 29, 1862, at 10.30 a. m., General McClellan telegraphs General Halleck:

CAMP NEAR ALEXANDRIA, August 29—10.30 a. m.

Franklin's corps is in motion; started about 6 a. m. I can give him but two squadrons of cavalry. I propose moving General Cox to Upton's hill, to hold that important point with its works, and to push cavalry scouts to Vienna via Freedom Hill and Hunter's lane. Cox has two squadrons of cavalry. Please answer at once whether this meets your approval. I have directed Woodbury, with the engineer brigade, to hold Fort Lyon. Sumner detached last night two regiments to the vicinity of Forts Ethan Allen and Marcy. Meagher's brigade is still at Acquia. If he moves in support of Franklin it leaves us without any reliable troops in and near Washington. Yet Franklin is too weak alone. What shall be done? No more cavalry arrived. Have but three squadrons. Franklin has but forty rounds of ammunition and no wagons to move more. I do not think Franklin is in condition to accomplish much if he meets strong resistance. I should not have moved him but for your pressing order last night. What have you from Vienna and Drainesville?

GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN,
Major-General.

Maj.-Gen. H. W. HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

Throughout the reiterated dispatches of the two previous days General Mc, Clellan advises General Halleck that he is pushing Franklin forward, and now on the morning of the third day, tells him, "I should not have moved him (Franklin) but for your pressing order last night."

General McClellan telegraphs:

[Received 12.08 p. m.]

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, August 29, 1862—12 m.

Your telegram received. Do you wish the movement of Franklin's corps to continue? He is without reserve ammunition, and without transportation.

GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN, Major-General.

Major-General W. H. HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

And again:

[Received 12.50 p. m.]

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF POTOMAC,
ALEXANDRIA, VA., August 29, 1862—12 m.

Have ordered most of the Twelfth Pennsylvania Cavalry to report to General Barnard, for scouting duty toward Rockville, Poolsville, &c. If you apprehend a raid of cavalry on your side of river I had better send a brigade or two of Sumner's to near Tennallytown, where, with two or three old regiments in Forts Allen and Marcy, they can watch both Chain bridge and Tennallytown. Would it meet your views to post the rest of Sumner's corps between Arlington and Fort Corcoran, where they can either support Cox, Franklin, or Chain bridge, or even Tennallytown? Franklin has only between ten thousand and eleven thousand ready for duty. How far do you wish this force to advance?

G. B. MCCLELLAN,
Major-General, United States Army.

Major-General HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

To which General Halleck replies at 3 p. m.:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., August 29, 1862.

Your proposed disposition of Sumner's corps seems to me judicious. Of course I have no time to examine into details. The present danger is a raid upon Washington in the night-time. Dispose of all troops as you deem best. I want Franklin's corps to go far enough to find out something about the enemy. Perhaps he may get such information at Annandale as to prevent his going further. Otherwise he will push on toward Fairfax. Try to get something from direction of Manassas, either by telegram or through Franklin's scouts. Our people must move more actively and find out where the enemy is. I am tired of guesses.

W. H. HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

Major-General MCCLELLAN, Alexandria.

At 7.50 p. m. General Halleck to General McClellan:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., August 29, 1862—7.50 p. m.

You will immediately send construction train and guards to repair railroad to Manassas; let there be no delay in this. I have just been told that Franklin's corps stopped at Annandale, and that he was this evening in Alexandria. This is all contrary to my orders. Investigate and report the facts of this disobedience. That corps must push forward as I directed, to protect the railroad and open our communications with Manassas.

H. W. HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

Major-General MCCLELLAN, Alexandria.

To which General McClellan replies at 8:

[Time received, 8.50 p. m.]

CAMP NEAR ALEXANDRIA, August 29, 1862—8 p. m.

By referring to my telegrams of 10.30 a. m., 12 m., and 1 p. m., together with your reply of 2.48 p. m., you will see why Franklin's corps halted at Annandale. His small cavalry force, all I had to give him, was ordered to push on as far as possible toward Manassas. It was not safe for Franklin to move beyond Annandale, under any circumstances, until we knew what was at Vienna. General Franklin remained here until about 1 p. m., endeavoring to arrange for supplies for his command. I am responsible for both these circumstances, and do not see that either was in disobedience to your orders. Please give distinct orders in reference to Franklin's movements of to-morrow. I have sent to Colonel Haupt to push out construction and supply trains as soon as possible, General Tyler to furnish the necessary guards. I have directed General Banks's supply train to start out to-night at least as far as Annandale, with an escort from General Tyler. In regard to to-morrow's movements I desire definite instructions, as it is not agreeable to me to be accused of disobeying orders when I have simply exercised the discretion committed to me.

GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN,
Major-General.

Major-General HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

At 10 that night General Halleck advised General McClellan that he has a dispatch from General Franklin stating that "Pope is very short of provisions and the country will not support him."

[Received 10.50 p. m.]

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF POTOMAC,
Camp near Alexandria, August 29, 1862—10 p. m.

The following has just been received by an orderly:

ANNANDALE, 7.15 p. m.

GENERAL: The news picked up here from all sources passing along the road is as follows: Jackson left Centreville yesterday afternoon to march through Thoroughfare Gap. He was confronted by Sigel, whom he attacked immediately. Sigel was re-enforced by Heintzelman and Porter to-day. McDowell by noon was 4 miles from the field, and was merely waiting for his ammunition to come up and join him. The field of battle is near Gainesville.

Sigel fought all day yesterday, slept on the enemy's ground, and this morning at 5 o'clock was attacked, and the cannonading was very heavy when a certain sutler, one of the parties who gives the information, left there. From all the evidence the inference is that we have met with no disaster, and that Stonewall is in a tight place unless he leaves to-night by Aldie. Jackson had with him yesterday three divisions—his own, Ewell's, and Hill's—amounting to forty thousand men. Birney held Centreville this morning, and pursued Jackson, picking up many stragglers. The enemy left Centreville last evening. Many of the rebel dead are lying near Centreville. Birney ceased the pursuit on learning the force of the enemy. All of the best witnesses, and all of the citizens who have passed, consider Jackson in a dangerous position. Pope's train is parked this side of Centreville.

Truly yours,

W. B. FRANKLIN,
Major-General, Commanding Sixth Corps.

P. S.—Pope is said to be very short of provisions and the country will not support him.

W. B. F.

GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN,
Major-General.

Major-General H. W. HALLECK,
General-in-Chief.

And thus, on the night of the third day after General Franklin's corps had been peremptorily ordered to join the Army under my command, it had advanced as far as Annandale, 6 miles from Alexandria, Franklin himself being in that city as late as 1 p. m.

AUGUST 29, 1862—8 p. m.

To Commanding Officer at Centreville:

I have been instructed by General McClellan to inform you that he will have all the available wagons at Alexandria loaded with rations for your troops, and all of the cars also, as soon as you send in a cavalry escort to Alexandria as a guard to the train.

Respectfully,

W. B. FRANKLIN,
Major-General, Commanding Sixth Corps.

General McClellan's dispatch of 10 p. m., 29th August, states that he ordered Franklin "to cover the transit of Pope's supplies." General Franklin, who doubtless understood his orders, explained them as above by saying that the supplies would be loaded "as soon as you send a cavalry escort." It was thus General Franklin was to "cover the transit."

At 11 a. m. General McClellan telegraphs General Halleck:

[Received 11.15 a. m.]

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF POTOMAC.
Camp near Alexandria, August 30, 1862—11 a. m.

Have ordered Sumner to leave one brigade in the vicinity of Chain bridge, and to move the rest via Columbia pike on Annandale and Fairfax Court House. Is this the route you wish them to take? He and Franklin are both instructed to join Pope as promptly as possible. Shall Couch move also when he arrives?

GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN, Major-General.

Major-General HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

To this inquiry as to proper direction of the troops at the crisis of that day General Halleck's reply is comprehensive and pointed: "Send them where the fighting is."

[Sent 12.20 p. m.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., August 30, 1862—12.20 p. m.

I think Couch should land at Alexandria and be immediately pushed out to Pope. Send the troops where the fighting is. Let me know when Couch arrives, as I may have other information by that time. Use the Connecticut officers and regiment as you propose. Send transports to Acquia to bring up Burnside's command. I have telegraphed to him, and am waiting his answer.

H. W. HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

Major-General MCCLELLAN, Alexandria.

And adds two hours later:

[Sent 2.15 p. m.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., August 30, 1862—2.10 p. m.

Franklin's and all of Sumner's corps should be pushed forward with all possible dispatch. They must use their legs and make forced marches. Time now is everything. Send some sharp-shooters on the trains to Bull Run. The bridges and property are threatened by bands of Prince William cavalry. Give Colonel Haupt all the assistance you can. The sharpshooters on top of cars can assist in unloading the trains.

H. W. HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

Major-General MCCLELLAN, Alexandria.

[Received 3 p. m.]

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.
Alexandria, Va., August 30, 1862—1.10 p. m.

I know nothing of the calibers of Pope's artillery. All I can do is to direct my ordnance officer to load up all the wagons sent to him. I have already sent all my headquarters' wagons. You will have to see that wagons are sent from Washington. I can do nothing more than give the order that every available wagon in Alexandria shall be loaded at once. The order to the brigade of Sumner that I directed to remain at Chain bridge and Tennallytown should go from your headquarters to save time. I understand you to intend it also to move. I have no sharp-shooters except the guard around my camp. I have sent off every man but those, and will now send them with the train, as you direct. I will also send my only remaining squadron of cavalry with General Sumner. I can do no more; you now have every man of the Army of the Potomac who is within my reach.

GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN,
Major-General Commanding.

Major-General HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

As these telegrams do not appear to furnish any sort of explanation of Franklin's slow movements and of his halt at Annandale, it seems not improper to furnish a telegram of General McClellan's, which does give in part directly and in part by inference an explanation of these transactions; but before doing so it seems in place to invite attention to the strange fact that while in his telegrams, the first dated August 29, at 8.30 a. m., and the second August 29, at 1 p. m., General McClellan does not consider it safe for Franklin with eleven thousand men to go beyond Annandale, yet he instructs General Franklin to inform the commanding officer at Centreville (not me) that he "will have all the available wagons at Alexandria loaded with rations for your troops and all of the cars also as soon as you send in a cavalry escort to Alexandria as a guard to the trains." In short, while it was not safe, according to General McClellan's opinion, for Franklin to go beyond Annandale with eleven thousand men, he did consider it safe for a cavalry escort to come in from the field of battle through Annandale to Alexandria and take back wagon-trains by the same road. Not fear of harm to Franklin therefore was the motive to halt him at Annandale, but some other motive quite removed from such apprehension.

This motive will probably be found partly set forth in the following telegram, dated at 2.45 p. m., August 29:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF POTOMAC,
Camp near Alexandria, Va., August 29, 1862—2.45 p. m.

The last news I received from the direction of Manassas was from stragglers, to the effect that the enemy were evacuating Centreville and retiring toward Thoroughfare Gap. This is by no means reliable. I am clear that one of two courses should be adopted, first, to concentrate all our available forces to open communications with Pope; second, to leave Pope to get out of his scrape and at once use all our means to make the capital perfectly safe. No middle course will now answer. Tell me what you wish me to do and I will do all in my power to accomplish it. I wish to know what my orders and authority are. I ask for nothing, but will obey whatever orders you give. I only ask a prompt decision that I may at once give the necessary orders. It will not do to delay longer.

GEO. B. MCCLELLAN, Major-General.

A. LINCOLN, President.

A strange dispatch this, in view of the fact that for three successive days McClellan had been almost hourly receiving peremptory orders to send Franklin to the front, and that he had been reporting almost as often that he was doing so. It must be borne in mind also that at the time this telegram was sent, Franklin, with eleven thousand men; Sumner, with fourteen thousand men; and Cox, with seven thousand men, were all in and near Alexandria under McClellan's direct control, and that he had positive orders to send them forward. The sounds of battle were in his ears all the time and should of themselves have furnished him with a reason for hurrying them to the front more imperative than any orders.

As General McClellan had positively stated again and again that Franklin could not move to the front because of want of transportation, it was of course doubly impracticable for the same reason that both Franklin and Sumner should go forward, and the first part of this proposition to the President therefore could not have been made with any purpose of being carried out. The last of the two suggestions, namely, "to leave Pope to get out of his scrape," was therefore the real one. What was the "scrape" that Pope was to be left to get out of? He had been for nearly three weeks marching and fighting almost continuously, for no other purpose than to give time for General McClellan's army to assemble at Alexandria and come forward to the field to his support.

The roar of battle at the front for three or four successive days was sounding in General McClellan's ears, and in answer to it he advises that Pope be left to get out of his "scrape." And was General Pope alone involved in this "scrape" so touchingly alluded to by General McClellan? Were there not also in this "scrape" thousands of loyal and gallant soldiers who had been for weeks fighting and marching with the sole hope that their comrades of the Army of the Potomac would come to their aid, as they had gone forward to aid them? How many thousands of these gallant men lie dead on bloody fields, because they were left to get out of their "scrape?"

It is pitiful to continue this subject further, but perhaps it may be as well to dispose of McClellan's equally insincere excuses concerning want of transportation.

The following telegram of General Halleck very effectually disposes of them:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 30, 1862—9.40 A. M.

I am by no means satisfied with General Franklin's march of yesterday. Considering the circumstances of the case, he was very wrong in stopping at Annandale. Moreover, I learned last night that the Quartermaster's Department could have given him plenty of transportation if he had applied for it any time since his arrival at Alexandria. He knew the importance of opening communication with General Pope's army, and should have acted more promptly.

H. W. HALLECK, General-in-Chief.

Major-General MCCLELLAN, Alexandria.

But, in addition to this, General McClellan actually knew, when he was assigning want of transportation as an excuse for not moving Franklin, that there was public transportation at his command, and yet he did not use it when the fate of a campaign, if not of an army, depended upon his doing so.

CAMP NEAR ALEXANDRIA, August 30, 1862—11.30 a. m.

Major-General HALLECK, General-in-Chief:

Your telegram of 9 a. m. received. Ever since General Franklin received notice that he was to march from Alexandria he has been endeavoring to get transportation from the Quartermaster at Alexandria, but he has been uniformly told that there was none disposable. * * * Every effort has been made to carry out your orders promptly. The great difficulty seems to consist in the fact that the greater part of the transportation on hand at Alexandria and Washington has been needed for current supplies of the garrisons. Such is the state of the case as represented to me by the Quartermasters and it appears to be true. I take it for granted that this has not been properly explained to you.

GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN,
Major-General.

It is clear that he thought or affected to think that it was better that the army under my command should be defeated, if not destroyed, than that the garrisons around Alexandria and Washington should be subjected to the slightest inconvenience. In the midst of all the pretended apprehension about Franklin's danger in moving to the front, Banks's wagon train actually passed Franklin as it came in from the field where Franklin was to go. Much of the "news" Franklin sent to McClellan was probably obtained from this train which, it seems, was able to come from the front with safety over a road which McClellan was afraid that Franklin should venture on with eleven thousand men.

I need not proceed further in this sorry recital. All the forces in and about Alexandria were withheld for four days from the support of my army fighting Lee's whole force in front of Centreville by such groundless and trivial excuses as these.

As to the ammunition, General McClellan says in his telegram from Fort Monroe of the 21st, 10.52 p. m.: "I have ample supplies of ammunition for infantry and artillery, and will have it up in time. I can supply any deficiency that may exist in General Pope's army." But when ordered to send it forward he replied from Alexandria: "I know nothing of the caliber of Pope's artillery. All I can do is to direct my ordnance officer to load up all the wagons sent to him." Sent by whom? It need not be said that he could easily have found out from the Ordnance Department what artillery I had.

This narration of what General McClellan did is necessarily much abridged, but it is practically his own story, and if it confirms the statement in his report that "after my arrival at Alexandria I left nothing in my power undone to forward re-enforcements and supplies to General Pope," there is no more to be said, except perhaps that if this were really all he could do, it is very unfortunate, in every view, that some one else had not been charged with this work.

During these three days, 27th 28th, and 29th of August, spent by Franklin in marching from Alexandria to Annandale (6 miles), over a broad turnpike, unobstructed by any obstacle, Lee marched his whole army, except Jackson's corps, from Waterloo bridge, on the Rappahannock, by the circuitous route of Salem and White Plains, forced the passage of Thoroughfare Gap, and came on the field of Groveton (second Bull Run), where on the afternoon of the 29th—the third day—he fought a severe battle with the troops under my command.

The distance thus marched by Lee's army, in the face of a watchful enemy, was nearly 40 miles, and on the third day of this march he fought also a severe battle at Groveton.

The movements of Lee's large army and of Franklin's corps during the same three days of August, 1862, present a contrast so violent as to require no comment whatever.

What success could be expected over an active enemy with any help likely to be given by so tardy and reluctant a friend is not easy to see.

The dispatches of General Porter from the field during the same three days are essential to a sufficient understanding of the feeling which obtained among certain of the highest officers of the Army of the Potomac, and which led to consequences well nigh fatal to the cause of the Government. It is with reluctance that I introduce these telegrams from a man in the unhappy condition of General Porter, but it is hard to see how it could be avoided without injustice to those who during those dreadful days cheerfully and gladly exposed life and limb to the success of the Union Army.

They are a part of General Porter's record and are so closely related to subsequent transactions that it is impossible to avoid presenting them in this paper. It has been asserted that they were private telegrams, not intended to be published or officially used, and it is easy to believe that their author, considering their contents, should have been very reluctant that they should be brought to light.

As they were communicated at once to the President, by the officer to whom they were sent, their privacy, if there were privacy in such a matter, was violated almost at the moment of their issue.

They are as follows, namely:

FROM WARRENTON JUNCTION, August 27, 1862—4 p. m.

General BURNSIDE, Falmouth, Va.:

I send you the last order from General Pope, which indicates the future as well as the present. Wagons are rolling along rapidly to the rear as if a mighty power was propelling them. I see no cause of alarm, though this may cause it. McDowell is moving to Gainesville, where Sigel now is. The latter got to Buckland bridge in time to put out the fire and kick the enemy, who is pursuing his route unmolested to the Shenandoah or Loudon County. The forces are Longstreet's, A. P. Hill's, Jackson's, Whiting's, Ewell's, and Anderson's (late Huger's) divisions.

Longstreet is said by a deserter to be very strong. They have much artillery and long wagon-trains. The raid on the railroad was near Cedar Run, and made by a regiment of infantry, two squadrons of cavalry, and a section of artillery. The place was guarded by nearly three regiments of infantry and some cavalry. They routed the guard, captured a train and many men, destroyed the bridge, and retired leisurely down the roads toward Manassas. It can easily be repaired. No troops are coming up, except new troops, that I can hear of. Sturgis is here with two regiments; four were cut off by the raid. The positions of the troops are given in this order. No enemy in our original front. A letter of General Lee's, seized when Stuart's assistant adjutant-general was seized, directs Stuart to leave a squadron only to watch in front of Hanover Junction, &c. Everthing has moved up north.

I found a vast difference between these troops and ours, but I suppose they were new, as to-day they burned their clothes, &c., when there was not the least cause. I hear that they are much demoralized, and needed some good troops to give them heart and, I think, head. We are marching now to get behind Bull Run, and I presume will be there in a few days, if strategy don't use us up. The strategy is magnificent, and tactics in the inverse proportion. I would like some of my ambulances. I would like also to be ordered to return to Fredericksburg, to push toward Hanover, or, with a larger force, to push toward Orange Court House. I wish Sumner was at Washington, and up near the Monocacy, with good batteries. I do not doubt the enemy have a large amount of supplies provided for them, and I believe they have a contempt for the Army of the Virginia. I wish myself away from it, with all our old Army of Potomac, and so do our companions. I was informed to-day by the best authority that, in opposition to General Pope's views, this army was pushed out to save the Army of the Potomac, an army that could take care of itself.

Pope says we long since wanted to go behind the Occoquan. I am in great need of ambulances, and the officers need medicines, which, for want of transportation, were left behind. I hear many of the sick of my corps are in houses on the road—very sick, I think. There is no fear of an enemy crossing the Rappahannock. The cavalry are all in the advance of the rebel army. At Kelly's and Barnett's fords much property was left, in consequence of the wagons going down for grain, &c. If you can push up the grain to-night, please do so, direct to this place. There is no grain here or anywhere, and this army is wretchedly supplied in that line. Pope says he never could get enough. Most of this is private, but if you can get me away, please do so. Make what use of this you chose, so it does good.

Don't let the alarm here disturb you. If you had a good force you could go to Richmond. A force should at once be pushed on to Manassas to open the road. Our provisions are very short.

F. J. PORTER.

WARRENTON, 27*th*—p. m.

To General BURNSIDE:

Morell left his medicine, ammunition, and baggage at Kelly's ford. Can you have it hauled to Fredericksburg and stored? His wagons were all sent to you for grain and ammunition. I have sent back to you every man of the First and Sixth New York Cavalry, except what has been sent to Gainesville. I will get them to you after a while. Everything here is at sixes and sevens, and I find I am to take care of myself in every respect. Our line of communication has taken care of itself in compliance with orders. The army has not three days' provisions. The enemy captured all Pope's and other clothing; and from McDowell the same, including liquor. No guard accompanying the trains, and small ones guard bridges. The wagons are rolling on, and I shall be here to-morrow. Good night!

F. J. PORTER.

FOUR MILES FROM MANASSAS, 28*th*—2 p. m.

Major-General BURNSIDE:

All that talk about bagging Jackson, &c., was bosh. That enormous Gap, Manassas, was left open, and the enemy jumped through; and the story of McDowell having cut off Longstreet had no good foundation. The enemy have destroyed all our bridges, burnt trains, &c., and made this army rush back to look at its line of communication, and find us bare of subsistence. We are far from Alexandria, considering the means of transportation. The supply train of forty wagons is here, but I can't find them. There is a report that Jackson is at Centerville, which you can believe or not. The enemy destroyed an immense amount of property at Manassas—cars and supplies. I expect the next thing will be a raid on our rear by way of Warrenton, by Longstreet, who was cut off.

F. J. PORTER, Major-General.

BRISTOE—6 a. m., 29th.

Major-General BURNSIDE:

I shall be off in half an hour. The messenger who brought this says the enemy had been at Centreville, and pickets were found there last night. Sigel had severe fight last night; took many prisoners; Banks is at Warrenton Junction; McDowell near Gainesville; Heintzelman and Reno at Centreville, where they marched yesterday and Pope went to Centreville, with the last two as a body-guard, at the time not knowing where was the enemy, and when Sigel was fighting within 8 miles of him and in sight. Comment is unnecessary. The enormous trains are still rolling on, many animals not being watered for 50 hours. I shall be out of provisions to-morrow night; your train of forty wagons can not be found. I hope Mac's at work and we shall soon be ordered out of this. It would seem, from proper statements of the enemy, that he was wandering around loose, but I expect they know what they are doing, which is more than any one here or anywhere knows."*

I shall only remark that during the days on which these dispatches were sent off Porter was not at the front at all, either personally or with his corps, and that the unamiable stories and flings which these letters and telegrams contained were either suggested by his imagination or were picked up from stragglers and skulkers from the front.

*This dispatch was presented to the original court-martial, which tried General Porter, embodied in one from General Burnside to General Halleck, and was without signature, as shown by the record, but was quoted as being an acknowledged dispatch of General Porter's by the counsel for the petitioner in his opening before the board of army officers in the case of Fitz-John Porter in 1878.

On the west of Porter during all this time was Banks's corps at Warrenton Junction. On the north of him along the Warrenton pike, and south of it at Greenwich, were the corps of McDowell and Sigel and the divisions of Reynolds, of Reno, and of Kearny. While on the east of him, and between him and Manassas Junction, were the division of Hooker and the headquarters of the Army of Virginia. He was moving slowly along the chord of a semi-circle (the road from Warrenton Junction to Manassas Junction).

The arc of this semi-circle was occupied by the rest of the Army, the army of the enemy being on the outside of it altogether. Our whole Army, therefore, until late on the morning of the 29th, was interposed between Porter and any force of the enemy, and he was in as safe a place during all that time as if he had been in the grounds of the War Department at Washington. His condition of mind as evinced in these dispatches promised very little toward the active and zealous work expected of every faithful officer under the circumstances which surrounded us, and little as it promised the performance was still less.

That his corps fought on the 30th is true, and he has made the most of it. But why and how did it do so? On the night of the 29th, after his failure to go into action that whole day, I sent him peremptory orders to march his corps to the field of battle, and report to me in person:

"HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
"In the Field near Bull Run, August 29, 1862—8.50 p. m.

"GENERAL: Immediately upon receipt of this order, the precise hour of receiving which you will acknowledge, you will march your command to the field of battle of to-day, and report to me in person for orders. You are to understand that you are expected to comply strictly with this order, and to be present on the field within three hours after its reception, or after daybreak to-morrow morning.

"JNO. POPE,
"Major-General Commanding.

"Maj. Gen. F. J. PORTER.

"A true copy:

"T. C. H. SMITH,
"Lieutenant-Colonel and Aid-de-Camp."

This order brought him to my presence the next morning, and I, myself, ordered him into the action, and watched his movements from a position on the ridge in rear of him.

It would necessarily have been fatal to him personally not to go into battle under such circumstances, and his fighting on the 30th was a matter in which his inclination or disinclination had no part.

Whatever credit is given him for his action on the 30th must be largely qualified by these facts.

The gallant men of his corps who did the fighting on the 30th would have fought equally well the day before if they had been given the chance to do so. That they had not this opportunity the day before is in no sense their fault, and it is quite certain that a large number of them were both surprised and disappointed that they were not permitted to go into the action of the 29th.

Franklin arrived at Centreville, 8 miles in the rear of the battlefield of second Bull Run, late in the afternoon of the 30th (having marched 21 miles toward the field of battle in four days), too late to be of service in that battle, and he, himself, was in a condition of mind which made his presence rather an injury than a benefit to the army which he was to reinforce.

The subject is very distasteful to me, and I would not touch it at all but for the conditions which made this article necessary. As it is I shall only deal with it far enough to throw sufficient light upon it to make clear the point I desire to present.

It is sufficient to explain why I recommended the withdrawal of the army under my command to the entrenchments on the south side of the Potomac in order that it might be re-organized.

The following letter from General A. Cobb, now, and for a long time past, chief-justice of Nebraska, will sufficiently illustrate the conditions which prompted me thus to advise, and will save the necessity of relating the information to the same effect which came to me from various verbal sources. This letter will also serve to supplement and complete the series of reasons given for Franklin's amazing delay to move to the front, and perhaps furnishes the best explanation of all, yet made, why he hung back and appeared so willing to leave his comrades at the front to their fate:

LINCOLN, NEBR., November 14, 1874.

MY DEAR GENERAL: On the 1st of September, 1862, I was on duty as colonel of the Fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers at Centreville, Va.

My regiment was attached to the First Brigade, First Division, Sixth Corps. On that day I received an order from Maj. Gen. William B. Franklin, commanding corps, to report at his headquarters for grand guard duty.

I immediately reported at his tent, and found it full of officers. I do not remember who was there, but think that nearly or quite all of the general and most of the staff officers then serving with the corps were there.

They were engaged in drinking and animated conversation. I was met by General Franklin, or his chief of staff, at the tent door, and informed that I was to take command of a grand guard which was then assembling, and which was to be joined by a section of artillery, and proceed to Cub Run; that Col. O. D. Green, "A. A. G.," would accompany me to the ground, advise me as to position, &c., and give me my orders while on the march.

We immediately started, and while riding at the head of the column Colonel Green asked me if I heard the conversation among the officers at headquarters. Upon my answering in the negative he said they were congratulating each other upon "Pope's defeat," and upon my expressing great surprise at such a state of demoralization he seemed to be greatly depressed, and stated that nearly every "officer of the Army" whom he had seen since our corps came up seemed to rejoice at the late reverses.

I can not, of course, give his exact language at this length of time, but the above is correct in substance. I was absent when your favor of the 1st July was received here.

Since my return I have delayed this reply from ti me to time, which I beg you to excuse.

With sincere respect, your obedient servant,

AMASA COBB.

MAJ. GEN. JOHN POPE,
United States Army, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

A true copy of the original.

D. M. TAYLOR,
Captain of Ordnance, Aid-de-Camp.

Comment on this letter I leave to the survivors of those bloody battles, and to the friends and relatives of the gallant men who died there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. TELLER. Before that amendment is voted on I desire to have read as a matter of information for the Senate the document which I send to the Chair. It is a report made by a committee of the House of Representatives in the Forty-seventh Congress. I suppose it is perfectly proper for me to have it read as a report made to a previous Congress or as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5525) authorizing the President to appoint and retire Alfred Pleasonton, a major-general, respectfully reports:

Alfred Pleasonton graduated at the West Point Military Academy in 1844, and was appointed a brevet second lieutenant in the Army, and assigned to Captain Sumner's (afterward General Sumner) company of the First Regiment of United States Dragoons, which was stationed at Fort Atkinson, Iowa Territory. In 1845 he was one of the command under Sumner that marched to Devil's Lake, near the Canada line, to warn the Canadian half-breeds from coming into the United States to hunt buffalo and disturb our Indians. The expedition was successful, and accomplished a march of 3,000 miles in five months.

In the spring of 1846, Pleasonton having been promoted to be second lieutenant of the Second Regiment of Dragoons, joined Captain May's company of that regiment, at Corpus Christi, Tex., as part of the army of occupation under General Taylor. In the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma he was distinguished, and was brevetted on the recommendation of General Taylor for his conduct in the charge of May's squadron of dragoons at Resaca de la Palma, which resulted in the capture of General La Vega, many prisoners, and a battery of nine guns. He served with the army of General Taylor to the end of the Mexican war, and then marched with his company from Monterey, Mexico, to Santa Fé, N. Mex., in the fall of 1848. After very active service in that Territory during the winter, he proceeded in the spring of 1849 to join the staff of General Persifor F. Smith, in California, and marched across the country from Santa Fé to San Francisco, with a small detachment of men by the way of Colorado and Utah.

Pleasonton remained in California until 1850, when having been promoted to be first lieutenant, he returned to New Mexico and was placed in command of his company. His service for the next two years brought him in contact with the Apaches, the Navajoes, and the Utah Indians of that country, and in numerous campaigns and engagements against these Indians, he learned the rough art of savage warfare.

In 1852 he was ordered on the recruiting service, where he remained until 1854, when he was appointed the adjutant of his regiment, and repaired to Fort Chadbourne, Texas, where he remained until the winter of 1855, when he was promoted to a captain. He joined the expedition against the Sioux Indians, commanded by General Harney, at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., in the spring of that year, and served with the expedition, in command of his company, until the winter of 1856, when he was appointed the assistant adjutant-general of the expedition, and remained in that capacity until the Indians made peace in that summer.

In the fall of 1856, Pleasonton was selected by General Harney as his adjutant-general on an expedition to remove the Seminole Indians from Florida. The winter was spent in a hard and severe campaign against these Indians in the swamps and everglades, which resulted in their complete defeat, and they were removed to Arkansas in the spring of 1857.

Serious political troubles occurring at this time in Kansas, General Harney was ordered to the command of the troops in that Territory, and Captain Pleasonton accompanied him as adjutant-general. It was in the summer of this year that the Utah expedition was organized by General Harney and his staff, and was afterward placed under the command of General Albert Sidney Johnston.

In the fall of 1858, an Indian war breaking out in Oregon, General Harney was ordered there to take command, and Pleasonton was assigned to him as his chief staff officer. The Indians were brought to terms during the ensuing winter and the country was in a state of profound peace in the summer of 1859 and until 1860, when General Harney was relieved from duty in Oregon, and Pleasonton returned with him to Washington.

In March, 1861, General Scott ordered Pleasonton to join his company, then at Camp Floyd, in Utah. He proceeded as far as Saint Joseph, Mo., and was detained there for want of transportation when the news of the firing on Fort Sumter satisfied him it was his duty to return to the East. On arriving in Philadelphia he found Washington was cut off from the North, and that the Government had placed General Patterson in command of the Department of Washington, extending from Philadelphia to Washington. Pleasanton immediately reported to him, and was sent to Wilmington, Del., to raise a force to protect the railroad to Havre de Grace and also Dupont's powder-mills, which contained at that time the materials belonging to the Government for making powder at the rate of 30,000 pounds a day for a period of eighteen months. He succeeded in less than a week in organizing, arming, and equipping a regiment of 1,000 men; but upon application being made by the regiment to General Scott to permit Pleasonton to accept the command of it, Scott's only reply was an order for Pleasonton to join his company in Utah. Pleasonton obeyed the order. He could have resigned from the Army and accepted the colonelcy of the regiment; but as the Government at that time was in the throes of a civil war, he considered it his highest duty to obey its behests.

Shortly after his arrival in Utah the news of the battle of Bull Run was received, and also orders for the troops to proceed to Washington. Pleasonton reached Washington in command of his regiment, the Second Dragoons, in the fall of 1861, having marched 1,100 miles, from Utah to Saint Joseph, Mo., and then transported the men and horses of the command about the same distance by rail to Washington.

When the Army of the Potomac moved to Yorktown, Pleasonton's regiment of dragoons formed part of it, and served with headquarters and on detached service throughout that campaign, sometimes covering a retreat, sometimes in advance, but rendering such efficient service that upon the arrival of the Army at Harrison's Landing Pleasonton was promoted to be a brigadier-general of volunteers, his rank at that time in the regular Army being that of major. A few days after his assignment to the command of a brigade of cavalry, he distinguished himself in the second battle of Malvern Hill, capturing many prisoners and showing his ability to fight cavalry in large masses. He covered the retreat of the Army from the Chickahominy, and was among the last to embark from Yorktown to Washington. On his arrival at Washington, General McClellan assigned him to the command of all the cavalry and horse artillery of the Army; and it was from this time that the Union cavalry began its career of distinction and glory which it held to the close of the war. Starting in advance of the Army from Washington, with only one brigade of cavalry and two batteries of horse artillery, Pleasonton defeated the enemy at Poolesville, Barnesville, Frederick City, and brought him to bay at South Mountain. He reconnoitered that position, and finding two mountain roads, one to the north and the other to the south of it, he suggested turning the enemy by both flanks, which was afterward successfully accomplished by the Army. Rapidly pursuing, immediately after the battle, with the cavalry, he overtook the enemy's cavalry near Boonsborough, and, after a fierce fight, defeated them with severe loss, forcing his way to the main body on Antietam Creek, at Sharpsburg. While thus actively engaged, Pleasonton found time to organize his scattered cavalry, and had shown such energy and judgment in doing so that he collected four thousand cavalry and formed them into four brigades, and with four batteries of horse artillery he held the center of the Union position throughout the battle of Antietam. He took the advance of the Army into Virginia after the battle, fighting the enemy's cavalry at Martinsburg, Purcellville, Union, Upperville, Barber's Cross Roads, Waterloo, and other places, being invariably successful.

In the campaign of Fredericksburg he commanded the first division of cavalry on duty with the first grand division of the Army, commanded by Major-General Sumner. The battle of Fredericksburg virtually finished that campaign.

In the campaign of Chancellorsville, Pleasonton went into the field with one small brigade of cavalry of three regiments and one horse battery, but it was his good fortune to be at the critical part of the field at the proper time; that is where the Eleventh Corps became panic stricken and ran away when Stonewall Jackson attacked them on the 2d of May, 1863. In reference to this action the Joint Committee of the two Houses of Congress on the Conduct of War report as follows:

"About 6 o'clock in the afternoon a rattling fire of musketry was heard on the right, but nothing indicating a very serious engagement. Almost immediately, however, from some cause not fully evident from the testimony, the extreme right division of the Eleventh Corps was stampeded, and, flying along the line of the Eleventh Corps, threw the whole corps into confusion and swept it from the field. Steps were at once taken to arrest the fugitives and prevent the panic being extended to the whole Army. Berry's division of the Third Corps and a brigade of the Second Corps were directed to cover the rear of the Eleventh Corps, and, if possible, to retake and hold the position they had abandoned. This, however, they were unable to do, the enemy occupying it in great force before our troops could reach it.

"It will be remembered that some hours before General Sickles, with two divisions of his corps, had been ordered to advance for the purpose of operating against the column of the enemy under Jackson. The giving way of the right left General Sickles in a very exposed and critical position; but upon being informed of the condition of affairs, he at once took measures to withdraw his force, which was successfully done, and without much loss. The enemy, under Jackson, continued to advance after the panic-stricken troops until checked by General Pleasonton, who had collected and brought into position some artillery for that purpose. Although a cavalry officer, he handled the artillery with exceeding great judgment and effectiveness. His skill, energy, daring, and promptness upon this occasion contributed greatly to arrest the disaster which for a time threatened the whole army. His conduct upon this and many other occasions marks him as one of the ablest generals in our service, and as deserving of far higher consideration than, from some cause, he appears to have received. It was during this attack the rebel General Jackson was mortally wounded. The enemy were repulsed with great loss, and active operations ceased for the night."

Pleasonton was now placed in command of the cavalry corps of the Army of the Potomac by Major-General Hooker, and the campaign of Gettysburg was opened by his crossing the Rappahannock and attacking the enemy's cavalry, under Stuart, at Beverly Ford and Brandy Station on the 9th of June, 1863. He had 6,000 cavalry, 3,000 infantry, and thirty-six pieces of artillery. Stuart had 18,000 cavalry and upward of forty pieces of artillery. The battle began at 5 o'clock in the morning and lasted until 7 o'clock in the evening. By this action Pleasonton ascertained the design of General Lee of moving into Pennsylvania, having captured official correspondence indicating the movement. The loss of the Union cavalry on that day was 1,000 men, but the loss of the enemy's cavalry was much greater, stated to have been 2,500 men. Moving rapidly from Beverly Ford to Aldie, in the Bull Run Mountains, the enemy were met and again defeated, and pursued to Middleburg and Upperville, and finally driven over the Blue Ridge Mountains. It was after the battle at Upperville that President Lincoln appointed Pleasonton a major-general of volunteers, to date from June 22, 1863.

At Frederick City, Pleasonton, finding the enemy's cavalry so superior in numbers, applied for and obtained another division of cavalry from Washington, to which he promoted his aids-de-camp, Custer and Farnsworth, to be brigadier-generals. Lee was at this time moving his army toward Chambersburg. The Army of the Potomac was put in motion by General Meade in the direction of Columbia and the Susquehanna River. The cavalry was placed to cover its front and flanks. The first division, under General Buford, was ordered by Pleasonton to Gettysburg, to hold that position at all hazards; the second division, under General Gregg, moved on the right of the Army, and the third division, under General Kilpatrick, in front toward Harrisburg.

At Hanover the third division struck Stuart, laden with plunder, which was recaptured and the enemy driven off with great loss.

At Gettysburg General Buford met the enemy on the morning of the 1st of July, 1863, and with the first division fought so hard to hold the position that he urged the necessity for the whole Army to support him, if it was expected we should retain it. Accordingly the different corps of the Army were marched in that direction, and the result was the battle of Gettysburg.

The cavalry throughout that battle protected the flanks of the Army, and sustained very severe losses in so doing, and followed in pursuit of the enemy immediately after the battle.

In the winter of 1864 the committee of the two Houses of Congress on the Conduct of the War called upon the different generals for their views with reference to the prosecution of the war in the next campaign. The members of the committee were so much impressed with the plans submitted by Pleasonton that they recommended to President Lincoln to place him in command of the Army of the Potomac, give him the men and material he required, and hold him responsible to execute that plan. The President was favorably inclined to do so, but other influences prevented its consummation, and the result was that in the spring of 1864 Pleasonton was ordered to the Department of Missouri, at Saint Louis. In the fall of that year the States of Missouri and Kansas were invaded by Gen. Sterling Price with a greatly superior force of cavalry and artillery to that which could be put into the field by the Federal commander, Maj. Gen. William S. Rosecrans. In his official report General Rosecrans describes the results of that campaign as follows:

"With less than 7,000 effective cavalry, have pursued, overtaken, beaten in several engagements, and finally routed an invading cavalry variously estimated at from 15,000 to 20,000 men, re-enforced by 6,000 armed recruits from Missouri, taken from them ten pieces of artillery, two stands of colors, 1,958 prisoners of war, a large number of horses, mules, wagons, and small-arms, compelled them to destroy most of their remaining wagon trains and plunder, blasted all the political schemes of the rebels and traitors who concerted with Price to revolutionize Missouri, destroy Kansas, and turn the State and Presidential elections against the Union cause, and by one triumph in the late elections have given to gallant and suffering Missouri the fairest prospect she has ever yet seen of future freedom, peace, prosperity—all the fruit of a campaign of forty-eight days, in which most of our victorious troops had never before seen a great battle. Rarely, during this or any war, has cavalry displayed more persevering energy in pursuit, more impetuous courage and gallantry in attacking, regardless of superior numbers, or had its efforts crowned with greater fruits of success. Major-General Pleasanton deserves the thanks of the country for the able manner in which he handled and fought the cavalry, and the brilliant and fruitful victories he won over triple his own force. I hope he may receive promotion in the regular Army."

This campaign closed the war in Missouri and west of the Mississippi River.

After the war closed and the regular Army had been reorganized, Pleasonton resigned in 1868, as he found his relative rank and position in the Army, after twenty-four years of the most active service, to be much lower than that which he had held before the war.

General Pleasonton is now well advanced in years. Having given the best years of his life to the military service of his country, he has failed to make that provision for himself which he deserves. Having a military training, and but few, if any, business aptitudes, his application appeals with redoubled force to the favorable consideration of Congress. The delicacy of manner with which such an appeal ought to be made precludes the statement of details; but your committee is thoroughly satisfied that he needs the kindly aid of Congress.

The committee therefore reports the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it be passed.

Mr. SEWELL. I indorse every word of that report, and of my own personal knowledge I have no hesitation in saying that General Pleasonton was one of the most gallant and distinguished officers of the war, and if the Senator from Colorado will to-day introduce a bill to place him on the retired-list and restore him to the Army I will cheerfully vote for it; but the bill to restore Fitz-John Porter is unique in its character; it is to vindicate a man. I do not want to load it down with any amendment, and I shall ask the friends of the bill to vote against any amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into any discussion of the Fitz-John Porter bill. I agree with the Senator from New Jersey that it is unique; that the history of it is unique; and I do not suppose the men who are so much interested in vindicating Mr. Porter will see any great virtues in General Pleasonton. The difference in the career of these two men during the war is so distinct and so marked, that that which commends itself to the mass of those who will vote for Mr. Porter is lacking in the record of General Pleasonton. Therefore I have not expected that very many, at least of those who are anxious to do what the Senator from New Jersey calls the vindication of Mr. Porter, will vote for my amendment.

I think it will be scarcely creditable to the American Senate that a man who served his country in every capacity with zeal, with fidelity, with intelligence and patriotic devotion shall be left in his old age in want and distress, as the report which has been read declares he is, and that the man who, disregarding a high duty imposed upon him, failed at the hour when his country demanded of him service, and who has the paltry excuse of a dark night, shall be put upon the pay-rolls of the Government and live hereafter at the expense of the nation.

I do not intend to go into any discussion either of the merits of my amendment or of the demerits of the bill to which I have attempted to attach it. I will let the vote when it is taken answer whether it is anxiety to vindicate a traduced and dishonored officer who had done his duty, or whether it is an effort that is being made by the great mass of his supporters here and elsewhere to undo the verdict of the country, to set aside a verdict as deliberately rendered as any verdict that was ever rendered in this country in a court of justice, to set aside the deliberate opinion of the men who had better opportunities of knowing than even the Senator from New Jersey with the light which he may have acquired by modern research. In my judgment the moving cause for the putting of Fitz-John Porter upon the records and rolls of the Government is not to vindicate a patriotic soldier, but it is to reward treachery, and there I am willing to leave it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, I do not intend to say a single word as to the merits of the bill under consideration. My votes in the past have been sufficient evidence as to my opinion touching the measure.

I wish to say a single word, however, in regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado. If he is really sincere in desiring relief for General Pleasonton, why does he not introduce an independent and separate proposition to accomplish that purpose? I think I can assure the Senator that if it has as much merit as the Porter bill the friends of Fitz-John Porter will be very anxious indeed to aid him in placing General Pleasonton upon the retired-list.

But I submit the amendment has no place upon this bill. The bill has already passed the House of Representatives and the Committee on Military Affairs of this body. It has passed Congress before, having I think three times passed the Senate. We are to-day to take a vote upon the proposition, and if it were sent back to the other House loaded with amendments the probabilities are that we should not have final action taken upon the bill during this session.

Fitz-John Porter is an old man, and I submit to the Senate that it is exceedingly unkind, exceedingly unjust, to require him to wait one single day longer for the relief to which he is entitled, and which the bill proposes to give him.

I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado will not be placed upon the bill, but that the separate and distinct proposition which was reported to us from the committee will have a vote in the Senate and at once.

Mr. LOGAN. That is to say that no man except a treacherous one shall be restored to the Army.

Mr. TELLER. The objection urged against this amendment by the Senator from New Jersey who last spoke [Mr. MCPHERSON] is an imaginary objection, if there is any such disposition among Fitz-John Porter's friends to do to other soldiers as he professes. If putting on the bill the case of a loyal soldier against whom there has never been a breath of scandal will render it obnoxious to the Democratic majority of the other House, then I am anxious to put it on; and that is the logic of the Senator's argument. The Democrats have a majority in that body, and it goes without saying that wherever you find a Democrat you find an ardent supporter of Fitz-John Porter. I do not now say why; but it is a fact that wherever you find a Democrat you find a supporter of Porter.

Why will it endanger this bill to send it back to where there is a majority so large as there is in the other House? Because the friends of Porter are not vindicating him as they say on account of his loyalty. That is not what commends this bill to the great mass of the men who are voting for it and to the great mass of men in this country who are crying for it. It is not the loyal men; and if they are afraid to vote for it in connection with a loyal man, I want to see the vote taken.

[Mr. PLUMB addressed the Senate. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to ask that the report of the Senate committee, which also embodies the report of the House committee in the case of Mrs. Hunter, be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that a report be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, April 28, 1886.

Mr. SEWELL. I object to the reading of that report as not germane to this subject at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When a paper is asked to be read and objection is made it is the duty of the Chair to submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the report that is asked to be read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A report in respect to a pension case. The question of its relevancy or irrelevancy has nothing to do with the matter.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from New Hampshire has a right to say anything he pleases as his remarks in this case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly; but when the question is raised——

Mr. BLAIR. If it is necessary in order to secure the reading of the report that I shall read it myself I can do so.

Mr. CONGER. Read it loud.

Mr. BLAIR. I will say in regard to the case of Mrs. Hunter, the widow of the officer who was president of the court-martial that adjudged Fitz-John Porter guilty, that no such case has failed to pass Congress when presented to Congress for its consideration, and certainly no such case was ever vetoed by a President. In fact, so far as I know, but one pension bill has ever been vetoed by a President of the United States until the present session. We have at the present session passed a bill giving to the widow of Major-General Hancock a pension of $2,000 a year; and but for the fact that from Democratic sources that bill reached us at so small a sum, the Republican members of the committee, and I doubt not the Republican members of the Senate, would have passed an act giving her $5,000 a year.

The widows of our Presidents, regardless of the amount of property which they may possess, some of them being very wealthy to-day, have received in recent years pensions at the rate which I have mentioned, $5,000 apiece. Every major-general whose widow has come asking a pension has received it without grudging or hesitation, at least in these later years, at the rate of $50 per month; and it has come to be the unwritten law of the land until there is no opposition from any party, but on application they receive it.

As has been stated, many pension bills have been passed at the present session, and so far as I know approved, or, if not approved directly, they have become laws by the failure of the Executive to veto them, excepting this one case.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from New Hampshire not admit that a bill pensioning the widow of a commodore was vetoed within the last three or four days?

Mr. BLAIR. I spoke of the widows of major-generals. There have been some exceptions from time to time in the case of widows of commodores. That is very true, and no man is more likely to protest against the veto of a bill giving a pension to a commodore's widow than the Senator from New Jersey who reported and maintained it.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will call his attention to the fact that the rank of a commodore is not equivalent to that of a major-general.

Mr. BLAIR. That is certainly so. That I supposed the Senator understood; but that only emphasizes the almost universal practice, and of which the Senator from New Jersey himself is aware, that the widows of officers of still lower rank receive, without objection and with the approval of the present Executive, $50 per month.

There were peculiar circumstances in the case of the widow of Major-General Hunter which are not stated in this report; but there were circumstances connected with her health, her peculiarly nervous condition, which made it almost like the stab of death to refuse to this woman her pension. They could not have been unknown to any one who was sufficiently familiar with the facts in this case to justify a veto; and if there is any motive which can be conceived by any man who knows anything of the circumstances surrounding this and other cases, the private pension cases generally, which should have led to the veto of this particular bill, save the one intimated by the Senator from Kansas, I am unable to divine that motive. It is against the practice of the Government.

The facts upon which the relief is asked are stated in the following report of the House committee (House Report No. 1522), which your committee adopt.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from New Hampshire will allow me a word. I am informed upon what I conceive to be perfectly reliable authority that the veto complained of was written and sent here because the claim of the pensioner is still pending for settlement before the Pension Bureau. I give that as information which has just reached me. If that is true it ought to be known.

Mr. TELLER. A very poor reason.

Mr. BLAIR. I am very glad if that is the only reason, for it is a reason that is utterly unreasonable.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator allow me a moment further? I spent a few years on the Pension Committee, and I say here to the Senator from Colorado, who said it was a poor reason, that I never knew Congress to take action upon a claim for a pension and pass a law to give a person a pension until the claim was rejected by the bureau. That has been the uniform practice. I served on that committee a hard siege, and I know whereof I speak, and it would be "confusion worse confounded" more than anything we know of if Congress and the bureau should take jurisdiction at the same time of the same claim, and be engaged in disposing of it at the same time. Instead of its being a poor reason, as suggested by the Senator from Colorado, it is an absolutely good reason.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator needs no vindication so far as his personal generosity and liberality are concerned in dealing with pension cases; and were he the Executive this case never would have been vetoed for the reason which he has stated, or for any other I doubt not. But the reason given does not apply in this case and never did apply in the practice of the committee. This application was for a pension of $50 per month, the granting of which is entirely above and beyond and outside of the jurisdiction of the Pension Office; and it is the almost uniform practice of those who design to ask for a claimant pension at the rate of $50, which is beyond the jurisdiction of the Pension Office, to come in the first instance to Congress itself, and where they fail in the first instance to ask for $50 as has been the case in some former years, application has been made and the claim passes under the general law at the rate of $30, and years afterward they have come to us and asked for the increase from $30 to $50. The Senator is quite right that where the application is for remedy under the general law, within the scope of the general law, it is the uniform practice (unless there may be exceptional circumstances to take it out of the ordinary reasons), the uniform practice is to apply at the Pension Office, as it ought to be. But in cases like this the uniform practice and the reason of the thing are quite the contrary.

The friends of Mrs. Hunter properly brought her case, the death being recent and Congress in session, to the attention of the Senate and the House of Representatives in the first instance, and it is in accordance with uniform practice to grant such pensions in precisely the same way that this case passed Congress and went to the President. If the President had the excuse of ignorance, I thank God that he has so good a one, and that I might be mistaken in the inference which I drew, which was still worse. I hope he has the same excuse in the many other instances where he has vetoed cases as just and as strong as we have ever passed or as have ever been approved by any Executive.

I have examined more than one-half the cases where he has sent vetoes to the Senate, and I aver upon my honor that there is no single instance where he has made a veto that I do not believe he has made it wrongfully. He gets his facts from the Pension Office, an office which we have overruled by our decisions. They send him reports in self-defense, and he vetoes upon the assumption that those allegations are true. Sir, the Executive ought to know that in addition to all the evidence which is before the Pension Office, in most cases the Senate and House of Representatives are in possession of additional evidence of an important character often, and of a decisive character, and which it may be had it originally been in the possession of the Pension Office and in due form might have resulted in the granting of the pension there. No tribunal reviewing the action of Congress is justified in finding the fact contrary to the facts as they are found by Congress, unless in possession of the evidence upon which Congress have formed their conclusions.

Major-General Hunter had been in service longer than almost any other major-general whose widow we have ever pensioned at all, and he had rendered pre-eminent service; and there were, as I stated before, very special reasons why this woman's case should not have been vetoed in ignorance of the facts and of the law and of the uniform practice. I will now proceed to read the report:

The facts upon which the relief is asked are stated in the following report of the House committee (House Report No. 1522), which your committee adopt, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment. Strike out in the eighth and ninth lines the words "six hundred dollars per annum," and insert in lieu thereof "fifty dollars per month."

Mr. SEWELL. I withdraw my objection to the reading of the report at the desk if the Senator insists upon it.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well; let the Secretary proceed with the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the report will be read from the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The claimant is the widow of the late Maj. Gen. David Hunter, who died on the 2d day of February, 1886. General David Hunter was one of the most distinguished soldiers of the late war, as his military record, herewith attached and made part of this report, shows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 20, 1886.

Statement of the military service of David Hunter, late of the United States Army, compiled from the records of this office.

He was a cadet at the United States Military Academy from September 14, 1818, to July 1, 1822, when he was graduated and appointed second lieutenant Fifth Infantry; promoted first lieutenant June 30, 1828; appointed captain First Dragoons, March 4, 1833, resigned July 4, 1836; appointed additional paymaster November 13, 1841; vacated appointment as such March 14, 1842, having been appointed major and paymaster United States Army from that date; appointed colonel Sixth United States Cavalry, May 14, 1861; brigadier-general United States Volunteers, May 17, 1861, and major-general United States Volunteers, August 13, 1861; honorably mustered out of the volunteer service January 15, 1866; retired from active service with the rank of colonel, July 31, 1866.

He was brevetted brigadier-general United States Army March 13, 1865, "for gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Piedmont and during the campaign in the valley of Virginia," and major-general United States Army, March 13, 1865, "for gallant and meritorious services during the war."

He joined his regiment in January, 1823, and served therewith in Minnesota to April, 1825; on leave to November, 1825; with regiment in Minnesota and Wisconsin to October 23, 1827; on leave to April 15, 1828; with regiment in Minnesota to June, 1828; at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., to October, 1828; at Fort Dearborn, Ill., to May, 1831, and at Fort Howard, Wis., to June 28, 1831; on leave to June, 1832; with regiment at Forts Winnebago and Howard, Wis., to April 18, 1833, when, having been appointed captain First Dragoons, he left to join that regiment and served therewith at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., to November 20, 1833, and in the Indian Territory and Kansas to January 20, 1836; on leave to July 4, 1836, when he resigned.

He served in Florida from date of reappointment in the Army as additional paymaster until April, 1842; at Washington, D. C., to June, 1842; in Arkansas to July, 1846; in the war with Mexico to July, 1848; at New Orleans, La., to March, 1849; at Washington, D. C., Detroit, Mich., and New York city to May, 1856; in Kansas and Saint Louis, Mo., to February, 1861, and at Washington, D. C., to date of appointment as colonel Sixth United States Cavalry.

He served as a brigade and division commander in the department of northeastern Virginia (General McDowell's army) from May 28, 1861, to July 21, 1861, when wounded in action at Bull Run, Va.; commanded first division of the Western Department from September 22, 1861, to November 3, 1861, the Western Department to November 19, 1861, the Department of Kansas to March 11, 1862, and the Department of the South from March 15 to August 22, 1862; on leave to September 23, 1862; member of a military commission at Washington, D. C., to January 20, 1863; commanding Department of the South to June 12, 1863; on special duty at Washington, D. C., to March 20, 1864; awaiting orders to May 19, 1864; awaiting orders to January 31, 1865; on special duty and awaiting orders to muster-out of volunteer service January 15, 1866; on leave of absence to July 31, 1866, when he was retired at his own request, being over sixty-two years of age (act July 17, 1862).

He served as a member of the special claims commission from August 9, 1866, and also of a board for the examination of cavalry officers to June 16, 1868, from which date he was unemployed until he died, February 2, 1886.

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

In view of this record, and the present condition of his widow, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. VEST. I should like to inquire if that veto message has come to the Senate or the House? Is it a House or a Senate bill?

Mr. BLAIR. It was a House bill.

Mr. VEST. Then I understand that the Senator from New Hampshire has had this report read in order that he may criticise a document which we have never seen, and the existence of which we have only a statement by a Senator that some person unknown to the Senate and whose name he has not given has informed him that such a veto has been sent. I submit, sir, without reference to the political status of the President of the United States that it is neither just, nor right, nor proper.

Mr. BLAIR. If it should turn out that I have made any unjust allegation as a matter of fact I will apologize.

Mr. VEST. That is not sufficient for making the statement to the Senate. What I complain of and what I criticise is the fact that the poorest privilege that is given to the humblest citizen in this land, even in a civil suit involving the smallest amount of money, is denied to the President of the United States in this Chamber. Whatever we may think of the gentleman who holds that position he is certainly entitled to be heard before he is criticised and condemned. What his reasons may be for this veto message are contained in the document, if there be such a document. We have heard again and again from the Senator from New Hampshire what are the facts in different cases where veto messages have been sent to this and to the other branch of Congress. I submit that when the committee of which that Senator is a member has reported and when all the facts are in possession of the Senate that will be the appropriate time for his criticism and for any response. I take it that the allegation that such a document is wandering somewhere around in this Capitol is not sufficient basis for the purpose which the Senator has evinced by his observations here to-day.

LANDS AT SAN ANTONIO—FORT BRADY.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I rise to a privileged motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONGER. In the absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] I send up the report of the conference committee on House bill 7183, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan submits a report from a committee of conference, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. 7183) to authorize the purchase of a certain tract of land near San Antonio, Tex., having met, after a full and free conference have agreed and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

F. M. COCKRELL,
O. D. CONGER,
BENJAMIN HARRISON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
B. M. CUTCHEON,
J. LAIRD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. HOAR. I should be glad for the information of the Senate if the Chair would state, as a matter of parliamentary information, what is the privilege of a conference report in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that by common custom rather than by express rule a report of a committee of conference may be made at any time.

Mr. HOAR. I so understand it myself, but some Senator was conversing with me the other day on the question of the rule, and I wanted to have it settled authoritatively.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not referred to the rule, and is not aware of any express rule, but is referring only to the general custom of the Senate.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In further reply to the Senator from Massachusetts, the Chair is now advised that there is a rule which expressly gives a privilege to reports of committees of conference. The Chair will ask for the reading of the twenty-seventh rule, so that Senators may understand it.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XXVII.

REPORTS OF CONFERENCE COMMITTEES.

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received, the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 177) appointing managers for the National Homes for Disabled Soldiers to fill vacancies in the board which occurred by expiration of terms on the 1st day of April, 1886.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7183) to authorize the purchase of a certain tract of land near San Antonio, Tex., and to provide for the sale of the old site of Fort Brady, Michigan, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 5) authorizing payment of C. H. Mann, messenger to the reporters' gallery.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7481) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PLUMB. In the absence of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE], who has charge of this bill, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and accede to the request of the House of Representatives for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MAHONE, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. CALL were appointed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 177) appointing managers for the National Homes for Disabled Soldiers to fill vacancies in the board which occurred by expiration of terms on the 1st day of April, 1886, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 67) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter.

Mr. BLAIR. In reply to the complaint of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that the President has been unfairly dealt with in the suggestions that have been made touching the veto of the bill of Mrs. Hunter, I wish to say that the message, with many others, was read in open session of the House this morning and laid on the table, and is just as much in the possession of the country as it ever will be, and we have all the information in regard to it officially that we and the other branch of the legislative power are likely to possess, as legitimate a subject of discussion and of criticism now as it ever can be in this body.

Now I ask the Senator from Missouri if having perused the messages which have reached the Senate he has observed that the President has taken notice of and criticised what the Senate itself does, and what he does not officially know, that it transacts business without a quorum, and that it passes laws by minorities, and that he feels that when he is vetoing bills he is not running counter to the majority sentiment of Congress by reason of the heedlessness and the violation of their oaths which they practice in the transaction of their public duty?

Mr. SEWELL. I should like to get the Senate back to the consideration of the bill, and I trust we may have a vote now on the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. The question of a pension does not seem to be very pertinent to the pending measure, but the Senator from Indiana made a statement first as to the reason of the veto, which I take it was probably correct. He then stated that the rule of the committee had been not to interfere with a case if it was pending in the Pension Office. When he made the statement that the Executive had vetoed the bill because the case was pending in the Pension Office, I said that was not a good reason. On that he raised an issue with me.

I wish to say that when the committee propose to give the same pension exactly as would be given by the Pension Office if the pension were allowed there, they always wait for the final action of the Pension Office; but in this case it was not proposed by the committee to confine the amount to the pension allowed by the general law. So I said, when the President held that it was not the exercise of a sound judgment and discretion for Congress to give $50 because it was yet an unsettled question in the Pension Office whether the woman would not get considerably less, it was not a good reason; and I repeat now it is not a good reason. Congress has an unquestioned right to make the amount of every pension by special act twice as great as the pension allowed by general law; it is pro tanto the repeal of the law; and it is no answer to the action of Congress to say if we would let alone the case the Pension Office would find the woman entitled to $31 a month when Congress proposed to give her $50 a month. So I said, and so I repeat, that it is no good reason.

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes; but Congress could not tell in advance how much the bureau was going to allow her. Consequently the argument of the Senator fails for the want of an understood fact.

Mr. TELLER. If she was granted a pension by the Pension Office it would be at a rate fixed by law. This body knew exactly what she would get there, if she got anything; and we had a right to say that she should get twice as much. We had a right to say with reference to her, as we said with reference to the widow of one of the ex-Presidents, Mrs. Tyler, who was getting $100 a month by a special act, when we declared that she should receive $5,000 a year; and we had a right to say that Mrs. Hunter should have $600 a year instead of about half that amount; and the President is not justified in saying that such a discretion does not lie with Congress.

We sit here to determine whether we will put upon the rolls an officer dismissed from the service twenty-four years ago. We spend our time in that way. The President of the United States, with a multitude of great interests presented to him, spends his time in determining whether a widow should be allowed a pension of $31 a month or whether she should have $50. I do not believe the great mass of the loyal people of the United States will think that either the Senate is engaged in a very laudable purpose to-day, or that the President is engaged in a very laudable purpose when he is finding some reason to deprive the widow of a soldier of $250 or $300 a year extra.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. TELLER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as an additional section to the bill:

SEC. — That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Alfred Pleasonton, late a major-general of the United States volunteers and a brevet major-general of the United States Army, to the position of colonel in the Army of the United States, and to place him on the retired-list of the Army as of that grade, the retired-list being hereby increased in number to that extent; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The Secretary proceed to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). On this question and all questions relating to the bill I am paired with my colleague [Mr. PIKE], who is absent from the Senate sick. If he were present, I should vote "yea" on the pending amendment.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when Mr. CAMDEN'S name was called). The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). On the bill and all amendments to the bill I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. HOAR (when the name of Mr. DAWES was called). My colleague [Mr. DAWES] is absent in Massachusetts, and is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). On the bill and all votes concerning it, I am paired with the junior Senator from California [Mr. HEARST]. If he were here, I should vote "yea" on this amendment and he would vote "nay," I presume.

Mr. LOGAN (when the name of Mr. EDMUNDS was called). I have received a note from the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] asking me to state that he is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] on the bill and all questions pertaining to it.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If he were present, I do not know how he would vote; I should vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER (when Mr. HAMPTON'S name was called). I understand that my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SAWYER. I was just going to state that I have transferred my pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] so that I may vote.

Mr. BUTLER. There is no objection to that arrangement.

Mr. SAWYER. Very well; let that be understood.

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I was paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER], but at the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] the Senator from New York is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], and both the Senator from Wisconsin and myself are at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when Mr. SAULSBURY'S name was called). The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. BOWEN. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. I should vote "yea," if he were here.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK]; and that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. MANDERSON. I was paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN], who is detained from the Chamber by sickness, but by an understanding the pair has been transferred to his colleague [Mr. MCMILLAN].

Mr. DOLPH. I agreed yesterday to pair with the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST] on this bill. At that time the expectation was that the vote might be taken yesterday. The Senator from California not being present at the roll-call just taken I withheld my vote, but I am informed that the senior Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] would vote "yea" on the pending amendment, and as he is usually paired with his colleague, I will take the liberty of transferring my pair to the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am informed that my colleague [Mr. SABIN] would vote "nay" upon this question. I have no personal knowledge myself, but he voted that way last year. He is detained at home by sickness. Under the circumstances I have consented to make a pair between him and myself. I would vote "yea" on the amendment without committing myself in any way to a vote upon the final passage of the bill in the affirmative if the amendment is adopted.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Ingalls,	Sherman,
Allison,	Frye,	Logan,	Spooner,
Conger,	Hale,	Manderson,	Teller,
Cullom,	Harrison,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dolph,	Hawley,	Sawyer,

NAYS—29.

Beck,	Colquitt,	McPherson,	Vest,
Berry,	George,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Gibson,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Walthall,
Butler,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Whitthorne,
Call,	Gray,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Cameron,	Hoar,	Riddleberger,
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sewell,
Coke,	Jones of Nevada,	Vance,

ABSENT—28.

Blackburn,	Eustis,	McMillan,	Pike,
Blair,	Fair,	Mahone,	Platt,
Bowen,	Hampton,	Miller,	Plumb,
Camden,	Harris,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sabin,
Chace,	Hearst,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Edmunds,	Kenna,	Payne,	Van Wyck.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add as a new section to the bill:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria Hunter, widow of David Hunter, late colonel of the Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry and major-general of United States volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VOORHEES. Is that amendment in order to the bill pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order; there is no question of relevancy required by the rules. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with my absent colleague [Mr. PIKE], and refrain from voting.

Mr. BOWEN (when his name was called). I am paired on the bill and amendments with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. I shall not announce the pair again. If I were not paired I should vote for the amendment and against the bill.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. I do not know how he would vote. I should vote "nay" if I were not paired.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Florida, was called). The Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. LOGAN. With whom is the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] paired?

Mr. CULLOM. He is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] permanently.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to announce my pair upon this question with my colleague [Mr. SABIN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER. I announce for the last time that my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired on this question with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Ingalls,	Sherman,
Allison,	Frye,	Logan,	Spooner,
Conger,	Hale,	Manderson,	Teller,
Cullom,	Harrison,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dolph,	Hawley,	Sawyer,

NAYS—29.

Beck,	Colquitt,	McPherson,	Vest,
Berry,	George,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Walthall,
Brown,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Whitthorne,
Butler,	Gray,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Call,	Hoar,	Riddleberger,
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkasas,	Sewell,
Coke,	Jones of Nevada,	Vance,

ABSENT—28.

Blair,	Eustis,	McMillan,	Pike,
Bowen,	Fair,	Mahone,	Platt,
Camden,	Hampton,	Miller,	Plumb,
Cameron,	Harris,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sabin,
Chace,	Hearst,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Edmunds,	Kenna,	Payne,	Van Wyck.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That any officer of the volunteer service who received an honorable discharge from the United States service for services rendered the Union during the late rebellion, and who received a wound or wounds producing total disability, or which incapacitated him from pursuing his usual avocation in procuring a livelihood, shall, on application and proof of the above facts, be placed upon the retired-list with the rank held by such officer at the time of receiving the wound or wounds aforesaid: Provided, That the President shall see fit to nominate them to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I do not want to criticise the Senator's own amendment, but I suppose he means to say in the last sentence "provided the President shall see fit to nominate them and the Senate shall confirm them." By law of course the mere act of nomination by the President is not sufficient.

Mr. LOGAN. I will add the words "and the Senate confirm the same."

Mr. HOAR. It is merely a matter of expression.

Mr. LOGAN. All right. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I announce my pair with my colleague [Mr. PIKE] on all questions connected with this bill.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am requested to announce the pair of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR] with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK]; the pair of the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST] with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]; the pair of the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL]; and the pair of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PLUMB. I am paired on this question with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN. I announce my pair with my colleague [Mr. SABIN]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Allison,	Frye,	Logan,	Spooner,
Conger,	Hale,	Manderson,	Teller,
Cullom,	Harrison,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dolph,	Hawley,	Sawyer,
Evarts,	Ingalls,	Sherman,

NAYS—29.

Beck,	Colquitt,	McPherson,	Vest,
Berry,	George,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Walthall,
Brown,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Whitthorne,
Butler,	Gray,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Call,	Hoar,	Riddleberger,
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sewell,
Coke,	Jones of Nevada,	Vance,

ABSENT—29.

Aldrich,	Eustis,	Mahone,	Plumb,
Blair,	Fair,	Miller,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Harris,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Hearst,	Morrill,	Van Wyck.
Chace,	Jones of Florida,	Payne,
Dawes,	Kenna,	Pike,
Edmunds,	McMillan,	Platt,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAIR. I offer the following amendment:

SEC. —. That in all cases of applications for pensions, under the laws of the United States, which shall have been rejected on appeal from the decision of the Commissioner to the Secretary of Interior, the claimant of the pension, or his legal representative to the right of the pension, may file his petition in the district court of the United States in the district wherein he resides, for the pension, setting forth, with other necessary averments, the rejection of his claim by the Secretary of the Interior; and thereupon the court shall hear and try his cause, and such proceedings shall be had as in other cases, including the trial by jury whenever the claimant demands it, and the right of appeal to the higher courts upon questions of law and fact; and upon the hearing the claimant shall have the right to use all evidence, documents, and papers of every description which have been filed in the proceedings before the Commissioner of Pensions and Secretary of the Interior; and all record or other evidence in possession of the Government, or copies thereof shall be furnished, on application by the claimant, for use in such proceedings in the district court.

Mr. BECK. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. BLAIR. I have the floor, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. This amendment is a bill which has been considered by the Committee on Pensions and which I have been directed to report to the Senate. It applies to all cases where application has been made to the Commissioner of Pensions, have been prosecuted through that office, and failing there have been carried by appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, and upon adverse decision by the Secretary of the Interior have been rejected finally, so that the applicant has no remedy within reach unless he comes to Congress for legislation. The bill proposed by me as an amendment, if it should become a law, would sweep away probably nineteen-twentieths of all the legislation upon private pension bills, and it would relieve the President of a great deal of onerous work, as well as both Houses of Congress.

Unless such a remedy be applied, these cases will come to Congress at the rate of probably at least a thousand every Congress, and the committees will be obliged to consider them year after year, Congress after Congress, unless some remedy of this kind is devised. Now when the claimant must not only run the gauntlet of exact and careful consideration by both Houses of Congress but also by the Executive, I for my part consider that it is a hopeless task for this class of litigants to hope for any remedy whatever here.

The committee have thought that a measure of this kind has become indispensable. I hope that it will be favorably considered in the public interest without reference to the present bill or any of the peculiar circumstances which surround us at the present time. It simply gives to these men whose claims have been rejected here at Washington the right that every man has in the vindication of any civil claim whatever to appeal to a jury of his countrymen, to carry before that jury in the district court of the country in the district where he may chance to reside precisely the same evidence which is acted upon here at the Department, and in addition to that such other evidence as he may be able to secure, and to abide the judgment of the men in whose vicinity he lives, who know all about him, who have known his case by reputation for the last quarter of a century; and if he can establish his claim and obtain a verdict at the hands of twelve good men and true of all parties, it seems to me that the Government ought not to deny him the right to make the attempt.

That is the object of the amendment, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he will withdraw his amendment, as I have one other amendment which I wish to offer.

Mr. BECK. I have the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly; I will withdraw it.

Mr. LOGAN. And let his amendment come in afterward.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is withdrawn.

Mr. BECK. My object in rising was to state that no matter how good this may be as a separate proposition, or how good any other amendment may be as a separate proposition, the Fitz-John Porter bill ought either to be passed or defeated on its own merits and not be sent back to the other House encumbered by another proposition that may perhaps take months to consider. We might as well attach the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the consular and diplomatic, and the pension appropriation bill, or any other bill, to the Fitz-John Porter. Therefore I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. LOGAN. But the Senator from New Hampshire has withdrawn it.

Mr. BECK. He could not withdraw it while I had the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky had the floor, but before his motion was made he gave way.

Mr. BECK. If the Senator desires to withdraw the amendment for the present, very well. If it is not withdrawn, I move to lay it on the table.

Mr. LOGAN. Now, I desire to offer an amendment that I think the Senator from Kentucky will not object to for the reason that it will not take months to consider it. It is one giving to the officers who commanded at the second battle of Bull Run and lost a leg, an arm, or an eye the right to be placed on the retired-list by the side of Mr. Porter. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend by adding as an additional section:

That all officers who were engaged in the battle of Bull Run, on the 29th and 30th of August, 1862, who were in command of Union troops during said battle on either of the days above mentioned, who received wounds during said engagement causing the loss of arm, leg, or eye, and who were afterward honorably discharged from the service of the United States, shall, on application and proof of the foregoing facts, be placed upon the retired-list with the rank held by them at the time of receiving such wounds, whether in the regular or volunteer service. Vacancies on the retired-list are hereby created for this purpose, if the President shall see fit to nominate them to the Senate and the Senate shall confirm the same.

Mr. BECK. I make the same objection to that as to the other amendment. The question in regard to the fitness of some of those men and what they have done may occupy weeks in the House. Somebody may suggest that some man honorably discharged was unfit to go on the retired-list. If the Fitz-John Porter case has merit it ought to pass, and if it has not it ought not to pass; but it ought not to be encumbered, especially by opponents of the bill offering amendments that will embarrass it more or less.

I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senator to withdraw that motion for one minute.

Mr. BECK. Very well, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to say, in response to the Senator from Kentucky, that this will not in the slightest degree embarrass Fitz-John Porter or his bill if it shall pass, for the reason that it provides that where an officer of the Union Army in the same battle who fought where he did not fight, lost an arm, a leg, or an eye in that contest, and makes that proof to the satisfaction of either the President of the United States or the Secretary of War, and the President shall be satisfied to send the name of that officer to the Senate and the Senate shall confirm him, he shall be placed on the retired-list. I should like to know how that encumbers the bill. It is only placing men who did fight and were wounded and honorably discharged on a level with a man who did not fight and who was dishonorably dismissed.

Mr. BECK. I am not going into the Fitz-John Porter case. I have heard it argued over and over year after year. I know that men like General Terry, General Grant, and General Schofield, and others say that General Fitz-John Porter did fight.

Mr. LOGAN. No; they do not say he fought.

Mr. BECK. I know the Senator from Illinois fought wherever he got a chance. That is one quality he had.

Mr. LOGAN. They do not say he fought.

Mr. BECK. A great many others are held up as great soldiers who did not do so much. The Senator from Illinois is not one of them. If this proposition has merit it can be passed by itself. If the Fitz-John Porter case can not stand alone it ought not to be helped on by this; and if it is a good case it ought not to be embarrassed by this. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. DOLPH. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BECK. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I am paired, as I have announced before, with my colleague [Mr. PIKE], or I should vote for the amendment.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I announce my pair with my colleague [Mr. SABIN] on this amendment. If it were not for the pair, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Ingalls,	Spooner,
Allison,	Frye,	Logan,	Teller,
Conger,	Hale,	Manderson,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Harrison,	Palmer,
Dolph,	Hawley,	Sawyer,

NAYS—29.

Beck,	Colquitt,	McPherson,	Vest,
Berry,	George,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Walthall,
Brown,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Whitthorne,
Butler,	Gray,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Call,	Hoar,	Riddleberger,
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sewell,
Coke,	Jones of Nevada,	Vance,

ABSENT—29.

Blair,	Fair,	Miller,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Harris,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Hearst,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Chace,	Jones of Florida,	Payne,	Van Wyck.
Dawes,	Kenna,	Pike,
Edmunds,	McMillan,	Platt,
Eustis,	Mahone,	Plumb,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no further amendment be proposed——

Mr. BLAIR. What became of the amendment which I offered which was deferred until action was had on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was withdrawn.

Mr. BLAIR. No, it was not withdrawn. But I rose for the purpose of saying that as it was apparent that it might be defeated, as this is a serious proposition looking directly, and is to my mind the only proposition which can look directly, to relief from the pension legislation on private bills which is swamping Congress and the Executive, and as I am anxious to create no prejudice whatever against it, so that it may come up at some time and be considered fairly on its merits, I withdraw the amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. LOGAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. PIKE], who is absent from the Senate sick. If present, he would vote for the bill and I should vote against it.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. HOAR (when the name of Mr. DAWES was called). I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. DAWES] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). On the passage of the bill I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SABIN], who is detained at home by sickness. I should vote "nay," if he were present, and he would vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GRAY (when Mr. SAULSBURY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SAULSBURY] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON (when Mr. VAN WYCK'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. VAN WYCK] is paired on this question with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CHACE. If the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am requested to announce the pair of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR], who would vote "yea," with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], who would vote "nay."

I am also requested by the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST] to announce the fact that he is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. I am informed that the pair has been changed to the senior Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. I do not know by what authority, and therefore I speak of it here.

Mr. CULLOM. Representing to some extent this side of the House on that subject, I am informed that my friend the senior Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] is generally paired with his colleague [Mr. HEARST] when the latter is absent.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to say, although perhaps not authorized to say, that the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] is in favor of the bill. Therefore I make this remark at this time, that the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST] may not understand that I have neglected his pair.

I am also requested to state that the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES], who would vote "yea," is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL], who would vote "nay."

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] also requested me to state that he would vote "yea" on the bill, and is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who would vote "nay."

Mr. DOLPH. Yesterday I was spoken to to pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. HEARST] upon this bill. I supposed at the time that it had reference to that day and that it was expected a vote might be reached on that day. To-day when I saw that the junior Senator from California was not present I withheld my vote and announced the fact of the arrangement, and said that I withheld my vote as I supposed it might have been understood that the pair continued until to-day. I was then informed on this side of the Chamber that the junior Senator from California was usually paired with his colleague, and also by some Senators that the latter would vote against the bill. I then went to the Senator from New Jersey and spoke to him about it, and I understood him to say that if the senior Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] was not present and the junior Senator from California [Mr. HEARST] was paired with him it was all right.

Now, under the circumstances, I desire to withdraw my vote and it will not change the result. Although I have voted on some of the amendments, it would not change the result. I withdraw my vote on the bill, because I will not be subject to the criticism. I went to the Senator from New Jersey and conferred with him, and I understood him to acquiesce in the arrangement and say it was all right.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The junior Senator from California left the matter of his pair with me. He stated to me that he was paired generally with his colleague [Mr. STANFORD], but that his colleague desired to vote for this bill, and therefore he must seek another pair. I went to the Senator from Oregon——

Mr. LOGAN. Did the senior Senator from California so inform you?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will come to that in a moment. After the Senator from California informed me of that fact I went to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] to request a pair with the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST], and he agreed to pair with him. The Senator from California left here with the understanding that he was paired with the Senator from Oregon upon this bill. I do not wish by any error of mine to have a complication in the affair, so that both the Senators from California shall be left to say that neither of them has voted as he expected to do. If the Senator from Oregon will pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. HEARST], then so far as I am concerned and so far as any matter that is left in my charge is concerned, it will simplify the case very much.

Mr. DOLPH. I correctly stated the fact that after the first vote was called I went to the Senator from New Jersey to inquire about the matter, did I not? And I certainly understood the Senator to say that if the Senator from California was absent it was all right.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I said that if it was within the knowledge of the Senator from Oregon that the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] was against the bill, I would not ask any change.

Mr. DOLPH. I can not state that; but I am so informed by Senators on this side. I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The debate is not in order. During the call of the roll the rule is express that there shall be no debate and no interruption.

Mr. RANSOM. I desire to state that the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] are paired on this bill. The Senator from South Carolina would vote "yea," if he were present, and the Senator from New York would vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator from Illinois says the senior Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] is against the bill, I will pair with him and withdraw my vote.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not going to state how anybody would vote, for I do not know. I only wanted to say, if the President will allow me, in response to the Senator from New Jersey, that after the bill has been carried, I can not see the necessity of a man showing his great anxiety and desire, and it looks like a little vindictiveness, to insist that men are paired and how they would vote without knowing anything about it. I do not know how the Senator from California would vote if present, and I do not care, and I do not think the Senator from New Jersey knows either.

Mr. MCPHERSON. When the junior Senator from California [Mr. HEARST] left here he left with the understanding that he was paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. Senators will bear with me a moment longer. He left here, as I have stated, with the understanding that he was paired with the Senator from Oregon. The Senator from Oregon came to my seat this afternoon and said he desired to have the pair transferred to the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD], and did not state to me——

Mr. BUTLER. Is this in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask for the announcement of the result.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Beck,	Coke,	Jones of Nevada,	Vance,
Berry,	Colquitt,	McPherson,	Vest,
Blackburn,	George,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Gibson,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Walthall,
Butler,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Whitthorne,
Call,	Gray,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Cameron,	Hoar,	Riddleberger,
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sewell,

NAYS—17.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Logan,	Teller,
Allison,	Hale,	Manderson,	Wilson of Iowa,
Conger,	Harrison,	Palmer,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Sawyer,
Evarts,	Ingalls,	Spooner,

ABSENT—29.

Blair,	Fair,	Miller,	Sabin.
Bowen,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Harris,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Chace,	Hearst,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Payne,	Van Wyck.
Dolph,	Kenna,	Pike,
Edmunds,	McMillan,	Platt,
Eustis,	Mahone,	Plumb,

So the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The preamble will be considered as agreed to if there be no separate vote called for.

TELEGRAPH AT MANITOU ISLANDS.

Mr. CONGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to cause inquiry to be made as to the necessity and feasibility of connecting by telegraph the life-saving station on the North Manitou Island, the harbor and proposed life-saving station on the South Manitou Island, Lake Michigan, with the mainland at some point where the Western Union Telegraph Company has an office, in its relations and advantages to navigation and to the Life-Saving Service, and report thereon to the Senate.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CALL and Mr. VOORHEES submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

KANSAS RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7021, for the adjustment of land grants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. VEST. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. ALLISON. Pending that I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] moves that the Senate do now adjourn. The question is on the latter motion, that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HALE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). If I were not paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Allison,	Coke,	Harrison,	Sawyer,
Beck,	Frye,	Hoar,	Sewell,
Berry,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Maxey,	Teller.

NAYS—29.

Blackburn,	Cullom,	Logan,	Vance,
Brown,	Evarts,	McPherson,	Vest,
Butler,	George,	Manderson,	Voorhees,
Call,	Gibson,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Walthall,
Cameron,	Gray,	Palmer,	Whitthorne.
Chace,	Ingalls,	Pugh,
Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,
Conger,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,

ABSENT—31.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Miller,	Sabin,
Blair,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Harris,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Camden,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Dawes,	Hearst,	Payne,	Van Wyck,
Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Pike,	Wilson of Iowa.
Edmunds,	Kenna,	Platt,	Wilson of Md.
Eustis,	Mahone,	Plumb,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senate now, inasmuch as it has voted to restore Fitz-John Porter, as it had a right to do, to take up Order of Business 1393, which is Senate bill 1964, that provides for repealing a certain portion of the Revised Statutes preventing the appointment of a general in the Army. I ask the Senate to take that up and consider it now.

Mr. VEST. Let us take a vote on my motion first, that when we adjourn it be to meet on Monday.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not know there was anything before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The motion was agreed to.

OFFICE OF GENERAL.

Mr. LOGAN. Now I ask the Senate to take up Senate bill 1964, to which I have referred. If there is any debate on it I will withdraw it.

Mr. ALLISON. We have plenty of time, I suggest to the Senator from Illinois, as we have agreed to adjourn over until Monday. Why not take up the bill at some future day?

Mr. LOGAN. I ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will come to order.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that the bill of the Senator from Kansas be laid aside informally.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think this is the time to take up that bill; it will lead to some discussion. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 28, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 25, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

VETO OF PENSION BILLS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following messages from the President of the United States; which were read, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

MARY A. VAN ETTEN.

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 6170, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mary A. Van Etten."

In her declaration for a pension filed July 28, 1885, this claimant alleges that her husband was drowned upon attempting to cross Braddock's Bay, near his residence, in the State of New York, on the 16th day of July, 1875.

It is claimed that in an effort to drive across that bay in a buggy with his young son the buggy was overturned and both were drowned. The application for pension was based upon the theory that during his military service the deceased soldier contracted rheumatism, which so interfered with his ability to save himself by swimming that his death may be fairly traced to a disability incurred in the service.

He does not appear to have been treated while in the Army for rheumatism, though some evidence is presented of his complaining of rheumatic symptoms.

He was mustered out in 1863, and though he lived twelve years thereafter, it does not appear that he ever applied for a pension. And though he was drowned in 1875, his widow apparently did not connect his military service with his death until ten years thereafter.

It seems to me that there is such an entire absence of direct and tangible evidence that the death of this soldier resulted from any incident of his service, that the granting of a pension upon such a theory is not justified.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

MRS. ALICE E. TRAVERS.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 6753, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Alice E. Travers."

The husband of the beneficiary, John T. Travers, enlisted August 25, 1864, and was discharged June 11, 1866.

He died January 6, 1881, from the effects of an overdose of morphine which he administered himself. He was a druggist, and when suffering severely was in the habit of taking opiates for relief and sleep.

The disease from which it is said he suffered was lung difficulty, claimed to have been caused by a severe cold contracted in the service.

It does not appear that he ever applied for a pension, and the widow's claim seems to have been properly rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the soldier's death was not due to his military service.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

PHILIP ARNER.

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 6266, entitled "An act granting a pension to Philip Arner."

It is conceded in the application for a pension made by this claimant that he was perfectly well prior to his enlistment, during his service, and for a year thereafter. He was discharged in July, 1864, and the proof is that he was taken seriously ill in the fall of 1865, since which time he has been troubled with lung difficulty.

He filed his application for pension in 1883. This was rejected on the ground that the sickness which produced his disability having occurred more than a year after his discharge from the Army, it can not be accepted as a result of his military service.

There is absolutely no allegation of any incident of his service which it is claimed is at all related to his sickness and disability.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

JAMES D. COTTON.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 6117, entitled "An act granting a pension to James D. Cotton."

The claim for a pension in this case is on behalf of the father of Thomas Cotton, who was killed at Pittsburg Landing, April 6, 1862.

The application of this claimant still remains in the Pension Bureau undetermined. The doubt in the case appears to relate to the dependence of the father upon his son at the time of his death.

This is a question which the bureau is so well fitted to investigate and justly determine that it is, in my opinion, best to permit the same to be there fully examined.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

MARY ANN MILLER.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 1816, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mary Ann Miller."

Hamilton Miller, the husband of the claimant, enlisted April 22, 1861, and was sent with his regiment to Camp Dennison, in the suburbs of Cincinnati.

While thus in camp, apparently before he had ever been to the front, and on the 3d of June, 1861, he obtained permission to go to the city of Cincinnati, and was there killed by a blow received from some person who appears to be unknown; but undoubtedly the injury occurred in a fight, or as the result of an altercation.

It is very clear to me that the Pension Bureau properly rejected the widow's claim to pension, for the reason that the soldier was not in the line of duty at the date of his death. It is also impossible to connect the death with any incident of the soldier's military service.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

MARY ANDERSON.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 7436, entitled "An act to grant a pension to Mary Anderson."

This claimant is the widow of Richard Anderson, who at the time of his death was receiving a pension on account of chronic diarrhea contracted in the service.

On the 7th day of February, 1882, the deceased pensioner went to Sparta, in the State of Wisconsin, to be examined for an increase of his pension. He called on the surgeon and was examined, and the next morning he was found beheaded on the railroad track under such circumstances as indicated suicide.

The claim of the widow was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the cause of the death of her husband was in no way connected with his military service.

His wife and family present pitiable objects for sympathy, but I am unable to see how they have any claim to a pension.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

JOSEPH TUTTLE.

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 7109, entitled an "An act granting a pension to Joseph Tuttle."

This man claims a pension as the dependent father of Charles Tuttle, who enlisted in 1861 and was killed in action May 31, 1862.

The claimant being, as he says, poor, took his son Charles, at the age of nine years, and placed him in charge of an uncle living in Ohio. An arrangement was afterward made by which the boy should live with a stranger named Betts. Upon the death of this gentleman the lad was transferred to one Captain Hill, with whom he remained until his enlistment in 1861.

It is stated that during the time he remained with Mr. Hill he sent his father $5; but the fatherly care and interest of the claimant in his son is exhibited by his statement that, though the son was killed in 1862, his father was not aware of it until the year 1864.

After the exhibition of heartlessness and abandonment on the part of a father, which is a prominent feature in this case, I should be sorry to be a party to a scheme permitting him to profit by the death of his patriotic son. The claimant relinquished the care of his son, and should be held to have relinquished all claim to his assistance and the benefits so indecently claimed as the result of his death.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

DAVID T. ELDERKIN.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 5995, entitled "An act granting a pension to David T. Elderkin."

This claimant enlisted August 5, 1862. From his record it appears that he was dishonorably discharged the service, to date from June 11, 1863, with loss of all pay, bounty, and allowances.

He filed a declaration for a pension in 1882, claiming that he was wounded in the head by a shell January 1, 1863, which cut his cheek close to his right ear, causing almost total deafness.

There is conflicting evidence as to the claimant's freedom from deafness prior to enlistment, and on a special examination it was shown that he was slightly hard of hearing before enlistment. Indeed the claimant himself stated to the special examiner and also to the board of surgeons that he had been somewhat deaf from childhood.

In 1882 an examining surgeon reports that he finds no scar or evidence of wound, but his hearing is very much impaired.

The claim was rejected in 1885 on the ground that deafness existed prior to enlistment, and also because of no ratable disability by reason of alleged wound in the cheek.

I think, considering the manner of the soldier's discharge and the facts developed, that the claimant should not be pensioned.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

GEORGE W. GUYSE.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 3205, entitled "An act granting a pension to George W. Guyse."

The claimant filed his declaration for a pension in 1878, alleging that about the 25th day of December, 1863, he received a gunshot wound in his left knee while engaged in a skirmish.

There has been much testimony taken in this case, and a great deal of it is exceedingly contradictory. Three of the claimant's comrades who originally testified to the receipt of the injury by him afterward denied that he was wounded in the service, and a portion of the evidence taken by the bureau tends to establish the fact that the claimant cut his left knee with a knife shortly after his discharge.

An examining surgeon, in November, 1884, reports that he finds "no indication of a gunshot wound, there being no physical or rational signs to sustain claimant in his application for pension."

He further reports that there "seems to be an imperfect scar near the knee, so imperfect as to render its origin uncertain, but in no respect resembling a gunshot wound."

I think upon all the facts presented the Pension Bureau properly rejected this claim, because there was no record of the injury, and no satisfactory evidence produced showing that it was incurred in service and in line of duty—all sources of information having been exhausted.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

SAMUEL MILLER.

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 7401, entitled "An act granting a pension to Samuel Miller."

This man was discharged from one enlistment June 16, 1864, and enlisted again in August of that year. He was finally discharged July 1, 1865.

In 1880 he filed an application for a pension, alleging that in May, 1862, he contracted, in the service, "kidney disease and weakness of the back."

A board of surgeons in 1881 reported that they failed to "discover any evidence of disease of kidneys."

It will be observed that since the date when it is claimed his disabilities visited him Mr. Miller not only served out his first term of enlistment but re-enlisted, and necessarily must have passed a medical examination.

I am entirely satisfied with the rejection of this claim by the Pension Bureau.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

GILES C. HAWLEY.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 424, entitled "An act to pension Giles C. Hawley."

This claimant enlisted August 5, 1861, and was discharged November 14, 1861, upon a surgeon's certificate, in which he stated: "I deem him unfit to stay in the service on account of deafness. He can not hear an ordinary command."

Seventeen years after his discharge from a military service of a little more than three months' duration, and in the year 1878, the claimant filed an application for pension, in which he alleged that "from exposure and excessive duty in the service his hearing was seriously affected."

There is no doubt that his disability existed to quite an extent at least before his enlistment, and there was plenty of opportunity for its increase between the time of discharge and of his application for pension.

I am entirely satisfied that it should not be altogether charged to the three months he spent in the service.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

CHARLES SCHULER.

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval House bill No. 7298, entitled "An act for the relief of Charles Schuler."

It is proposed by this bill to grant a pension to the person above named, who was discharged from the military service in December, 1864. He filed a declaration for a pension in the Pension Bureau in January, 1883. This application is still pending. Without referring to the merits of the case, I am of the opinion that the matter should be determined by the bureau to which it has properly been presented before special legislation should be invoked.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

MARY S. WOODSON.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 7073, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mary S. Woodson."

Henry Woodson, the husband of the beneficiary named, enlisted in September, 1861, and was discharged in October, 1863, on account of valvular disease of the heart.

The application for pension on behalf of his widow was filed August 5, 1881.

She concedes that she is unable to furnish any evidence of the date or the cause of her husband's death.

It appears that he left home in March, 1874, for the purpose of finding work, and neither she nor her friends have ever heard from him since. His death may naturally be presumed, and the condition of his family is such that it would be a positive gratification to aid them in the manner proposed; but the entire and conceded absence of any presumption, however weak, that he died from any cause connected with his military service seems to render it improper to place the widow's name upon the pension-rolls.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

ANDREW J. WILSON.

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 7108, entited "An act granting a pension to Andrew J. Wilson."

It appears that this man was drafted and entered the service in February, 1865, and was discharged in September of the same year on account of "chronic nephritis and deafness."

In 1882 he filed his application for a pension, alleging that in June, 1865, from exposure, he contracted rheumatism. Afterward he described his trouble as inflammation of the muscles of the back, with pain in the kidneys. In another statement, filed in December, 1884, he alleges that while in the service he contracted diarrhea, and was injured in one of his testicles, producing a rupture.

Whatever else may be said of this claimant's achievements during his short military career, it must be conceded that he accumulated a great deal of disability.

There is no doubt in my mind that whatever ailments he may honestly lay claim to, his title to the same was complete before he entered the Army.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

CALLIE WEST.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 7222, entitled "An act granting a pension to Callie West."

I base my action upon the opinion, derived from an examination of the circumstances attending the death of the claimant's husband, that his fatal disease did not have its origin in the military service, and was entirely disconnected therewith.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

JULIA CONNELLY.

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 6257, entitled "An act for the relief of Julia Connelly."

It is proposed by this bill to grant a pension to the beneficiary named as the widow of Thomas Connelly.

This man was mustered into the service October 26, 1861. He never did a day's service so far as his name appears, and the muster-out roll of his company reports him as having deserted at Camp Cameron, Pennsylvania, November 14, 1861.

He visited his family about the 1st day of December, 1861, and was found, December 30, 1861, drowned in a canal about 6 miles from his home.

Those who prosecute claims for pensions have grown very bold when cases of this description are presented for consideration.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

BRUNO SCHULTZ.

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 6774, entitled "An act granting a pension to Bruno Schultz."

The application of this claimant for a pension, which was filed a number of years ago, though at one time rejected, has been since opened for re-examination, and is now awaiting additional evidence.

In this condition of this case I think this bill should not be approved.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

LOUISA C. BEEZELEY.

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval House bill No. 576, entitled "An act for the relief of Louisa C. Beezeley."

By this bill it is proposed to grant a pension to the beneficiary named, as the widow of Nathaniel Beezeley, who was enrolled in an Indiana regiment as a farrier in September, 1861. He was discharged July 17, 1862, after having been in the hospital considerable of the short time he was connected with the Army. The surgeon's certificate on his discharge stated that it was granted by reason of "old age," he then being sixty years old.

He never made any claim for pension, but in 1877 his widow filed her declaration, stating that her husband died in 1875 from disease contracted in the service.

I am convinced that the Pension Bureau acted upon entirely satisfactory evidence when this claim was rejected upon the ground that the cause of death originated subsequent to the soldier's discharge.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONG. How many of these veto messages are there?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there are thirty altogether.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading be dispensed with, except in so far as simply to read the title of the bill. I make this request in order to save time.

Mr. BURROWS. It is very interesting reading. Let us have them read.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I hope we will have them all read.

MRS. MARIA HUNTER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval House bill No. 7167, entitled "An act for the relief of Mrs. Maria Hunter."

The beneficiary named in this bill, to whom it is therein proposed to grant a pension at the rate of $50 a month, on the 23d of March, 1886, filed her application for a pension in the Pension Bureau, where it is still pending, undetermined.

Although the deceased soldier held a high rank, I have no doubt his widow will receive ample justice through the instrumentality organized for the purpose of dispensing the nation's grateful acknowledgment of military service in its defense.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to know if consent to refer that message to the Committee on Invalid Pensions is not given whether the message will not lie on the Speaker's table as a privileged matter and subject to be taken up at any time?

The SPEAKER. It does not require unanimous consent but a motion and a vote of the House if objection be made to its reference, otherwise it would come up immediately as a matter of privilege. Unless action be taken by the House for its reference or the postponement of its consideration, it comes up immediately as a matter of privilege.

Mr. HEPBURN. Would it necessarily come up immediately, or would it not go to the Speaker's table and be subject to be called up at any time?

The SPEAKER. It can be referred to a committee or postponed; but unless some order be made with reference to it, it comes up immediately for consideration.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that it be laid upon the table for the present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the message could be laid upon the table so as to avoid a vote upon it which the Constitution requires to be taken.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I move that its further consideration be postponed until next Tuesday.

Tre SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 75, noes 69.

Mr. MORRISON. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BEACH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BEACH. I desire to know whether the motion of the gentleman from Iowa is amendable? If so, I wish to move an amendment by sending the message to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. To the Committee on Pensions, is it not?

The SPEAKER. If this motion is voted down the motion to refer will be in order.

The question is on ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 95, nays 131, not voting 97; as follows:

YEAS—95.

Anderson, J. A.	Grosvenor,	McComas,	Sessions,
Baker,	Grout,	McKenna,	Smalls,
Bingham,	Guenther,	McKinley,	Spooner,
Bound,	Hayden,	Millard,	Stephenson,
Boutelle,	Henderson, D. B.	Moffatt,	Stewart, J. W.
Brady,	Henderson, T. J.	Morrill,	Stone, E. F.
Brown, C. E.	Hepburn,	Morrow,	Strait,
Brown, W. W.	Hiestand,	O'Donnell,	Struble,
Buck,	Hires,	O'Hara,	Symes,
Burrows,	Hiscock,	Osborne,	Taylor, E. B.
Butterworth,	Hopkins,	Payson,	Taylor, Zachr
Campbell, J. M.	Houk,	Perkins,	Thomas, O. B.
Cannon,	Johnston, J. T.	Peters,	Thompson,
Davis,	Kelley,	Pettibone,	Van Schaick,
Dunham,	La Follette,	Phelps,	Wade,
Ely,	Laird,	Pirce,	Wadsworth,
Everhart,	Lehlbach,	Plumb,	Warner, William
Farquhar,	Libbey,	Ranney,	Weaver, A. J.
Felton,	Lindsley,	Reed, T. B.	Weber,
Fleeger,	Little,	Rockwell,	West,
Fuller,	Long,	Romeis,	White, A. C.
Gallinger,	Loutlit,	Rowell,	White, Milo
Gilfillan,	Lyman,	Ryan,	Woodburn.
Goff,	Markham,	Scranton,

NAYS—131.

Adams, J. J.	Burnes,	Croxton,	Gibson, Eustace
Allen, J. M.	Bynum,	Culberson,	Green, W. J.
Ballentine,	Cabell,	Dargan,	Hale,
Barbour,	Caldwell,	Davidson, A. C.	Halsell,
Barksdale,	Campbell, Felix	Dibble,	Hammond,
Barnes,	Candler,	Eden,	Harris,
Barry,	Carleton,	Eldredge,	Hatch,
Beach,	Catchings,	Ellsberry,	Henderson, J. S.
Belmont,	Clardy,	Ermentrout,	Herbert,
Bennett,	Cobb,	Findlay,	Hewitt,
Bland,	Compton,	Fisher,	Holman,
Bliss,	Comstock,	Foran,	Howard,
Blount,	Cowles,	Ford,	Hudd,
Bragg,	Cox,	Forney,	Hutton,
Breckinridge, C. R.	Crain,	Frederick,	Irion,
Breckinridge, W. C. P.	Crisp,	Geddes,	Johnston, T. D.

Jones, J. H.	Mitchell,	Richardson,	Throckmorton,
King,	Morgan,	Robertson,	Tillman,
Kleiner,	Morrison,	Rogers,	Townshend,
Lanham,	Neal,	Sayers,	Trigg,
Le Fevre,	Neece,	Seney,	Tucker,
Lore,	Norwood,	Seymour,	Turner,
Lovering,	Oates,	Skinner,	Van Eaton,
Lowry,	O'Ferrall,	Snyder,	Viele,
Mahoney,	Peel,	Springer,	Ward, T. B.
Martin,	Perry,	Stahlnecker,	Warner, A. J.
Matson,	Pidcock,	Stewart, Charles	Weaver, J. B.
Maybury,	Pindar,	Stone, W. J., Ky.	Wellborn,
McCreary,	Price,	Stone, W. J., Mo.	Wheeler,
McRae,	Randall,	Swope,	Wilson,
Merriman,	Reagan,	Tarsney,	Winans,
Miller,	Reid, J. W.	Taulbee,	Worthington.
Mills,	Reese,	Taylor, J. M.

NOT VOTING—97.

Adams, G. E.	Davenport,	Hitt,	Sadler,
Aiken,	Davidson, R. H. M.	Holmes,	Sawyer,
Allen, C. H.	Dawson,	Jackson,	Scott,
Anderson, C. M.	Dingley,	James,	Shaw,
Arnot,	Dockery,	Johnson, F. A.	Singleton,
Atkinson,	Dorsey,	Jones, J. T.	Sowden,
Bayne,	Dougherty,	Ketcham,	Spriggs,
Blanchard,	Dowdney,	Laffoon,	Steele,
Boyle,	Dunn,	Landes,	St. Martin,
Browne, T. M.	Evans,	Lawler,	Storm,
Brumm,	Funston,	McAdoo,	Swinburne,
Buchanan,	Gay,	McMillin,	Taylor, I. H.
Bunnell,	Gibson, C. H.	Milliken,	Thomas, J. R.
Burleigh,	Glass,	Muller,	Wait,
Campbell, J. E.	Glover,	Murphy,	Wakefield,
Campbell, T. J.	Green, R. S.	Negley,	Wallace,
Caswell,	Hall,	Nelson,	Ward, J. H.
Clements,	Hanback,	O'Neill, Charles	Whiting,
Cole,	Harmer,	O'Neill, J. J.	Wilkins,
Collins,	Haynes,	Outhwaite,	Willis,
Conger,	Heard,	Owen,	Wise,
Cooper,	Hemphill,	Parker,	Wolford.
Curtin,	Henley,	Payne,
Cutcheon,	Hermann,	Rice,
Daniel,	Hill,	Riggs,

So the motion was not agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CALDWELL, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following pairs were announced until further notice:

Mr. DOWDNEY with Mr. HAYNES.

Mr. RIGGS with Mr. WHITING.

Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. OWEN.

Mr. HEMPHILL with Mr. DORSEY.

Mr. COLE with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. MURPHY with Mr. HITT.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, with Mr. FUNSTON.

Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. JONES, of Alabama.

Mr. LANDES with Mr. HANBACK.

Mr. HEARD with Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois.

Mr. CLEMENTS with Mr. BUNNELL.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. COOPER.

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York.

Mr. DINGLEY with Mr. DUNN, for three days.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. HILL with Mr. RICE.

Mr. DAWSON with Mr. BUCHANAN.

Mr. GLASS with Mr. SWINBURNE, until July 1.

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, until Monday next.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, until Monday next.

Mr. LAWLER with Mr. WAKEFIELD, for this day.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, with Mr. HARMER, for this day.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have my name recorded upon this roll-call.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present in his seat when his name was called?

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I was not; I was temporarily absent. If I had been present, I should have voted in the negative.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the message with the accompanying bill be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

SARAH HARBAUGH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 6895, entitled "An act granting a pension to Sarah Harbaugh."

The husband of this claimant enlisted August 1, 1861, and was discharged September 7, 1864. He received a gunshot wound in the left ankle in May, 1863, and died suddenly from disease of the heart October 4, 1881. He was insane before his death; but in my opinion any connection between his injury and his service in the Army is next to impossible.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that the further consideration of the message be postponed until next Tuesday.

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 69, noes 87.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the message with the accompanying bill be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

VETO MESSAGES REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following messages from the President of the United States; which were severally read, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

ANNA A. PROBERT.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 7703, entitled "An act granting a pension to Anna A. Probert."

The husband of this beneficiary was pensioned in 1864. He was a druggist and apothecary at Norwalk, in the State of Ohio. Shortly before his death, in 1878, he went to Memphis for the purpose of giving his professional assistance to those suffering from yellow fever at that place. He was himself attacked by that disease, and died on the 28th day of October, 1878.

His widow has never herself applied for a pension, but a power of attorney has been filed authorizing the prosecution of her claim by another.

That she has employed an ingenious attorney or agent is demonstrated by the fact that the bill now before me seems to be based upon the theory that Mr. Probert might have recovered from his attack of yellow fever if he had been free from the ailments for which he had been pensioned fourteen years before.

If such speculations and presumptions as this are to be indulged, we shall find ourselves surrounded and hedged in by the rule that all men entering an army were free from disease or the liability to disease before their enlistment, and every infirmity which is visited upon them thereafter is the consequence of army service.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

MARTHA M'ILWAIN.

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 7162, entitled "An act granting a pension to Martha McIlwain."

R. J. McIlwain, the husband of the claimant, enlisted in 1861, and was discharged in 1862 because of the loss of his right leg by a gunshot wound. He was pensioned for this disability. He died May 15, 1883, from an overdose of morphia. It is claimed by the widow that her husband was in the habit of taking morphia to alleviate the pain he endured from his stump, and that he accidentally took too much.

The case was investigated by a special examiner upon the widow's application for pension, and his report shows that the deceased had been in the habit of taking morphia and knew how to use it; that he had been in the habit of buying six grains at a time, and that his death was caused by his taking one entire purchase of six grains while under the influence of liquor.

In any event it is quite clear that the taking of morphia in any quantity was not the natural result of military service or injury received therein.

I concur in the judgment of the Pension Bureau, which rejected the widow's claim for pension on the ground that "the death of the soldier was not due to his military service."

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

CLARK BOON.

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval House bill No. 7931, entitled "An act increasing the pension of Clark Boon."

This claimant filed his declaration for pension February 3, 1874, in which he states that he lost his health while a prisoner at Tyler, Tex. On the 19th day of October, 1874, he filed an affidavit, claiming that he contracted diseases of the heart and head while in the service. In a further application, filed January 16, 1878, he abandoned his allegations as to disease, and asks for a pension on account of a gunshot wound in the left ankle. Medical testimony was produced on his behalf tending to show not only a gunshot wound, but a disease of the eyes.

A small pension was at last granted him upon the theory advanced by a board of surgeons in 1880 that it was "possible that applicant was entitled to a small rating for weakness of ankle."

A declaration was filed June 4, 1885, by which this claimant insists upon an increase of pension on account of the wound and also for disease of eyes and rheumatism.

I am entirely satisfied that all has been done in this case that the most liberal treatment demands.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

WILLIAM BISHOP.

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval House bill No. 6688, entitled "An act for the relief of William Bishop."

This claimant was enrolled as a substitute on the 25th day of March, 1865; he was admitted to a post hospital at Indianapolis on the 3d day of April, 1865, with the measles; was removed to the city general hospital, in Indianapolis, on the 5th day of May, 1865; was returned to duty May 8, 1865, and was mustered out with a detachment of unassigned men on the 11th day of May, 1865.

This is the military record of this soldier, who remained in the Army one month and seventeen days, having entered it as a substitute at a time when high bounties were paid.

Fifteen years after this brilliant service and this terrific encounter with the measles, and on the 28th day of June, 1880, the claimant discovered that his attack of the measles had some relation to his Army enrollment, and that this disease had "settled in his eyes, also affecting his spinal column."

This claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau, and I have no doubt of the correctness of its determination.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 3, 1886.

JAMES H. DARLING.

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval House bill No. 7257, entitled "An act granting a pension to James H. Darling."

This man enlisted in November, 1861, and was reported as having deserted March 5, 1862. The charge of desertion was, however, removed, and it is stated that he went to his home in Ohio at the date stated, by proper authority, where he remained sick till December, 1862, when he was discharged for disability caused "by a disease of the kidneys known as Bright's disease," from which the physician making the certificate thought "there was no reasonable prospect of his recovery."

The claimant filed his application for pension, alleging that in January, 1862, he contracted rheumatism.

The claim was investigated by a special examiner and rejected, on the ground that the evidence produced failed to show the alleged disability was contracted in the service and in the line of duty.

A medical examination made in 1877 showed that the claimant was "a well-nourished man, sixty-five years old; height, 5 feet 8 inches; weight, 165 pounds." No disability was discovered, "but a general stiffness of joints, especially of legs, which he says is much aggravated in stormy, cold weather."

Another examination in 1882 found this victim of war disability with the "appearance of a hale, hearty old man—no disease that was discoverable by examination (without chemical tests), except some lameness from rheumatism." His weight upon this examination is stated to be 186 pounds.

It is evident to me that this man ought not to be pensioned.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

JACKSON STEWARD.

To the House of Representatives;

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 7979, entitled "An act granting a pension to Jackson Steward."

This claimant's application for pension is now pending in the Pension Bureau, and has been sent to a special examiner for the purpose of taking additional proof.

This I deem sufficient reason why the proposed bill should not now become a law.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 22, 1886.

CHARLES A. CHASE.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval House bill No. 6372, entitled "An act to pension Charles A. Chase."

This claimant was enrolled September 6, 1864, and mustered out with his detachment June 1, 1865. His brief service contains no record of disability.

But in 1880 he filed a declaration for pension, in which he claims that by reason of exposure suffered in the service about the 20th of October, 1864, he contracted disease of the liver and kidneys.

The application for pension was denied January 9, 1884, because there was no record of the alleged diseases, and no satisfactory proof of their contraction in the Army was produced, and because of the meager and unconvincing evidence of disability found by the surgeon on an actual examination of the claimant.

I adopt these as the reasons for my action in withholding my approval of this bill.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

HEZEKIAH TILLMAN.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval House bill No. 7614, entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Hezekiah Tillman."

This claimant, in his declaration for pension, filed in 1866, alleges that he received a gunshot wound in his right leg November 25, 1862. He was mustered out with his company September 22, 1864.

He was pensioned for the wound which he claimed to have received as his only injury.

In another declaration, filed in 1872, he alleged that in December, 1862, he was struck in his left eye by some hard substance, which destroyed the vision of that organ.

In a subsequent declaration, filed in 1878, he claimed that he received a shell wound in his left knee in November, 1863.

This latter claim has not not been finally acted upon by the Pension Bureau, and I am of the opinion that with the diverse claims for injuries which have been there presented on behalf of the beneficiary named justice will be done in the case.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

WILLIAM H. STARR.

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 6718, entitled "An act granting a pension to William H. Starr."

An application made by this claimant to the Pension Bureau is still pending there, and additional evidence has been called for, which the claim is awaiting before final decision.

I am of the opinion that the investigation there should be fully completed before special legislation is resorted to.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

MARY NORMAN.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 6192, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mary Norman."

The husband of this claimant was enrolled May 22, 1863, and was mustered out of the service June 1, 1865.

He was wounded in the head February 20, 1864; was treated for the same, and returned to duty September 3, 1864.

In her declaration for pension, filed in February, 1880, the claimant claims a pension because of his wound and deafness consequent therefrom, and that he died after he left the service.

In a letter, however, dated October 13, 1880, she states that her husband was drowned while trying to cross Roanoke River in December, 1868.

Her claim was rejected in 1881 on the ground that the cause of the soldier's death was accidental drowning, and was not due to his military service.

In an attempt to meet this objection it was claimed as lately as 1885, on behalf of the widow, that her husband's wound caused deafness to such an extent that at the time he was drowned he was unable to hear the ferryman, with whom he was crossing the river, call out that the boat was sinking.

How he could have saved his life if he had heard the warning is not stated.

It seems very clear to me that this is not a proper case for the granting of a pension.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

C. H. MANN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a joint resolution (H. Res. 5) authorizing the payment of C. H. Mann, messenger to the reporters' gallery, with an amendment by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The amendment here simply corrects an error in the date, making 1886 instead of 1885.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "1885" and insert "1886."

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate bills; which were read twice, and referred as indicated:

The bill (S. 1042) to pay B. S. James for transporting the United States mails—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 2719) to amend all laws relating to the inspection of steam vessels—to the Committee on Commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. GLASS, for one week, on account of sickness.

To Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, for ten days.

To Mr. ARNOT, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. NEGLEY, for one day, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 3037) relating to the licensing of vessels engaged in towing to carry persons in addition to their crews; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 57) to print an addition to a report on wages ordered printed January 17, 1884.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the regular order.

SECTION 3058 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HEWITT. I desire to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report a bill to amend section 3058 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill (H. R. 9653) was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PURCHASE OF LAND NEAR SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

The SPEAKER. A conference report was pending before the House at the time of the adjournment yesterday afternoon. That is the first matter to be disposed of.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7183) to authorize the purchase of a certain tract of land near San Antonio, Tex.

The SPEAKER. The report was read, and at the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] the amendment of the Senate agreed to by the committee on conference was also read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to sell the military reservation known as Fort Brady, in the village of Sault Sainte Marie, in the State of Michigan, except that portion lying north of Water street extended, which shall be reserved for canal and wharf purposes, and except the plot of ground now occupied as a military cemetery, which shall also be reserved. In disposing of said property the Secretary of War shall cause the grounds to be platted in blocks, streets, and alleys, corresponding as near as may be with the plat of the village of Sault Sainte Marie, and in lots not exceeding one-quarter of an acre in each, unless with due reference to the requirements of the houses and buildings now located on said grounds. The Secretary of War shall also cause the lots to be appraised and sold at public or private sale, at not less than the appraised value, having first been offered at public sale. The expense of advertising, appraisement, survey, and sale shall be paid out of the proceeds of said sale, and the balance paid into the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. 4. The Secretary of War is also authorized to purchase grounds in or near the village of Sault Sainte Marie, suitable and sufficient for fortification and for garrison purposes, and construct thereon the necessary buildings, with appurtenances, sufficient for a four-company military post, to be known as Fort Brady, in accordance with estimates to be prepared by the War Department; and a sufficient sum of money, not exceeding $120,000, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of War to comply with the provisions of this act: Provided, That the title to the lands authorized to be purchased under the second section of this act shall be approved by the Attorney-General.

"SEC. 5. That in platting these grounds the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may reserve all that part of the reservation lying south of Portage street, to be set apart and kept by the municipal authorities of Sault Sainte Marie as a public park for its citizens and the people of the United States.

"SEC. 6. That section 1 of this act shall not be of effect until the purchase of a new site provided for in section 3 shall have been effected."

Amend the title of the bill so that it will read: "An act to authorize the purchase of a certain tract of land near San Antonio, Tex., and to provide for the sale of the old site of Fort Brady, Michigan, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move the adoption of the report, and on that I ask the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference, there were—ayes 96, noes 18.

Mr. HOLMAN. A quorum has not voted. I will not make that point. I am satisfied, however, a mistake is being made in the sale of this property.

So (further count not being called for) the report of the conference committee was adopted.

Mr. CUTCHEON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the conference committee was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HATCH. I report back from the Committee on Agriculture the bill (H. R. 7481) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, with amendments by the Senate. I am instructed to ask that the amendments be non-concurred in and that a committee of conference be asked.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the amendments demanded?

Mr. KING. I ask for the reading of the amendments.

The amendments were read.

Mr. HATCH. I move the previous question upon the motion to non-concur in the Senate amendments, and ask a committee of conference.

The previous question was ordered, and the motion to non-concur and ask a committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Speaker appointed as managers on the part of the House Messrs. HATCH, WINANS, and PRICE.

CLAIMS REFERRED TO COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I desire to submit a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 1357, authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

WILLIAM M. SPRINGER,
WILLIAM WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.
J. K. JONES,
GEORGE F. HOAR,
J. H. MITCHELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the conferees on the part of the House was read, as follows:

In the matter of conference on Senate amendments to bill (H. R. 1357) "authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims," the conferees on the part of the House report that the effect of the Senate amendments to bill H. R. 1357 is to change the action of the Court of Claims in the claims named in the bill from an adjudication and judgment to a finding of fact and report of same to Congress.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. Regular order.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw that demand, in order that I may ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Printing on the joint resolution (H. Res. 183) providing for printing the first annual report of the Commissioner of Labor, for the purpose of moving to concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read; after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 1 strike out "55" and insert "54." In line 4 strike out "9" and insert "13." Strike out all after "section 2," in line 8, down to and including line 11, and insert "that the sum of $18,808.20, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the cost of the publication of said report, and the further sum of $275, or so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the cost of wrapping 15,000 copies for the Department of the Interior, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. FARQUHAR. I would state that the difference between the bill as passed by the House and the Senate amendments consists in the correction of a clerical error by the Senate with respect to the quotas of the Houses respectively, and there has also been added $275 for wrapping which was omitted in the original bill.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendments of the Senate will be concurred in.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I renew the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The first matters before the House are two bills (H. R. 5194 and H. Res. 72), reported from the Committee on War Claims, and postponed until to-day.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is not the first order the call of committees for reports?

The SPEAKER. These bills have been made a special order and continued from Friday to Friday for several weeks.

Mr. RANDALL. As those bills may involve a roll-call, or more than one, I ask that they be postponed until next Friday, with the same privilege they have now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the further consideration of these bills be postponed until next Friday, with the right to come up immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the standing and select committees for reports of a private nature.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH FORT BLISS RESERVATION.

Mr. ERMENTROUT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 388) to grant the right of way through the Fort Bliss military reservation to the Rio Grande and El Paso Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN M. SIMPSON.

Mr. VAN EATON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 61) for the relief of Benjamin M. Simpson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THEODORE DIETZER.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7008) granting a pension to Theodore Dietzer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 3310) granting a pension to Jennie M. Parks; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. MATSON, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6311, and it was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MRS. EMILY M. SWIFT.

Mr. WINANS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2203) granting a pension to Mrs. Emily M. Swift, of Dexter, Mich.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADELISA PERRY.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 4535) granting a pension to Adelisa Perry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JAMES H. YOUNG.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8424) granting a pension to James H. Young; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

EMILY LUTHER.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 8632) for the relief Emily Luther; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. ALMIRA AMBLER.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with amendment the bill (S. 2159) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira Ambler; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 8178) to increase the pension of William Shaftoe;

A bill (H. R. 8349) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira Ambler; and

A bill (H. R. 1102) granting a pension to Elbridge Smith.

FRANZ ROSSRUCKER.

Mr. O'HARA, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7732) for the relief of Franz Rossrucker; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JAMES B. ROYCE.

Mr. HAYNES (by Mr. MORRILL), from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2622) granting an increase of pension to James B. Royce; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

J. H. THORNBURG.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2692) to amend and correct the act of June 1, 1886, granting a pension to J. H. Thornburg; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN D. FINCHER.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 1768) granting a pension to John D. Fincher; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JAMES G. MATHES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 2220) granting a pension to James G. Mathes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 7320) for the relief of Margaret Leba;

A bill (H. R. 6652) granting a pension to Edward D. Phelps;

A bill (H. R. 5695) for the relief of Thomas M. Parkinson;

A bill (H. R. 6788) granting a pension to H. G. Bollinger;

A bill (H. R. 3933) granting a pension to John W. Williams;

A bill (H. R. 706) granting a pension to Samuel W. Robinson;

A bill (H. R. 6773) granting a pension to Mrs. Emma Rotty;

A bill (H. R. 7936) for the relief of Philip Knoblock;

A bill (H. R. 7615) for the relief of F. L. Rockwell;

A bill (H. R. 8083) for the relief of W. A. Gross; and

A bill (H. R. 8792) granting a pension to W. H. H. McArthur.

WILLIAM B. BARNES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9250) for the relief of William B. Barnes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JACOB TEITS.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 8829) granting a pension to Jacob Teits; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

NOAH S. CRAMER.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9243) granting a pension to Noah S. Cramer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. PIDCOCK, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4136) granting a pension to Anna M. Thomas; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

ELIZABETH M. KING.

Mr. ELLSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pension, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9443) granting a pension to Elizabeth M. King; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FREDERICK RICHMOND.

Mr. ELLSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9444) granting a pension to Frederick Richmond; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARTIN V. CURRY.

Mr. ELLSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 9457) granting a pension to Martin V. Curry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARGARET M. DRISCOLL.

Mr. ELLSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 7144) granting a pension to Margaret M. Driscoll; which, on motion of Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN D. MUNNERLYN.

Mr. DOUGHERTY, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 252) for the relief of John D. Munnerlyn; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

H. K. BELDING.

Mr. DOUGHERTY, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 127) for the relief of H. K. Belding; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES R. MARRS.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9183) for the relief of James R. Marrs; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2265) for the relief of Sarah E. E. Perine, widow and administratrix of William Perine, deceased, and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

JOHN G. ROSE.

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3547) for the relief of John G. Rose, and the same was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9008) for the relief of Thomas A. Osborn; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE B. HANSELL.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 2915) for the relief of George B. Hansell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. KLEINER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 7765) for the relief of Felix Marcinkowski; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS FLINT RIVER, GEORGIA.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Claims, also reported, in the nature of a substitute for H. R. 9517, a bill (H. R. 9654) to authorize the Americus, Preston and Lumpkin Railroad Company to erect and maintain a bridge across Flint River, in the State of Georgia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 9517) was laid on the table.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 7351) to remove the charge of desertion against Elijah Diehl; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion so I may move to dispense with the regular order for to-day in order to proceed with the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. But I yield in the first place to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

MANAGERS FOR THE NATIONAL HOMES FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. BRAGG, by unanimous consent, called up from the House Calendar joint resolution (H. Res. 177) appointing Managers for the National Homes for Disabled Soldiers, to fill vacancies in the board which occurred by expiration of terms on the 21st day of April, 1886.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That General William J. Sewell, of the State of New Jersey; General Martin T. McMahon, of the State of New York; and Captain John L. Mitchell, of the State of Wisconsin, be, and they are hereby, appointed Managers of the National Homes for Disabled Soldiers, to fill vacancies which occurred by reason of the expiration of the terms of members of the board on the 21st day of April, 1886.

There was no objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. BRAGG demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF CHARLES S. TRENTLEN.

On motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, by unanimous consent the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations is authorized to report, if they think proper to do so, an appropriation not exceeding $250 to cover the funeral expenses of Charles S. Trentlen, late an employé of the House.

EXPLANATION.

Mr. REED, of Maine. In the RECORD of yesterday morning there is a report of an inquiry which I addressed to the Chair as to whether it would be proper to proceed to the election of a more efficient Sergeant-at-arms. As it stands it looks like a reflection upon the gentleman now occupying that position. I am satisfied that nobody understood me at the time to mean anything of that kind, but it is subject as it stands to a misconstruction. I desire to say simply that I had no such intention.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I renew the motion to dispense with private business for the remainder of the day.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. REAGAN in the chair.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. By agreement all debate on the paragraph of the bill relating to the Coast and Geodetic Survey is limited to ten minutes.

Mr. BLAND. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to recur to line 295 for the purpose of making a verbal correction in the amendment which was appended at that point in the bill with regard to the issue of silver certificates.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to recurring to the line indicated by the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. I now offer the amendment I send to the desk as an addition to the amendment adopted on yesterday to line 295.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the silver certificates herein authorized shall be receivable and payable in like manner and for like purposes as is provided for silver certificates by the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character," and shall be redeemable in standard silver dollars on demand; and when paid into the Treasury shall be reissued, subject to the provisions herein for the redemption of the same.

Mr. BLAND. That simply puts it upon the same footing as the silver certificates.

Mr. BAYNE. I make the point of order upon that proposition.

Mr. BLAND. It is not subject to the point of order. The amendment was incorporated yesterday.

Mr. BAYNE. It would not have been if I had been here if the point of order would have been good. I would have made the point of order against it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is only a modification of the amendment of yesterday, and is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I make the point of order against the amendment now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the ground of his objection.

Mr. BAYNE. I make the point of order that it is new legislation, and that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BLAND. This has already been debated, and I shall only ask the House to vote upon it.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he will not add to his amendment a clause making the silver certificates a legal tender?

Mr. BLAND. No, I think not. That would simply bring up another discussion, and it is not necessary.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The coin itself on which the certificates are issued is a legal tender, and these stand upon the same footing as the other certificates.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire if the point of order is overruled on the strength of what has been already attached to the bill when the point of order was not raised, or whether the Chair understands that this amendment does not change the existing law and is not new legislation?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order that the gentleman has no right to inquire into the motives of the Chair in ruling upon points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment which was adopted on yesterday.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars on all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury in payment of the appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures and obligations of the Government.

Mr. BAYNE. That is the amendment that went in by unanimous consent on yesterday, and was adopted without the point of order being raised against it.

Mr. STORM. No, sir; it was voted upon and adopted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. By a vote of the committee it was incorporated in the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. Now I ask for the reading of the proposition which is to be added to that.

Mr. BLAND. It is simply for the purpose of putting them upon a par with other silver certificates.

Mr. BAYNE. To make them receivable for customs duties.

Mr. BLAND. No, not at all. The silver certificate is a legal tender for certain purposes, and this does not alter the provision of law on which they rest.

Mr. BAYNE. But this is unquestionably a change of existing law.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I believe I have the floor.

I ask if this does not change existing law. It is a creation of a new kind of money, money not heretofore authorized by law at all, but an amendment which changes the law to authorize the issue of such money in this bill.

Now you propose to give that money so issued a function——

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is on the floor to a point of order.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. But I am raising the point of order against the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear one point of order at a time.

Mr. BAYNE. I say you now propose to confer upon this money a function which it has not got, unless the provision of the gentleman from Missouri shall be adopted.

Mr. BLAND. Oh, no; nothing of the kind. This only makes clear what was done before.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The silver certificates have that function now.

Mr. BLAND. This is the same provision that applies to the silver certificates.

Mr. BAYNE. But I contend it confers upon these certificates a new function, and hence is subject to the point of order.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Whatever may be said of the present question, the point of order can not prevail; for while it might possibly have been good on yesterday, it can not be claimed to be good to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to debate the amendment.

There has been, Mr. Chairman, an honest effort upon the part of the Secretary of the Treasury to put in circulation the silver dollars that have accumulated in the Treasury. That effort has been persistently made by the Secretary of the Treasury, and in order to precipitate the putting in circulation of that vast accumulation of silver coin in the Treasury he has been removing from circulation the one and two dollar bills.

There are two amendments proposed to this bill, which are intended to create silver certificates of one and two and five dollar denominations, and not only to create certificates to these denominations, but, as I saw in the papers this morning, there is a provision put in this bill to reissue one and two dollar bills which had been withdrawn. The Secretary of the Treasury has been charged with the failure to put this silver coin into circulation, and now it is proposed to put into circulation another species of money, and thus to make the Government of the United States to hoard almost every silver dollar it coins. The result will be that you will not have any silver dollars virtually in circulation. If you enact this sort of legislation the Government will have to provide additional vaults and places to keep this money. You are to put these shinplasters in circulation in lieu of your silver dollars; and the friends of silver coinage who have repeatedly said the people of this country want the silver dollars are forced thus to stultify themselves, and to say when they made that allegation they did not mean it; because if the people need these silver dollars they will go into circulation and remain with the people. But the very men who have boosted this thing and have given the country this silver circulation are compelled to issue one and two dollar certificates or one and two dollar notes.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman from Pennsylvania must have been asleep; he should have been here yesterday.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir; I should have been here yesterday, and if I had been this sort of legislation would not have gone into this bill unless the Chair had wrongfully ruled out the point of order I would have made.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. You will have an opportunity to go on record by having the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I feel justified in saying if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] had been here yesterday the result would have been the same.

Mr. BAYNE. Perhaps so; but I would have put myself on the record.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania speaks of the silver certificates to be issued, as "shinplasters." What sort of "shinplasters" are they? They are certificates with the silver dollar back of them, which may be obtained in lieu of them any moment the holder of so-called "shinplasters" desires to make the exchange—a dollar which was recognized by the Constitution, consisting of the same number of grains that it has contained for years. I am getting sick and tired of hearing gentleman berate the silver dollar. The war upon it has been relentless. It was a coin good enough for Abraham [laughter]—or a currency good enough for that patriarch—because we are told that so far back as the time of this great ancestor of the Jews he paid for the "burial place of his people" with thirty pieces of silver "current with the merchant." It was current then. We are also informed by the commentator that the coin which was taken out of the fish's mouth by the apostle, under the direction of the Son of God, was a silver coin. It was then good enough for the Savior, for he paid tribute with it. The fathers of the Constitution when they gave to us a currency which should be permanent and sufficient fixed upon silver and gold as the basis. It was good enough for Abraham, good enough for Christ, good enough for the fathers of the Constitution. Silver has been good enough for all of them until we come to this wicked and perverse generation. [Applause.] They, like thieves in the night, stole into the halls of legislation, and in 1873 demonetized the old silver dollar. A war has been kept upon it in some quarters ever since. But there was a power in this country strong enough to force back silver into circulation among the people and to remonetize it; and that power is strong enough to keep it among the people. Silver is here and here to stay. Gentlemen had as well understand that once for all and desist from their assaults upon it.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I can see no objection to the issuance of one and two dollar certificates. What if the silver comes to be hoarded, if at the same time certificates to the full amount representing it are in circulation? We save by this process the loss and its abrasion. The saving in these two items will more than pay for the issuance of the certificate that will take its place and for storing and taking care of the coin.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. May I suggest to the gentleman that the difference between Judas and the modern men who oppose silver is that he betrayed Christ for silver and they betray him by refusing to take it?

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not think there is any measure which has been incorporated on any bill that has passed this House which is more important than the one authorizing the issuance of one and two dollar silver certificates. We can easily put in circulation by this means, if we issue all the people want, one hundred millions of silver. It does away with the complaint of inconvenience, because one and two dollar certificates are as convenient as the greenbacks were; and the only trouble the people have ever experienced about either is the difficulty of getting hold of a sufficient quantity of them for their commercial purposes.

Mr. Chairman, if we would provide for the issuance of small denomination silver certificates on all surplus silver coins, pay it upon obligations of the Government, and establish unlimited coinage, we would give an impetus to industry and a thrift to business unknown for years. By this means we can end many of the troubles now resulting in riots, strikes, and stagnation.

There is, Mr. Chairman, another reason why we should treat with more freedom and boldness the silver question. Our bonds, on which the national-bank currency is based, are being rapidly paid off. This is right, entirely right. But while retiring the national-bank money it behooves the patriot and the statesman to determine what is to take its place. In my judgment, there is no safer and sounder currency at present in addition to our gold and gold certificates and greenbacks than silver and silver certificates. Let us give it to the people in its most convenient form. Let us begin to provide it now, that the contraction produced by extinguishment of national banks shall be counteracted and commerce and trade saved from ruin.

Mr. BLAND. I rise for the purpose of asking for a vote. I do not think we should debate this question further. We debated it yesterday. It is a very important matter. I will only remark that we all understand the hostility of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to silver; and this provides for putting in circulation or utilizing the silver in the Treasury. There can be no reasonable objection to it. I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] will explain these little historical discrepancies which have been agitated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN]. I had the impression that the gentleman from Missouri had largely assisted in the invention of the silver dollar of 412½ grains.

Mr. BLAND. Not in the invention of it.

Mr. McMILLIN. Oh, it existed before the gentleman from Missouri was here.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But I really did not know that Abraham had had a dollar of 412½ grains. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Nor did any one else. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine——

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not yield. This is a question of silver, not of brass. [Laughter.]

I simply desire to remark that if the fish actually did find the dollar of 412½ grains in his mouth he must have been refreshed and gratified by finding upon it the legend, "In God we trust." [Laughter.] I hope the gentleman from Missouri will explain the matter.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman can find all there is on the subject in the Bible.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I admit that the silver question may have been discussed as far back as Abraham's time, for as far back toward Abraham as my memory reaches these gentlemen have persisted in discussing it in season and out of season.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Oh, the gentleman is a descendant of Ishmael. He does not come from Abraham at all. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side, and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I really do want to correct this sacred history. I am a little defective in it, and the point did not occur to me at once, but it is clear that if I am a descendant of Ishmael I must, of course, be a descendant of Abraham also. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But not in the regular line of descent, only collaterally. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the amendment which I have sent to the desk be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add the following:
"And all such certificates shall be lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, within the United States."

Mr. BAYNE. I raise the point of order against that amendment. My point is that it changes existing law and creates a new currency by imparting the legal-tender function to a currency created by these amendments to this bill.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to say a word on the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I believe I have the floor. This so-called money, this representative of a 75-cent dollar, or a 74-cent dollar I believe it is now——

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Made so by your war upon it.

Mr. BAYNE. This representative of a 75-cent dollar is proposed to be made not only a currency to be circulated among the people, but, by the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], it is to have the legal-tender function imparted to it, and to become lawful money for the payment of honest debts and obligations between citizens.

A MEMBER. That is right.

Mr. BAYNE. Of course it is right—right for people who wish to scale their debts, right for people who wish to fasten upon this country a bad currency——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What about those who want to get two dollars for one?

Mr. BAYNE. It is right for those who want to destroy the opportunity which this country has of getting the best currency in the world.

Mr. BRUMM. Does it not do that now?

Mr. BAYNE. No. Such theorists as you have precipitated upon us a currency of which we ought to be ashamed.

Mr. BRUMM. Do you mean to say that the silver dollar is not legal tender now?

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, I understand all about that.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment is subject to the point of order. The silver certificates provided for by the amendments offered yesterday come under the law of 1878, and they are made a legal tender only for the payment of customs dues and taxes; they are not a legal tender for private debts. This amendment proposes to make them a legal tender for private debts, and that does change existing law. Now, I should have no objection if this money could be made a legal tender for all debts, public and private; but, notwitstanding the decision of the Supreme Court, there are differences of opinion as to whether we have authority to do that, and it might be that the bill would be vetoed on that ground. Besides, it is not necessary, and I do not think that we as practical legislators should go further than is necessary to secure the issue of these silver certificates, and if we make them a legal tender for private debts we may defeat the whole thing, and for all I know that may be the object of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. At all events, as I have said, it is wholly unnecessary. My proposition is made to conform to existing law, but this amendment would change existing law.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to say a word upon the point of order. First, when this amendment was offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] yesterday, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] made the point of order. He withdrew it. Then another gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STORM] raised the point of order, and he withdrew it. The amendment was a change of existing law, and therefore subject to the point of order; but, as it escaped the point, as it ran the gauntlet and got past the post, it is now pending legitimately before the committee (under the decision of the chairman made upon the point of order) for perfection, and my amendment seeks to perfect this legislation proposed by the gentleman from Missouri. I feel confident the Chair will overrule the point of order to my amendment, as that would be in exact harmony with the ruling just made on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Now the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] says that for aught he knows my object in offering this amendment is to defeat his amendment. I know that gentleman can very rarely see good come from anything unless it springs full-armed from his brain, as Minerva sprang from the brain of Jove.

Mr. BLAND. What does your amendment do?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am tired of being lectured by the gentleman from Missouri, and seeing him rise day after day to impugn the motives of everybody who advocates anything which is not the child of his brain.

Now, I indorse the proposition to issue silver certificates payable in silver dollars, dollar for dollar; and they should be made a legal tender for all debts public and private; it is good legislation, it is good policy to make that silver certificate, which is in effect a silver dollar, a legal tender for all debts public and private. And I want to know whether the gentleman from Missouri, who has constituted himself the guardian of silver, proposes further to obstruct that amendment.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] seems to fear if the silver certificates were made a legal tender that the bill would meet with a veto at the hands of the President. I do not know what the President's views may be, but I do know from a conversation with the Treasurer of the United States, Mr. Jordan, that he is heartily in favor of legislation making silver certificates a legal tender.

Mr. BLAND rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the question of order. In the opinion of the Chair, this amendment proposes to change the law in that it proposes to make silver certificates legal tender for public as well as private debts. The point of order is sustained.

The question being taken on the adoption of the amendment of Mr. BLAND, it was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the understanding last evening was that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY] should be allowed to occupy ten minutes at this time. I now yield to him.

Mr. LOWRY addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. RANDALL. It is proper I should state to the House that the Committee on Appropriations recommend no change in the organization of the Coast Survey. They have endeavored, however, in the appropriation to correct some abuses that have been alleged to exist. It is not my wish to rake up and reproduce any criticisms that have been made touching the manner of the expenditure of money by the Coast Survey. Let that be of the past. We think that the reductions that we have made have been intelligently made; and we think they will in no manner cripple the bureau or interfere with the due execution of the work confided to that organization.

The aggregate amount that is given in this bill, together with the amount which is drawn under the naval appropriation bill, is about $785,000, which the committee deemed quite sufficient for the present at least, pending the condition in which that bureau now is, without a permanent head. I had hoped before this time some one would have been appointed with a scientific order of mind and with business capacity. But it has been found difficult to find such a person; and that I take it is the reason why this place has not been filled. I know of no other reason. And now I ask that the paragraphs may be proceeded with.

Mr. LONG. I want to second the assurance given by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee that there is no intention on the part of that committee to make any attack on the existence of the Coast Survey, and that the committee recognize the importance of that bureau and the excellence of the work it has done, and the usefulness of that work in aid of the commerce and defense of the country.

Without being familiar with the scientific work of the Coast Survey, and admitting the interest we all felt in the remarks which fell from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] yesterday, there are several suggestions which occur to me with reference to the statements made by him. In the first place, it should be remembered that that gentleman stands almost alone in the commission in the conclusions at which he arrives; and although he states those conclusions with great force and effect, yet if the other members of the commission were to speak they would perhaps present to us exactly different conclusions from those he has arrived at. They are certainly not prepared to go as far as he goes in criticisms of the Coast Survey.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from Massachusetts is mistaken. Senator MORGAN fully concurs with me.

Mr. LONG. I correct myself. This minority position of the gentleman therefore so far modifies the effect his authority would otherwise have.

In the second place, I understood the gentleman to say that the minority of the commission founded their conclusion very much upon the testimony they received from Major Powell, who is the director of the Geological Survey. Now, I am informed—I can not state it of my own knowledge—that Major Powell, since reading his testimony as it has been printed, has volunteered a written statement over his own signature to Senator ALLISON that he feels he did injustice to the Coast Survey and the character and value of the topograpical work it has done by not taking into sufficient consideration the fact that its topographic surveys are largely made with a view to maritime defense. And so far again the impression upon my mind by the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama yesterday is modified.

In the third place, the gentleman from Alabama laid great stress on the value and excellence of the work of the Hydrographic Survey. And yet I think it was shown very clearly by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] yesterday that some of the hydrographic charts go quite as far in the matter of detailed topography as those of the Coast Survey. So far again the impression made by the statement of the gentleman from Alabama is modified.

I agree very fully with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY] that it was hardly fair to present a chart of New York Harbor, Long Island, and Staten Island as fair samples of the general character of the topographic work of the survey. If you will look at the act of 1843, or about that time, it authorized the President to appoint a commission of experts to form a plan to carry out the coast survey. The plan adopted was to provide for a survey not only for purposes of commerce but for purposes of military defense. In that view minuteness and detail in the topography of a chart of New York, Long Island Sound, and Staten Island are important. It was on Long Island that General Washington fought an important battle. It is at once evident that the topographical work in the chart of that island exhibited yesterday may well be somewhat minute. I am also informed that much of this detailed work is not expensive; that while the Coast Survey is collecting the general prominent and important features of the topography it adds very little to the expense that they should embrace also many of these details which when enumerated under the name of peach orchards and fences are held up to ridicule, but are unjustly so held up.

The Coast Survey is therefore in some degree a military survey. It is for the purpose of military defense. I believe that such men as General VIELE, on this floor, will testify to the great value they derived from these detailed topographical delineations during the recent war.

For all these reasons—reasons which suggest themselves at once—I think there is danger that an elaborate statement like that made by the gentleman from Alabama might create an impression in this House more unfavorable than ought to be created against the Coast Survey. I do not believe that the committee of which I have the honor to be a member, or that the commission of which the gentleman from Alabama is a member, or that the gentleman himself, would be disposed in any way to depreciate the value and excellence of the work of the Coast Survey. It is to-day somewhat under a cloud on account of some special unfortunate details; and undoubtedly there is room for some reduction of expense.

But I am sure I express the sentiment of the committee when I say that the great work of the Coast Survey ought not to be forgotten; that this House ought not to allow itself to be under a misapprehension unfavorable to that work, and that the Coast Survey, which for so many years has done so much for our commerce, for the protection of our merchant marine, for making plainer the course of the sailor among the shoals and the inlets of the coast, should not be depreciated, and that it should be sustained in the work which it has hitherto been carrying on.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RANDALL. General debate is closed.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move to strike out the last word. I did not propose to participate at all in the general debate on this question; but I should not like to have it go out, as I fear it would from the apology, if I may so term it, of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], that this House agrees that the work of the Coast Survey Bureau has been in all respects what it ought to have been, and that its expenditures have been wisely made. I think the scientific men of this country owe it to themselves, and they certainly owe it to the fair name of science, to see to it when Congress appropriates money for a scientific purpose that that money is scrupulously and honestly applied to the objects which are intended in the appropriation. That the expenditures which Congress has appropriated for in recent years have been applied in that manner I do not think can be maintained, and the scientific world ought to know that this House does not think that the money it has appropriated for this work has been expended as it ought to have been under scientific direction. I am afraid it must be admitted that the most marked manifestations of scientific genius on the part of this bureau have been in the direction of getting money out of the Treasury rather than in scrupulous honesty and integrity in the use of that money. I do not propose to enter into a criticism of the work done, nor would I vote to cripple in any way the work of this bureau. It is a necessary work, although I agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] in very much, if not in all, that he said yesterday. There is, doubtless, a tendency in all the bureaus and Departments, when money is appropriated, to carry their work to extremes; often, I am afraid, for the purpose of furnishing employment to friends, or to more persons than are necessary for the proper execution of the work.

That, Mr. Chairman, is all that I desire to say; and I now yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the recantation of Major Powell spoken of by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], recanting testimony deliberately given and, according to my impression, always carefully revised before it was sent to the Printer.

Mr. LONG. Do you understand that Major Powell has sent such a letter?

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir; I never heard of it before. I read some extracts from the testimony of Major Powell on this subject:

The Coast and Geodetic Survey constructs maps, or, more properly speaking, charts, of the coast. These charts represent in part water areas and in part land areas. On the water areas are represented the soundings and important features of the sea and river bottoms. Other things also are represented, such as buoys, lights, &c. The land areas represented are in part islands and in part mainland. On these land areas are represented the landmarks which are used by mariners in the navigation of the waters. So far they are strictly coast charts, useful in navigation.

In surveying the land areas the Coast Survey does something more, by extending the map work back a short distance into the country, varying from half a mile to five miles. This additional work is of a peculiar character. All streams, large and small, that run in or through this margin of land are plotted upon maps; all coast marshes are plotted; all rocky ledges and points are indicated, and to some extent hills are represented. In addition to this, many artificial features are plotted, such as city, town, and village plats, country roads, farms, fields, houses, and many other artificial or cultural details. The surveys made for these cultural details do not include complete cadastral surveys, but only sufficient cadastral surveying to make it possible to correctly plot such items upon the maps. I am unable to state any useful purpose which this cadastral or artificial element in the coast charts subserves; first, because it is not executed so as to form a complete cadastral map; second, because these artificial topographic features are ephemeral; that is, this culture changes from year to year in such a manner that the charts speedily become misleading.

In illustration of this fact I may state that one of the commissioners of the Massachusetts survey informs me that he has lately examined certain charts made in Massachusetts on this plan, and he discovers that in the areas coming under his eye 50 per cent. of the houses placed upon the chart twenty years ago have disappeared, or been removed to new sites; that in addition to this a large number of new houses have been erected which do not appear on the old charts, and that the confusion arising from these two causes renders the charts almost unintelligible. He also informs me that the same confusion arises from the delineation of fences, but to a greater extent, and that a similar confusion arises through the delineation of minor public or private roads, but not to so great an extent.

Now, then, as to whether or not it was fair of me to take the coast of Long Island Sound and New York Harbor in order to illustrate my argument, I took that not because it was unlike the ordinary work of the Coast Survey, but because there is in this very bill an appropriation for doing over again that expensive topographic work which I pointed out here yesterday.

In the five minutes allowed me, Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct the mistakes of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY], my colleague on the commission. In the act referred to, passed while Thomas Jefferson was President, there was not one word said about defense, and that expression never appeared in law until 1843. Then in the plan adopted by the board under the law so much topography only was necessary either for purposes of commerce or defense. What I contend is that nothing is necessary for purposes of defense except the natural features of the coast and the roads.

Again, as to the time when this prediction was made by Professor Bache. It was made, as I stated, in 1857.

Of course it did not refer to Alaska. So Professor Hilgard's estimate before the commission related to the Atlantic coast and the Pacific, expressly excluding Alaska. As to the statement that my desire to transfer this survey to the Navy is because I am on the naval commission, I am surprised that my colleague on the commission does not remember that I came to my present conclusion, and expressed it to the commission, long before I ever became connected with the Naval Committee. My reasons were these: In every other country in the world the navy does this work. Our naval officers are competent to do it. They are already paid by the Government; the work ought to be done by them for the pay they already receive, and it is useless and extravagant for us to be paying civilian officers to do work that can be as well done by officers already in the pay of the Government. For these reasons I advocated this transfer more than a year ago.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, I was unable yesterday to cite the provision of law under which I held that this topographical survey was carried on in connection with the survey of the coast. It will be found that by the act of March 3, 1843, provision was made that the work of the Coast Survey should be reorganized upon a plan to be submitted by a board to be appointed by the President of the United States. That board was appointed, consisting of the chief of the Coast Survey and officers of the Navy and Army. Their report was made and accepted by President Tyler; and under the plan arranged by that board the work of the Coast Survey was carried forward. That plan, after providing for a series of secondary and tertiary triangulations, proceeds to say:

From the points thus furnished by the several triangulations the topography shall be executed, using always the most approved instruments and principles; the topography to be carried as far inland as may be necessary for a proper delineation of the shore and for purposes either of commerce or defense.

Under that regulation the topography has been carried forward by the Coast Survey, and has included such an area along the coast as was found necessary for the proper delineation of the coast, for obtaining the proper basal points of triangulation, and for delineating those important natural and artificial objects and points of demarkation which would prove important for purposes of commerce and for purposes of defense.

Yesterday the gentleman from Alabama called attention three or four times with a great deal of derision to the fact that on one of the Coast Survey charts there was marked and specified the winter quarters of Barnum's museum, and of course that furnished an opportunity for a joke at the expense of the Coast Survey. But, Mr. Chairman, the coast survey of every nation has always taken into consideration every prominent and important landmark that would be seen by the mariner when approaching the coast from the sea. On almost every chart of the English coast and the French coast in existence to-day artificial objects have been delineated in outline for the purpose of identification of the coast—artificial objects which were built some of them hundreds of years ago—windmills, round towers, and even private buildings which are so situated as to become an obvious and conspicuous part of the landscape. The delineation of the winter quarters of Barnum's museum to which so much jocular reference has been made was governed simply by the fact that years ago Mr. Barnum erected an immense edifice which stands to-day towering above the landscape and forms one of the most prominent and conspicuous objects visible to any vessel approaching the coast.

Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed to enter into any discussion as to the extravagance or frugality with which the work of the Coast Survey has been carried on.

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to read what Major Powell says——

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have only a moment and can not yield.

I am unable to discuss this question from a scientific standpoint. I do not possess the advantages of the gentleman from Ohio, in being able to sit in judgment as an expert upon the scientific work of this bureau. I am not a scientist; but I should be false to my duty and false to myself if I failed here in this discussion to pay the tribute of practical knowledge to the service rendered by the Coast Survey of the United States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The matter of expenditure is a matter which has been publicly inquired into, and it is that especially to which I alluded.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like a moment or two more.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, obtained the floor, and yielded his time to Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, according to the old adage, "the proof of the pudding is in the eating," and I can and do bear testimony here to-day that I have taken vessels of the United States into and out of nearly every indentation upon the coast of the United States from New York Harbor to Galveston without a pilot, relying simply upon the accuracy of the survey of the coast by the United States Coast Survey.

Further, it is a fact which will be acknowledged by every military and every naval officer of the United States that the great blockade of nearly 3,000 miles of our coast which was maintained throughout the war—a blockade unparalleled in its extent and efficiency, unprecedented in the marine risks which were encountered, and in the manner in which obstacles previously supposed to be insurmountable were overcome—was rendered possible solely by reason of the accuracy and efficiency with which the work of the United States Coast Survey had been carried on.

In further proof of the practical efficiency with which this work has been conducted it is proper to state here that the fleets and the armies of the United States during the war were indebted to the practical services of the chief officers of the Coast Survey in piloting vessels, in laying buoys, in opening channels, and in leading our fleets in many of the most important operations upon our Southern coast.

There are to-day at the head of the Coast Survey men who have been criticised here as bureau officers, these men whose work has been sneered at as that of gentlemen who sit in cushioned chairs here in Washington and draw their salaries; there are to-day in the office of the Coast Survey men at the very head of their profession, who have demonstrated their practical ability to the extent of being capable of going on board a Government vessel and acting as pilot of that craft into and out of any port on the coast of the United States.

Mr. HERBERT. Now, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has expired.

Mr. HERBERT. For the purpose of asking the gentleman a question I move to strike out the last word.

That these Coast Survey charts are accurate and have everything which is necessary is a fact which is admitted by me and was yesterday. What I say is that those Coast Survey charts contain a great deal that is unnecessary, and therefore useless, and consequently extravagant.

I ask the gentleman from Maine this practical question, and I hope he will favor me with an answer to it: When you were on one of those vessels—guided by the Coast Survey map—coming into a harbor, could you ordinarily from the vessel see back from the shore-line a mile or two miles or three miles of usual level ground? Could you see fences and similar topographical features as they are portrayed upon these Coast Survey maps?

My point, Mr. Chairman, is this: That these things, this expensive topography, the delineation on the charts of objects not visible from the shore, are worthless to the sailor. That is the question I ask the gentleman from Maine, and I hope he will answer it—whether he can see those things ordinarily from the deck of the vessel entering any one of our harbors?

Mr. BOUTELLE. My answer is, in the first place, that this survey is made for two purposes: one for the purpose of delineating the coast and marking the soundings approaching the coast for the purpose of commerce, and the other of delineating the topography of the coast for the purpose of fortification and defense.

Now, the gentleman will admit at once, I think, that in the survey of any given point——

Mr. HERBERT. Answer my question. Can you see them from the vessel as you approach the shore?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am coming to that. I think the gentleman will admit in surveying any point of the United States coast if there should be within 2 or 3 miles of the coast some high mountain it would properly be an object of survey and delineation.

Mr. HERBERT. I admit that it would be.

Mr. BOUTELLE. To find how far back that mountain is the ground has to be measured; it has to be traversed; and if the surveying officer in traversing that ground should find an important stream it would be a proper object for him to delineate. It would not be a matter of any great expense.

I understand it to be a fact in delineating the great, important natural features of the topography, the filling out of these minor details is a matter of no considerable expense. It is therefore the merest leather and prunella. [Laughter.]

Mr. HERBERT. The difference is this: according to the testimony of Major Powell, this topographical work can be done for from $10 to $15 or $20 a square mile. The Coast Survey does it at a cost to the Government of more than $250 a square mile.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not understand Major Powell has so testified.

Mr. HERBERT. He testifies that he does the work at from ten to fifteen or twenty dollars a square mile, and the testimony shows that the topography of this Coast Survey costs from $250 to $275 a square mile. That is the difference; and it is a difference which should be saved to the Treasury for the reasons I have already stated.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not understand the expense of putting in these minor details against which your criticism has been directed is so much.

Mr. HERBERT. It is a difference of between $10, $15, or $20 per mile when the work is done according to the method used by Major Powell, and $250 when it is done by the Coast Survey.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does he think his method is best?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes; he does.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is natural.

Mr. HERBERT. He says his work is better because it is cheaper. The work can certainly be done more cheaply than the Coast Survey does it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes.

Mr. EVERHART. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The observations of the gentleman who has just taken his seat seem perhaps to criticise severely the maps of the Coast Survey. They are conceded to be works of unrivaled completeness and precision.

But, like some old Dutch pictures, their very exactness is said to impair their merit. We are told that only natural and conspicuous objects should be portrayed—natural because such are permanent; and conspicuous because they may be noticed from the sea; for, otherwise, it is said, observers would be confused. But, forsooth, we know that all natural objects are not permanent, and that others invisible from the sea on account of minuteness could hardly cause confusion. But every part is but a constituent of the whole, and even the smallest or commonest objects, if unimportant, are not superfluous, and perfect the scene.

Surely the meadows are as lasting as the hills, the streams as the rivers, the hedges as the trees, and the house or town or city as permanent and prominent as the signal or the light-house station. But time varies appearances, and everything undergoes mutation. The towers totter, forests fall, channels shift, rocky coasts recede, and all nature alters. But though the landscape may lose some lesser feature, yet its salient ones are longer noticed, or their ruins identify their site, as the wrecked Colossus showed for centuries where its mirrors gleamed.

But some fast land must be included in the surveys; as points must be fixed and base lines laid down beyond the shores, shoals, and inlets; and the soil and water represented in all their sinuosities and relations. A geodetic survey, unlike the ordinary one, is made with reference to the curvature of the earth, according to sidereal observations, and established by stable monuments. It exhibits all undulations of the surface, indicates the resources upon it and below it, and discloses to government and people the border perils and safeguards of commerce and the country. [Applause.]

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing resurvey of Long Island Sound and finishing same, $15,000.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to proceed further with the discussion of this subject, but shall move to strike out these lines for the resurvey of Long Island Sound.

Mr. HEWITT rose.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote.

Mr. HERBERT. I will not insist upon the motion, as I will be able to test the question perhaps in another shape, and will withdraw it for the present.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completing resurvey of Delaware Bay, including current observations, $2,000.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Chairman, I move, in line 380, to insert after the words "Delaware Bay" the words "and River," so that it will read "Delaware Bay and River."

Mr. RANDALL. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the researches in physical hydrography relating to harbors and bars, $2,500.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Chairman, I move, in line 401, to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "four thousand."

This is for researches in physical hydrography, a very important work, and one that I think should be continued under a proper appropriation. I do not think this amount is sufficient. I am informed by Professor Mitchell that the amount appropriated last year, which was $4,000, ought to be appropriated for the next fiscal year, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. PETERS. Let the amendment be reported from the desk.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee thought the amount here appropriated was sufficient. In 1885 the amount appropriated to this service was $3,000. In view of the amount taken for other purposes out of this appropriation we thought that $2,500 was a sufficient amount for this item, and I hope the committee will not increase it.

Mr. HERBERT. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania how much this appropriates for this service less than was appropriated last year?

Mr. RANDALL. One hundred and forty-six thousand dollars.

I ask a vote on the amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuation of geodetic work on transcontinental line between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, $20,000.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations with reference to this item. It appears that we have now two parties engaged in this transcontinental geodetic survey, the Coast Survey Bureau and the Geological Survey. How is that?

Mr. RANDALL. It is not the same work. This is a transcontinental line from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific, and is partly completed. There was some division, I will state, in the committee touching the propriety of this appropriation, but it was finally thought it would be better to proceed with the work, and hence the appropriation is made.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not rise to object to proceeding with the Geodetic Survey by one party or the other, but it seems to me quite unnecessary that two parties should be in the field doing that kind of work.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to add to what I heretofore said that by an examination of the Commissioner's report it will be seen they recommend a continuance of this work.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. LOWRY. This was recommended, and there is no duplication of the work.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I suppose there is some difference in kind, but it is substantially the same work.

The Clerk read as follows:

For one clerk at $1,800.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph just read and insert in lieu thereof: "For one general office assistant at $2,000."

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Superintendent, asking that the title of this officer be changed in accordance with the amendment I have offered. The original estimate of that officer, Mr. Thorn, placed the salary at $1,800; and the letter gives his reason why it should be raised to $2,000.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY OFFICE,
Washington, June 22, 1886.

SIR: The sundry civil appropriation bill for the current year, which for the first time made specific appropriations for salaries for office force of this bureau provided for one "general office assistant." No specific provision for that employé was made either in the estimates or in the bill now pending in the House of Representatives. The duties of the position involve as much responsibility and require as much ability as those of either the auditing clerk or accounting clerk, for which the bill appropriates a salary of $2,000.

I respectfully suggest the propriety of amending the pending bill by striking out the provision in line 490, page 21, "For one clerk at $1,800," and inserting in lieu thereof, "For one general office assistant at $2,000."

Respectfully, &c.,

F. M. THORN.

Hon. S. J. RANDALL, Chairman, &c.

Mr. LOWRY. I offer an amendment to the amendment to make the salary $2,200.

The amendment of Mr. LOWRY was disagreed to.

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL was adopted.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For three copper-plate printers, at $1,300 each, $3,900.

Mr. SINGLETON. Heretofore there was a foreman of the copper-plate printers in the Geodetic Survey. Now it is proposed in this bill to provide three copper-plate printers at $1,300 each. It must be apparent to every one there should be some head to that department who would control the work, otherwise each man will do as he pleases, and nothing will be done right. I therefore offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph just read and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For three copper-plate printers, one at $1,600 a year and two at $1,200 each, $4,000."

Mr. SINGLETON. If gentlemen will look at the foot of page 201 of the estimates they will find this amendment comports exactly with the recommendation there, except that there are two copper-plate printers struck off, reducing the appropriation $1,400. The only change from the bill as to amounts to be made by my amendment is to make the appropriation $4,000 instead of $3,900.

I think the gentleman in charge of the bill should accept the amendment. The gentleman who has been at the head of this portion of the Geodetic Survey I know well. He is a most efficient workman. He has managed that division to the satisfaction of all parties concerned. It seems to me impossible where there are three copper-plate printers to have the work properly done unless there is somebody who has a right to direct and say how it is to be done and see that the men are kept employed.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know any of the individuals provided for in this appropriation. But I did make a very thorough inquiry as to the character of the work performed. I found that all of these copper-plate printers performed about the same duty, and the committee were inclined to think that there was no foreman necessary to direct two other men, but that it would be better to put them all, as they did the same character of work, at the same pay of $1,300. That reduces, it is true, one of these officials, whose name I do not know, from $1,600 to $1,300, but raises the other two from $1,200 to $1,300. These are the reasons which prompted the committee in the course they have taken in recommending this change.

Mr. SINGLETON. The responsibility must rest somewhere for the proper discharge of this work. Somebody must be responsible to the head of the department for the proper management of it and for the proper execution of the work. This man is an expert. He has been there for a great number of years and has given entire satisfaction; and now to reduce his salary and put him down to $1,300 seems to me unjust. In all the bills heretofore reported this difference has never been made, and I can not see any good reason at this time why he should be removed from that position and reduced to a salary of $1,300. The work, it is true, is very much the same. But in all these departments there must be some party who is responsible for the proper execution of the work. I hope the committee will vote the amendment upon the bill.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For one copper-plate printer's helper, at $700.

Mr. BAYNE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as an additional paragraph the following:

"For pay of William B. Morgan, late disbursing agent United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, the unexpended balance remaining to the credit of the appropriation made for that office (disbursing agent) for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886."

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not think this amendment is subject to the point of order. I base it upon this state of facts: Mr. Morgan was disbursing agent for the Coast and Geodetic Survey for a very considerable length of time. The office sought him, and not he the office.

He was placed there upon recommendations coming from the Treasury Department, and acted in that capacity until the Auditor of the Treasury, Mr. Chenowith, began an investigation. That investigation led to the disclosure of a great many frauds that had been perpetrated upon the Government, and the action of the Auditor in that behalf was to be commended. But among others who suffered was Mr. Morgan, who was dismissed. An examination of his accounts showed that they were perfectly straight and clean and that there was no cause at all for his dismissal. His dismissal, however, would ordinarily have carried with it the deprivation of pay and he could not have complained, but the fact is that ever since he was dismissed he has been assisting to disentangle the difficulties in the accounts of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. He has been rendering service all the while to that bureau from the time of his dismissal down to the present, and he has been rendering that service at the request of the Treasury Department and of the officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. For these reasons I think he ought to be paid for his time.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, everything the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] says in commendation of this official may be exactly true. The gentleman will remember, however, that this is an appropriation bill for the next fiscal year, and that if the Government owes this gentleman any money the proper place to provide for its payment would be in the deficiency bill. I will make inquiry in regard to the matter, and when that bill comes up for consideration, if Mr. Chenowith says that this payment ought to be made—I have great confidence in anything that he says—I am quite sure that we will accept his suggestion.

Mr. BAYNE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no part of the money herein appropriated for the Coast and Geodetic Survey shall be available for allowance to civilian or other officers for subsistence while on duty in the office at Washington, or to officers of the Navy attached to the Survey; nor shall there hereafter be made any allowance for subsistence to officers of the Navy attached to the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. EVERHART. Mr. Chairman, I desire to insert at the end of line 632 the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Furnishing points for State survey, $14,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. That question was fully considered by the committee.

Mr. LONG. The chairman ought to state that the committee were not entirely unanimous on the subject.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] was the exception.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Punishment for violations of internal-revenue laws: For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws, or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violations, $25,000; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall make a detailed statement to Congress once in each year as to how he has expended this sum, and also a detailed statement of all miscellaneous expenditures in the Bureau of Internal Revenue for which appropriation is made in this act.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 642, by striking out "twenty-five thousand" and inserting "fifty thousand."

The Treasury Department estimated that the sum necessary for the purposes mentioned in this paragraph is $50,000. I have since had a conversation with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in regard to the matter, and he says that that sum is absolutely necessary. That is the sum that was appropriated last year, and the Commissioner says that it is absolutely necessary for the purpose of ferreting out and preventing frauds upon the internal revenue. I trust, therefore, that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will accept the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I can not.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, no reason whatever was given, either by the Committee on Appropriations or by any one else, so far as I am able to learn, why the appropriation for this purpose should be reduced. On the other hand, strong and cogent reasons have been offered, presented by the officials of the Internal Revenue Bureau, why the full amount should be appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me ask the gentleman whether any reason was given why $50,000 should be appropriated?

Mr. CABELL. There was no reason given for it.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend the amendment by striking out the whole appropriation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will ask the Clerk to read for the information of the House a communication which I have received to-day, and which I have not yet read, but which will give reasons for the amount I have named.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, June 25, 1886.

SIR: Referring to the proposed reduction in the appropriation "for detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws" for the next fiscal year from $50,000 to $25,000, as reported in the sundry civil bill, which was the subject of our conversation of yesterday, I will submit the following:

The expenditure from said appropriation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885, was $34,387.29, principally through revenue agents and collectors in the detection of frauds and the suppression of illicit manufacture of and traffic in spirits and tobacco, which resulted in the suppression of a large number of illicit distilleries, and also in the seizure and forfeiture of a large amount of property and the prosecution of a large number of persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws. (See pages XV and XVI of the Commissioner's Report for the year ended June 30, 1885.)

The expenditures for the same purposes for the period ended May 31, 1886, of the present fiscal year, amounted to $36,761.32. Under the provisions of section 3463 Revised Statutes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue issued a circular offering a reward not exceeding 10 per cent. of the amount recovered for information leading to the detection of frauds upon the internal revenue and the recovery of internal-revenue taxes unlawfully withheld. There has been received by the Government on compromises during the present fiscal year the sum of $203,868.97, most of which is the result of information elicited by said circular. There has been paid as rewards under said circular within the present year the sum of $4,000, and there are claims for rewards under consideration and to be presented for about $8,000 more. When these claims are adjusted and all the expenditures from said appropriation by revenue agents and collectors for June are paid, there will be very little of the $50,000 appropriated to be covered into the Treasury.

There is reason to believe that the demand upon this fund will be as large next year as it has been this, and I am of the opinion that it would be unwise to cripple this branch of the service by reducing the appropriation below $50,000.

Very respectfully,

JOS. S. MILLER, Commissioner.

Hon. R. W. TOWNSHEND,
House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in criticism of that officer that if he wanted any change in connection with the appropriation bills his communication should have been addressed to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will say that when the bill was under consideration by the Committee on Appropriations I called the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and of the whole committee to the facts set forth in that letter. The other day when I called upon the Commissioner I asked him to furnish me a memorandum of the facts or write me a letter embodying them, not particularly for public use in the House, but to refresh my memory when the debate upon it should arise. The communication is really a private one, designed for my own private information, and certainly no discourtesy was intended to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not take it as a discourtesy to me individually, but I do say that the communication ought to have been addressed to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, Mr. Chairman, I had already given the information contained in that letter to the Committee on Appropriations, and I am solely responsible for the communication being written or addressed to me. I have presented it in obedience to a demand made here for this information. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is in no sense whatever subject to any unfavorable criticism for the communication. It was an act of perfect propriety on his part.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the committee will not agree to the amendment.

Mr. CABELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID] will be recognized to offer his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the entire paragraph appropriating $25,000 for information and detection of violations of internal-revenue laws. I send to the Clerk's desk a letter that I desire to have read, which aptly illustrates the method of procedure under the system provided for by this "fraud fund," from which spies and informers are paid for information in regard to violations of the internal-revenue laws:

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES INTERNAL REVENUE,
DEPUTY COLLECTOR'S OFFICE,
SIXTH DISTRICT NORTH CAROLINA,
Hendersonville, June 17, 1885.

MY DEAR SIR: I send you some affidavits. Please sign and return to me immediately and greatly oblige me. I have seen some of the witnesses in the cases. There is no doubt about any of them. I will not issue a warrant in any case that I do not know is a good one. Any case I send you to give me a warrant for I will always be sure of conviction. I was at Asheville the other day, but did not get to see you.

I am, as ever, your friend,

W. G. B. MORRIS.

WILLIAM YOUNG,
Deputy Collector, Asheville, N. C.

The following is the form of affidavit:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Western district of North Carolina:

This day personally appeared before me ——— ———, a United States commissioner, ——— ———, and maketh oath that he is informed and believes that Walker Heatherly did on or about the 1st day of June, 188–, as well before as since this date, engage in the business of illicit distilling, removing, and retailing spirituous liquors without having complied with the law of the United States.

——— ———, Deponent.

Sworn to before me this —— day of ———, 188–.

——— ———, United States Commissioner.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in the five minutes allotted me under the rule I can not present the reasons for the adoption of this amendment which its importance demands. I can state them but briefly and hurriedly. I do not desire to criticise the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I desire to commend him for having reduced expenditures $200,000 during the past fiscal year and for having increased the collections of revenue three and a half millions. He is one of the most capable and efficient officers in the service of the Government. I am sure he is trying to be just to our people, while he is faithful to the Government. It is the infernal system I would condemn and denounce and have repealed. The section proposed to be stricken out by my amendment provides a fund called the "fraud fund," to pay spies to go out among their neighbors and institute a nefarious system of espionage, compared to which the conduct of Judas Iscariot was righteous and commendable. The instance cited in the letter read by the Clerk is that of a United States commissioner, who writes to a deputy collector, a number of miles away from him, to send him a blank affidavit and sign it in blank. Of course when he receives it the certificate will be attached by the commissioner as if the officer were present, falsely certified, and upon a warrant issued in this manner and upon information furnished, doubtless by spies and informers, citizens will be arrested, arraigned before the courts, subjected to costs and penalties, and all this carried on under the broad system provided for by the proposed appropriation.

We have as yet obtained from this Congress no reduction of internal-revenue taxes, and if their collection is still necessary to meet the pensions, interest on the war debt, and other liabilities incident to the war, I do appeal to this House to aid us at least in securing such modifications of the infernal system as will rid our people of its oppressions and abuses. The amendment I propose is a step in this direction. Abolish this appropriation for spies and informers. Trust our people and treat them fairly, justly, and honestly, as the State does in the levying and collection of her revenue, and violations of the internal-revenue laws will cease altogether. The State has no informers or spies, and she gets every dollar of her taxes.

We have on the Calendar two bills looking to the modification of this system, to the ridding it of its abuses, which I will discuss more fully when they come up for consideration. But let us take this opportunity to get rid of an appropriation of $25,000 to be used for the purpose of buying information upon which criminal prosecutions are to be instituted against the liberties and property of American citizens.

I maintain, sir, that the numerous internal-revenue officers, gaugers, deputy collectors, and special agents sent all over this country are sufficient to bring to account all violators of the internal-revenue laws without offering rewards to informers. Why, sir, heretofore circulars have been sent out by the Department offering rewards for information not to exceed 10 per cent. of the net amount of the fines, penalties, forfeitures, and taxes recovered or paid by reason of such information—an advertisement for bad men in many instances to wreak vengeance on their enemies by perjury sought and paid for by the Government. Can any fair-minded man doubt that such a system should be speedily and absolutely repealed? Is there any wonder that our people should be restive under a system that must exist by such nefarious means? I could cite instances where a citizen's property has been seized and destroyed, himself subjected to arrest and imprisonment, and, when tried by a jury of his peers, vindicated and acquitted, and no reparation made. The conscience and judgment of the country demand a repeal of a system of taxation the enforcement of which can possibly beget such outrages and oppression. I maintain that this appropriation of $25,000 is unnecessary. The duly constituted officers of the Government are more than sufficient to bring to justice all violators of the law, and not one dollar should be appropriated for the purpose contemplated in this paragraph. I therefore move as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] to strike out the entire paragraph, and I trust the committee will adopt the amendment.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am well acquainted with the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I know him in his private and his official character. I know he would not do anything wrong; but I am not willing to trust him or any other official with money which others may expend in debauching the public service and oppressing the people. I want to add my testimony to that given here by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID] as to the outrageous system of abuse and oppression which has been carried on under this spy system. I have in my possession a letter from the marshal of my own State, directed to one of his deputies, telling him that if he would go out and work up cases of this kind he would make money enough for both of them, and all he wanted him to understand was, when he went out never to come back without a man. That system has been carried on all over the State.

Mr. WILSON. Did the incident to which my colleague has just referred happen under the present administration?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No, sir; it happened under the former administration.

Mr. Chairman, we have marshals, deputy marshals, collectors, &c., who are paid salaries. They are sufficient to carry on the business of the Government and to make these investigations. The genius of this country despises the spy system. The courts have a contempt for informers. The public feels outraged by their presence. My belief is that this spy system, these outrages inflicted on the community by informers, have created more disregard of law in the land than the desire to make money by carrying on illicit distilleries, &c. This whole clause ought to be struck out. We ought to have no spies, no informers. If the present deputy marshals and other officers in this service are not sufficient in number, let more be created, and let the country know who they are. Let us not have men sneaking like snakes through every community inducing men to commit violations of the law—getting somebody to sell them a twist of tobacco or a gallon of whisky without proper authority.

Let it not be understood that men are going around getting up all sorts of prosecutions and persecutions in order to make money. No country can maintain such a system with credit to itself. Why, sir, our Government, in reference to all other matters, has put its foot down on these spies and informers. This system, which was for a time tolerated in the collection of the customs, has there been wiped out, because it was believed to be contrary to public policy and good morals and not calculated to promote the efficiency of the Government service.

I hope, therefore, the committee will strike out this whole clause. If it is necessary to have additional officers, let them be authorized, and put the badge upon them, so that the public can know them; and they will discharge their duties as any other honest officials do.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, the provision contained in this paragraph of the bill represents the most odious feature in our whole fiscal system. The employment of spies and informers ought to have been eliminated from our revenue system long ago; and if we intend to preserve the system of internal taxation we must see to it that this odious feature of that system be speedily abolished. How long could such a system of collecting taxation exist if it depended upon the votes of the people who have to suffer under it? How long could it continue if its continuance depended upon the consent of the people of Virginia or North Carolina or any other State who are the victims of its maladministration? It would be struck down before the setting of the sun. This system of spies, informers, and detectives is looked upon with indignation in every locality where they are a part of the administration of the internal-revenue system. Spies, detectives, and informers have always been odious to the American people. Yet we continue a system which has been and is obnoxious; and it is only continued because the vast majority of those who favor its continuance do not belong to any community that suffers under its abuses and oppressions.

In defense of this system it is urged that without it the Government could not collect its taxes, that it is necessary these spies and informers should persecute and hunt down the little distilleries in the mountains; that otherwise the "moonshiners" who are seeking to avoid taxation could never be brought to justice. Why, sir, there is not a single State or county in this Union where the tax-payer pays tax upon the full value of his property. On an average he does not pay taxes on two-thirds of the actual value of his property. If you will examine the census returns of 1870 or 1880, you will find that the assessed value of the property of this country is far below its true valuation as corrected by the Superintendent of the Census. Yet no one makes any complaint on this point. How long do you suppose the citizens of any of these States would tolerate spies and detectives going through the community and saying to this gentleman or that, "Sir, your land is worth more than the valuation at which it is returned; your cows and your horses are worth more than their assessed value; bonds and stocks which you own have not been fully returned." Do you suppose that a system of taxation which involved odious, inquisitorial features of that character could remain upon the statute-book of a single State of this Union? It would last only until the Legislature could have an opportunity to repeal it.

Yet this alone of all others is kept up by spies, detectives, and informers going through the country hunting down the people and with despotic power seizing their property and destroying it without trial or conviction by their peers. Trial by jury has been denominated the safeguard of a free people, the safeguard of their property as well as the safeguard of their lives. It is an Anglo-Saxon principle that no one shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property until he has been tried by his peers and convicted. But here under the provisions of this system, denominated by Thomas Jefferson as infernal, we keep up these spies, detectives, and informers, and clothe them with the tyrannical power of seizing and destroying property without giving the poor man who claims it the right to be heard in court upon the charges brought against him. This part of the excise system is infernal and ought to be swept off the statutes at once.

Not only is that gross wrong authorized by law, but we provide a booty fund for the purpose of hiring these spies and informers to go into the mountain districts, where the people are poor, and hunt down their victims, who, though poor, are nevertheless entitled to the protection of our Government and laws, and devote their property to destruction. There is no place in our political system for such a monstrosity. The revenue can be collected without any such instrumentalities. I am in favor of collecting the tax on whisky, but I am utterly opposed to turning loose upon any of our people a set of spies and informers to rob them of their property and drive them from their homes. The provision, instead of being made more oppressive, should be stricken from the bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the debate on this paragraph and the amendments thereto be limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Oh, I hope not; that is not sufficient time for the discussion of such an important matter as this is. I hope the gentleman will make it at least forty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. If we do not limit the debate we will be all summer passing this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope debate will not be cut off on this most important question.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to limiting the debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto?

Mr. GROSVENOR. This side of the House has not been able to open their mouths in the committee. I have been struggling for an hour at least to be heard, and have not been recognized.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object to any limitation of the debate.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, further to consider the appropriation bills; and pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto shall be closed in twenty minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It should be forty minutes at least.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to hear from the other side of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is no political side on this question.

Mr. RANDALL. They claim it. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] represents that side.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This side of the House has been steadily refused recognition. I have made half a dozen attempts and have failed.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to be fair. Those who favor striking out an increase of the appropriation have taken up ten minutes on this side. I move that debate on this paragraph be limited to thirty minutes—twenty minutes to be under control of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and ten minutes on this side.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to say the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not fair. The proposition is introduced by a Democrat. It has been introduced by one who wanted to make this Democratic administration efficient. I do not want this administration put into the hands of the gentleman from Ohio. I introduced that amendment, and I introduced it—— [Cries of "Order!"] I say there are no party lines on this subject, and there should not be.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to limit debate to thirty minutes, twenty minutes to be given to the other side and ten to this.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There are no party lines in this question. It is a question whether the revenue shall be collected or stolen. I insist it is wrong to put this proposition in the hands of gentlemen who insist—— [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. MILLS. I tell the gentleman from Illinois the question here is between the little stills in the mountains and the big stills in Illinois.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to make it forty minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will first be taken on the amendment making it forty minutes.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 90.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. RANDALL'S motion was then agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. The present occupant of the chair desires to state that debate has been limited to thirty minutes, with the understanding——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is no understanding.

Mr. RANDALL. I rely on the chairman of the committee to do what is exactly fair and right, and I know he will——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am sure of it.

Mr. RANDALL. To divide the time as he sees proper.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to make a statement in which he was interrupted. The statement is, that the former occupant of the chair handed a list of names, beginning with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. CABELL, then Mr. ERMENTROUT, Mr. GROSVENOR, Mr. TOWNSHEND, and Mr. PETERS, to the present occupant of the chair.

The Chair supposes that since the limitation has been put upon the debate the list can not be strictly followed.

The gentleman from Ohio will now be recognized for five minutes.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to know if the custom of recognizing members by a list will be pursued in this debate? My reason for making the inquiry is justified, I think, by the fact that I represent a district as much interested in this particular portion of the bill as any other gentleman on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only repeat the statement made a moment ago, that the present occupant does not know what course will be pursued. He is only temporarily here, and as long as he undertakes to divide the time he will divide it according to the usual rule.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the proposition here, as I understand it, is to add to the appropriation, for the purpose of bringing to trial and punishment violators of the internal-revenue law, the sum of $25,000; placing it back where it was under former appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Under the appropriation of last year.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir; the appropriation for last year.

What I was trying to say is that political promises in this country ought to be very religiously adhered to; and if there was any one promise made more frequently than any other promise during the campaign of 1884, which resulted in the placing in power of the Democratic party, it was the promise made to the people of West Virginia, of Tennessee, and of other States South, that the advent of the Democratic party should be succeeded by an abandonment of all prosecutions for illicit distilling.

I was told the other day by an eminent Government official appointed by this administration and confirmed by the Senate, and now discharging with great ability the duties of his high office, that at one term of the court in one of these States more than one hundred men were arraigned for violating the internal-revenue law in the matter of illicit distilling; and he said that almost without exception they told the court—they answered the charge in the indictment—by stating that they understood if the Democratic party got into power there was to be no further prosecution for these crimes. [Laughter.] Now, I submit it is asking too much of the Democratic party to strike out the whole of this appropriation. The enthusiasm of a political campaign sometimes carries the campaign promises away past the high-water mark where execution can be carried out. But in this case——

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me interrupt the gentleman for a question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. Do you understand that the motion here to strike out this provision is in pursuance of that tacit understanding of the Democratic party?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am going to correct myself so as to make clear the statement. My understanding is that, these promises having been made and the reward therefor having been accepted, something must be done by the Democratic party to recognize their obligations to their constituents in the premises. I think it is enough for them to say we will not abolish the whole of this service—hunting out illicit distillers—by striking out all of it this year; but if you happen to get into trouble again because of it, why we will wipe out the other half some other time. Thus the party will have done something this year toward making good its promises; but it will have a stock of possibilities on hand for next year.

The collection of the revenue is the subsidiary thing. The election of the Democratic party is the main thing.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let me ask the gentleman from Ohio if he thinks the Democratic party is in the habit of carrying out its promises?

Mr. GROSVENOR. They seem to be struggling now in that direction.

Mr. ROWELL. That is complimenting them too much. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. This is one of their campaign promises, and they are doing as well as they are in the habit of doing in that respect for the purpose of carrying it out. I do not expect them to paralyze that arm of the Government, to destroy it entirely and wipe it entirely from the statute-books; but it is quite enough for them; and they are willing to strike out that branch of the Government service to the extent of one-half, and inform their moonshine friends in the Southern States that in time they will be wholly relieved from this tax. I know there are people down South who are expecting it. I know, no matter how much misled they were in their interest in the advent of the Democratic party, that they are expecting just this thing to be done, so that they can carry on this business without prosecution.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I reserve that.

Mr. CABELL. I did not suppose this would be regarded as a political measure, and I am sure it will not be so considered by either side of this House.

When this question was considered in committee, the committee thought $25,000 was an ample amount to appropriate for the purpose here stated. Since the matter has come here the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has moved to double that amount, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID] has moved to strike out the whole section.

I am heartily in accord with what the gentleman from North Carolina has proposed. What do we want with that appropriation? I ask gentlemen on both sides of this House has not this system arrived at a degree of perfection that we do not need the assistance of spies and informers to carry it out? Is it an American system to have spies and informers at the elbow of every citizen, shadowing him through the land? Is it not a disgrace that comes home to every American citizen when he feels that the Government of his fathers puts upon his track men who are pursuing him and shadowing him and his fellow-citizens through their several walks of life?

We need nothing of that kind or that character. This sum of money is not used for legitimate purposes. It was not so used in the past; it will not be so used in the future. I ask you, gentlemen, to strike out this, because you do not need this money to give to these men. You have collectors, you have surveyors, you have gaugers, and you have storekeepers, and revenue agents and marshals besides. These officers can certainly attend to all the business that is needed in this department. They can bring to justice every man who violates the law; and it needs not to hire men to seek out offenders or that they must be paid by the Government for that purpose.

I will only mention here that in some portions of the State in which I reside, in my own district, innocent men have been informed upon. These spies and informers have been put upon the people and hundreds of men have been reported to commissioners, and these commissioners have made their fees by thousands of dollars, and have sent men on to be tried by the courts, and the courts have discharged them. In one little county in my district the commissioner's fees have amounted to a little more than $2,000 in a year, and in all that time not twenty men have been convicted.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. In some counties the fees of the commissioners have amounted to $15,000.

Mr. CABELL. A few days ago a court was to be held in the little city of Danville, and from one hundred and fifty to two hundred men, dwellers in the mountains, were brought there under this spy and informer system. If those men had been brought before your own courts, gentlemen, not ten of them would have been found guilty.

You know nothing of these things. This does not go on among your people; and you can not conceive how people in certain States of the Union are harassed and bedeviled by these creatures. They are in the pay of the revenue agents, in the pay of the commissioners, and they take up helpless men because they are helpless, and carry them to court and have them tried, and no testimony can be found against them, and they are of course discharged.

This money should not be given. In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill $1,900,000 was appropriated for agents, collectors, store-keepers, &c. What, then, do you want with this sum or money here? It is to be given to the worst class of people on the face of the earth. It is a sum of money to promote crime rather than to repress it. And I ask this House, if you want to save the money of the Government and to do exact justice to the citizen, to strike out this whole paragraph and not appropriate one dollar for this purpose, because the official agencies named are sufficient to repress all crime under this law.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, Mr. ERMENTROUT, and Mr. PETTIBONE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] desire to take the minute which was yielded to him?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to take the floor in my own right and to reserve that minute.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the duty of the Chair now to recognize some one on the other side. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE] is recognized.

Mr. PETTIBONE. It is a cardinal idea, running all through our civilization, that the people shall be free from unreasonable and improper searches and seizures. I am positively opposed to this provision becoming law. It provides, among other things, that for payments for information and detection of violations of the law $25,000 shall be appropriated. I think I have had as much experience as any man upon this floor in the enforcement of the internal-revenue law. I know how it works, and I tell the House that these cases, brought to the circuit courts of the United States by men who are paid outside of the regular force of the Internal Revenue Department and the deputy marshals, are the worst cases that are brought there; and they are the cases out of which grows the opposition of the people to the whole system of internal revenue. I have known cases where these parties for the hope of reward would go to a mountaineer and, under the pretense of being sick, would buy a pint of whisky, and then go to the nearest United States commissioner, swear out a warrant, and have that man dragged away a hundred miles, and others along with him as witnesses; and finally when the grand jury came to examine the case they either threw it out as being trivial at a cost of $150 or $200 to the Government, or, if the grand jury found the bill, the case would be thrown out when it came to be examined in court because it was too trivial to take up the time of the court.

Mr. HOPKINS. What was the mountaineer doing with the whisky?

Mr. PETTIBONE. Oh, he dabbled a little in whisky up there in the mountains. [Laughter.] As a matter of fact, all through that mountain region there are a great many copper stills and a great deal of fruit is distilled. The people there can not take their fruit or their corn out of the mountains, so they distill it into a merchantable shape in order that it can be transported. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, the operations of these revenue spies constitute a crying evil. You can not keep them out of the grand-jury room, and if you pay them a price they will give you all kinds of false information, and everybody knows that the man who will be an informer for a price will be very likely, on the other hand, to say to a guilty party, "Give me $10 and I will stay away from court, or I will keep out of the way of the marshal so that he shall not summon me." I know of hundreds of cases of that kind within my own knowledge, and I certify to this House that what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CABELL] has said is correct. I know, further, that the officers of the courts have to be continually on their guard in order to avoid being imposed upon by these informers. Now, to pay these men for being informers, when we have the whole machinery of the internal-revenue system for the enforcement of the law, seems to me very unwise and unnecessary. There is the collector, and he has his deputy in every subdivision. There is the United States marshal, who has an interest in getting fees, so that he may take care that the law is properly executed. He, with his deputies, goes into every neighborhood. Now, can any gentleman tell me a reason why we should appropriate $25,000 more to be paid out to these worthless informers?

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with the gentleman from North Carolina who has offered this amendment, but I fear that so long as internal-revenue taxation is permitted to exist so long will this abominable system of spies and informers continue and follow as naturally as the fruit follows the flower. All that can be done by legislation, I imagine, for some time to come is in the direction of an amelioration of the hardships of the system. With this thought, and in obedience to the petitions of thousands of persons engaged in the manufacture of cigars, in the early days of this session I introduced a bill for the purpose of reducing the amount of the bond required from the manufacturer of cigars.

Under existing law, the minimum amount of the bond the collector may require of a cigar manufacturer before beginning to manufacture is $500, and a bond of $100 for each additional person employed. Since the time when the statute now on the books was framed the amount of revenue tax collected from tobacco has been diminished one-half, and that is a good reason why the amount of the bond should also be diminished. But in my opinion there should be no bond at all, because the other means of reaching violations of the law are sufficiently stringent. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID] had read from the desk a while ago a letter showing how readily at the behest of the prosecutor blank warrants were transmitted through the mails. I am of the opinion that no greater frauds would be practiced on the revenue in the absence of a bond, if the officers are vigilant and faithful, than are now practiced. A bond should be unnecessary with the facilities possessed by the Government for the detection and arrest of offenders and the severe penalties in case of conviction. They are sufficient to deter offenders.

However, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to whom the bill was referred, did not favor the reduction proposed, but recommended a minimum of $250 and $50 dollars for each additional employé. The Ways and Means Committee accepted the recommendation, and have reported a bill, which is now on the Calendar as H. R. 8966. The passage of some such legislation will be a great boon to thousands of men and women who gain a part of their livelihood by manufacturing cigars at their homes. When work is slack at the factories and shut-downs occur it will enable those thus thrown out of employment more readily to follow their trade in a small way and still make a livelihood. Inability to procure the necessary security of $500 weighs heavily on both these classes, is a bar to honest industry, and works hardship.

The amount of security required in the reported bill is more easily obtained than the larger amount required by the present law. I intend when this bill is called up to endeavor so to amend it as to reduce the amount of surety to the sums of $100 and $10, respectively. I hope that when the bill comes before the House the views I have expressed will be indorsed. The legislation now on our statute-book is a discrimination in favor of monopoly and against the poorer classes. I append the report of the Committee of Ways and Means accompanying the bill:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1985) to reduce the penal sums of bonds of cigar manufacturers, report that the committee have had said bill under consideration, and find that by the act of March 3, 1883, the tax on cigars was reduced one-half and on cigarettes more than one-half.

Since the reduction of the tax on cigars it is not deemed necessary to require that manufacturers of cigars should give bonds in so large penal sums as are now required by section 3387 United States Revised Statutes.

The committee deem it expedient and just, while recommending the continuance of bonds, that the penal sum should be reduced in the same proportion as the tax, and that said sum should be limited, as in the case of tobacco manufacturers, to a maximum of $20,000.

Your committee believe that under the stamp system such a reduction will cover all liabilities that any manufacturer of cigars could incur for taxes due the Government.

Your committee therefore report back House bill 1985, with the recommendation that it lie upon the table, and that the accompanying bill be adopted as a substitute therefor.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention in this connection to a report in reference to suits decided adversely to the United States in one fiscal year. The number in the whole country is seven hundred and three; fees collected, $126,368. In the civil suits the principal recovered was $185,515.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that in my own State at one term of the court the judge, by the advice of the district attorney, dismissed seven hundred and twenty-nine indictments that had been found at one term.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, I must take the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, an officer whose statements, as he belongs to the present administration, must be reliable. [Laughter.] I look at the returns from West Virginia, and I find that in that State there was not a single prosecution decided adversely to the United States. The Government was successful in every prosecution. [Laughter.] In Virginia—Old Virginia—the Government was unsuccessful in fifty-two cases only in the whole State. In North Carolina it was unsuccesful, I believe, in nineteen, and successful in one hundred and thirty or one hundred and forty.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I would like to state, with the gentleman's permission, that at the last term of the Federal court for the western district of North Carolina, held at Greensborough, the Government was successful in hardly a single case out of a large number of trials.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, I can understand how it is possible there may have been a general jail delivery down there lately. [Laughter.]

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. The trouble is with this espionage or spy system in instituting groundless prosecutions against innocent citizens.

Mr. HISCOCK. I can also understand another thing, as you can, Mr. Chairman, that in a long period of time there may have been a great accumulation of cases which have been practically abandoned and in which finally a nolle prosequi is entered by the Government. Something of that kind may occur, but this record to which I have referred is quite remarkable in the proportion which it exhibits between convictions and acquittals.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Many of the cases are never returned to court, but are instituted before commissioners for the fees and costs.

Mr. HISCOCK. This is a very interesting document; and it would seem to indicate, taking into consideration the States in which these convictions have occurred and in which these fees have been collected, that if it is the intention of the other side to enforce the internal-revenue laws and prevent illicit distilling of whisky it would be wise to follow the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations. Of course it is a mere question of party policy. [Laugher.] If, as was said by the gentleman from Ohio, there was a distinct pledge given that whisky should be manufactured without the payment of tax and that these prosecutions should be abandoned, of course that is a matter for the other side to consider; but as I understand there was no such plank in the platform. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. I am not sure about that. They said they were going to "reform" the internal-revenue laws.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, when a few moments ago I insisted that the gentleman from Pennsylvania had not made a proper suggestion as to the division of time in debate on this amendment, I meant that it should not be divided on party lines, but between those who favor and oppose the proposition. This is in no sense a political question; for, as has been seen, there are some gentlemen on each side who advocate and some who oppose the pending proposition.

Mr. Chairman, the employment of detectives or spies, as some choose to term them, is as obnoxious to me as to any one on this floor; but there are certain kinds of public service where the employment of such instruments is absolutely necessary in order to enforce the law. For instance, in ferreting out counterfeiters it is absolutely essential, in order to protect the soundness of the currency, that the Government should avail itself of the use of a detective force and informers. And, sir, in the enforcement of the internal-revenue laws, in the collection of the taxes on distilled spirits and on manufactured tobacco, the employment of a detective force by the Government is just as necessary as in the protection of the currency from counterfeiting.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can not yield, because I have but a minute or two left.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I was about to ask whether there is not already an appropriation in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for this purpose?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, sir; this is an entirely different service from any provided in that bill.

Mr. Chairman, there is another mistake into which gentlemen have fallen. I have no doubt that the abuses which have been referred to by the gentleman from West Virginia and others have existed; but who have been guilty of these abuses? Was it any of the force intended to be employed under this provision? Were those abuses practiced by any officer of the internal-revenue service? No, sir. It is an entirely different service to which they refer. Those abuses were practiced by the commissioners of the Federal courts and the deputy marshals.

The communication which I have had read indicates the great importance of this service. During the last year there was collected in this branch of the service, as stated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, over $200,000, and nearly all of this sum was obtained through the agency of the force which this appropriation is intended to employ. What did this collection cost the Government? Only about $36,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not consider it economy to cut down an appropriation if it can not be done without crippling the service or impairing the efficient administration of the law. Such action would be false economy. If you strike down this provision of the bill, you to a large extent give license to those who are engaged in illicit distilling and who are practicing fraud in the manufacture of tobacco to plunder the Treasury at their will. Is there any justice in compelling the law-abiding manufacturers of distilled spirits to pay 90 cents a gallon upon every gallon which they manufacture, while others who distill illicitly are permitted to escape taxation altogether?

The object of this fund is to employ a force which may ferret out these frauds and bring the guilty parties to punishment. Instances are frequently occurring where distilleries are suspected of producing more than they account for, and it is necessary in all such cases to employ a force to watch and expose such attempted frauds upon the Treasury. In various other ways is this fund needed to enforce the honest collection of the revenue.

I wish to impress one thing on the House. Some gentlemen discuss this as an increase of this appropriation above that of the present year. This amendment does not increase it one dollar. Last year it was $50,000. I merely wish it restored to the sum provided in the present law. It was the same the year before last and for 1883 it was $65,000. It has been much more during previous years. I am convinced from what I have been informed of this service that if this sum of $50,000 is not appropriated it will be so seriously crippled that it will be useless, and it would be best to strike out any appropriation for it whatever.

Last year about $36,000 was expended for this purpose. The Commissioner insists that less than $50,000 will be insufficient. The object of my amendment is to appropriate an adequate sum to employ a sufficient force to faithfully and honestly execute the internal-revenue law and protect it from fraud. That is all I seek to do.

In conclusion, I reiterate, Mr. Chairman, if this item is not increased $25,000 it will be just as well to strike out the entire item and adopt the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID].

Mr. BAYNE. How much does the Commissioner want?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. FELTON. How much did he lose last year?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He expended $36,000 in the current year. And he says he will need the full $50,000 for the next year.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have only five minutes of time in all.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Does not the gentleman know the fees paid to the United States marshals are sufficient to hunt down these offenders without hiring perjurers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not yield. Sir, every man who engages in the manufacture of tobacco or distillation of spirits should be compelled to pay the tax provided by law. If Congress fails to provide a sufficient force for this purpose frauds will be inevitable and the injustice to the Treasury and those who honestly pay their taxes will follow.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. There is one minute of the time remaining belonging to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to use that minute, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] who first spoke, in which he said some persons had pledged themselves after the election of a Democratic President to see that the internal-revenue laws would not be executed. I wish to assure him without regard to his statement that the laws are being executed, and to that end I desire to insert at the close of my remarks a letter addressed to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], which shows those in control of the internal-revenue system of the country have collected this year up to the end of this month $120,600,000, or more than $5,000,000 in excess of the estimate of the Secretary in his report. That clearly shows the Department is doing its duty in the execution of the law and in the collection of the internal revenue due the Government.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, June 24, 1886.

SIR: Your letter of the 18th instant, asking for the estimated receipts from fermented liquors and the aggregate receipts from all sources during the next fiscal year, was received this day.

In reply, I have the honor to state that during the first eleven months of the current fiscal year there has been an increase of 8 per cent. in the receipts from fermented liquors over the receipts from this source during the corresponding period of the last fiscal year. Should this rate of increase continue during the next fiscal year, which now does not seem improbable, the receipts from fermented liquors, including the special taxes of brewers and dealers in malt liquors, would amount to $21,250,000.

The estimated receipts from all sources under existing laws for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, would then be as follows:

Distilled spirits	$69,200,000
Tobacco	30,000,000
Fermented liquors	21,250,000
Penalties, bank circulation not national, and back taxes under repealed laws, say	150,000
Total	120,600,000

Respectfully,

JOS. S. MILLER, Commissioner.

Hon. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. The time to which debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto was limited is now exhausted. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] to strike out "$25,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$50,000."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were ayes 10.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman insist on a further count?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do. I want to know how many in the House are in favor of reform.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 102.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question next recurred on the motion of Mr. REID, of North Carolina, to strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 61.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I do not make that point, and I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not make it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope gentlemen will not filibuster.

Mr. HOLMAN. As there will be a vote necessarily on this proposition in the House, I withdraw my point of order of no quorum.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move the following additional paragraph:

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to sell at public auction in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., to the highest bidder, after thirty days' notice in four of the principal newspapers in the city of Philadelphia, in one or more lots, the land premises known as the old court-house and post-office in said city, lying upon Chestnut street and extending back to Library street and between Fourth and Fifth streets, and adjoining the present custom-house in said city; the time and place of said sale in said city to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury at a date not later than ninety days after the passage of this act, and at a price at not less than $300,000, with power to reject any and all bids and readvertise and offer the said property in like manner as often as may be necessary to secure the value thereof, and the cost to be paid from the proceeds of sale. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to cause inquiry to be made as to the value of this property, and if it shall appear that the price above-named is inadequate, he is authorized and directed to appoint a board of three persons in the employ of the United States to assess the value of said property and report the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, when the sum fixed by this board shall be the minimum price at which the property may be thus sold.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the point of order on that proposition, but will reserve it until the gentleman from Pennsylvania can be heard.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would state to the committee that this is word for word similar to the paragraph in the present sundry civil appropriation bill running up to the close of the present fiscal year. Upon correspondence with the Secretary of the Treasury on this subject he telegraphs me as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 17, 1886.

SIR: In reply to your telegram of the 16th instant, asking if I consider that I have exhausted all my authority under the act of March 3, 1885 (Statutes at Large, volume 23, page 48), providing for the sale of the old court-house and post-office property in Philadelphia, Pa., I have the honor to state that as the price bid for this property when offered at public auction did not reach the minimum value fixed by the act it was necessarily withdrawn from sale, and while my authority to readvertise the same has not been exhausted, yet in my judgment, after full consideration of all the circumstances, I did not deem it wise to do so until Congress had legislated further in the matter relative to the minimum price at which the property might be sold.

Respectfully, yours,

D. MANNING, Secretary.

Hon. HENRY H. BINGHAM,
House of Representatives.

It is simply a re-enactment of the existing paragraph in the present sundry civil bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana on the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is quite manifest, Mr. Chairman, that if this law is now in force—permanent law—this legislation of course is unimportant. If there is no change whatever, there seems to be no reason for the re-enactment of this provision. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania states that the language is identical with the present law, it can not be said that it is a change of existing law; but it is new legislation to a certain extent.

Mr. RANDALL. I think a brief explanation will show the gentleman that that position is not correct.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is a work already in progress.

Mr. RANDALL. No; not exactly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the minimum left as it was?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir; just the same.

Mr. RANDALL. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that I think the law is still operative; but the Treasury Department considered that they, having advertised and attempted to sell this property with the proviso that it should bring at least $300,000, and not being able to sell it at that price, have exhausted their power under that act.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the Secretary's position exactly.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the Secretary's position; but I do not think it is a correct position.

I do not know, however, that the Government wants that building. I was instrumental in putting it into the last act, and do not see why the Government should not realize this $300,000 if it can, for if this property is not sold you will probably have another public building there hereafter. The subtreasurer is already seeking to secure that building, but I do not think he ought to have it, for the reason that we have, a few squares above, in the post-office building, erected at a cost of many millions of dollars all the rooms that are necessary for every United States official in that city, the subtreasurer included.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that upon an inspection of this proposition it seems to the Chair to be permanent law. There is nothing in it requiring that the Secretary shall advertise but one time, but that he shall advertise and sell under certain conditions; and the Chair is at a loss to know why this is not permanent, and why he can not advertise a hundred times if necessary. Certainly it is true that if he has exhausted his power under the original act then this is asking for new legislation.

The Chair thinks therefore that this may properly be considered as nothing but a re-enactment of an old law.

Mr. RANDALL. That is what it is.

Mr. HOLMAN. But that, however, is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not new if it is putting in a provision here which is now law.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it is a new legislative act. However, I shall not——

The CHAIRMAN. The language of the rule is "change existing law." If this is identical with the existing law it is not a violation of the rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not raising any objection to the position taken by the Chair.

When this provision was incorporated into the bill of last year I thought that in all likelihood it would be found to be a hasty act. Our experience in the past has always led to the conclusion that in great cities our transactions in real estate have been somewhat unfortunate, as we have uniformly sold at a low price and in a short time thereafter we have found it necessary to purchase at a much enhanced price. I do not complain that the cities desire to get rid of this kind of Government property. It is not subject to taxation, and it is natural that cities like Philadelphia and New York and other large commercial cities should have a desire, as has been exhibited in the last few years, to have all of the property within their limits liable to taxation. But my experience is that after these sales are made it generally becomes necessary within a few years to purchase other property and always at a largely increased price.

Mr. RANDALL. This is wholly an exception, as established by the fact that the price which the committee fixed last year was $50,000 above what the Treasury Department thought it ought to be sold for, $250,000 being the limit. But this is further exemplified by the fact that though it was put up at this limit it had to be withdrawn, there being no bidder at that price, so the Government is not likely to sacrifice any money in this transaction.

Mr. BINGHAM. The further fact may be added that if we get $300,000 for this property it will be a larger sum than the ground and the buildings originally cost.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BINGHAM it was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Freight on bullion and coin: For freight on bullion and coin between the mints and assay offices, $7,500.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying something in reply to my friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. I advise that gentleman when he undertakes to read anything to put on a good pair of spectacles. Undertaking just now to quote from an official report, he stated that he found in West Virginia there had been no adverse decision against the United States. Now, on page 134 of the very report from which he professed to be reading it appears that the number of suits pending in West Virginia July 1, 1884, was 326; and that the suits commenced during the fiscal year of 1884–'85 were 113. Judgments and costs paid, 22; judgments and costs not paid, 57. There were 22 judgments for the Government. As to the other 57, they appear to be—it is not stated—confessed judgments. On page 136 it appears that the number of suits decided adversely against the United States for the year 1884 was 27. And yet the gentleman stated, with the book in his hand, there was not a single case decided against the United States in West Virginia.

When I further called the attention of the gentleman to the fact that these suits, worthless suits, were not tried, but were generally dismissed, he said the record showed no dismissals. On the same page it appears that the suits dismissed, abandoned, consolidated, &c., numbered 101.

I will state now in the presence of the district attorney, who was there at one term of the court, 990 indictments were found, and the district judge, by the advice of the district attorney, dismissed 770 of them without trial.

As the gentleman has referred to West Virginia, let me call attention to another fact. Going to page 139, where a statement is given of seizures for violation of internal-revenue laws, under the heading of "Distilled spirits, tobacco, and cigars," not one gallon of illegal whisky was found in the State of West Virginia, not one illegal cigar, not one plug of illegal tobacco was found there and seized by the officers. I have stated this to put myself right and to show we were not so bad as we were represented to be.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think I stated that the number of suits in West Virginia decided adversely to the United States was 27. It is true a great many cases were discontinued there. I do not know why they were discontinued. It was possible they were in pursuance of the pledge alluded to by my friend from Ohio.

I now call attention to the result on the other side. The fines in that State amounted in one year to $6,310 and the costs to $5,953.75.

What I was after was to show that the proportion of the whole number of suits to the convictions was very large, and I do not know what the result might have been if the balance of the cases had been tried. It was a little remarkable that they were discontinued.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. SYMES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk commenced to read the amendment sent up by Mr. SYMES.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Before we pass from the paragraph appropriating for the contingent expenses of the independent treasury I would like to move to strike that out.

Mr. SYMES. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado had been recognized, and proposes an amendment to the paragraph following that to which the gentleman from Kentucky refers. The next paragraph had been read.

Mr. RANDALL. We will not take any advantage of the gentleman from Kentucky on that account.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I wish to ascertain what is the use of this independent treasury. As I understand, its use is nearly obsolete. The present Treasurer of the United States positively refuses to permit his accounts to be so altered by the clerks who are somewhat conspicuously designated as the independent treasury as to bring them into harmony with theirs. I believe the present Register of the Treasury does not allow his books to be so altered as to balance with theirs.

Mr. RANDALL. I will state the usage. If the gentleman from Kentucky will examine the Book of Estimates he will find on page 326 a statement of expenditures from the appropriation for contingent expenses of the independent treasury for the fiscal year 1885. That statement shows that about $55,000 of this money went to the Adams Express Company for the transportation and insurance against loss of the public moneys of the United States, bonds, &c. There is a controversy as to the propriety of that expenditure and whether we shall assume the risks of the mails in the transportation of these securities.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think I did not make myself understood by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. In examining the Book of Estimates I saw what the money was expended for last year, and I judged from the examination of the report that it was meant to be expended for the same purposes substantially this year.

Now the point I want to make is this: I offer the amendment not so much for the purpose of pressing it as for the purpose of calling attention to the existence, as far as I can ascertain, of a wholly unnecessary department of the Treasury, which is simply a fifth wheel. It formerly had considerable power, which power was exercised for the purpose of altering the books of other bureaus of the Treasury, and that power was resisted, and successfully resisted, by the present officers of the Treasury.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the gentleman is mistaken. This applies to the transportation of securities of the Government between the subtreasuries, coin as well as various securities.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But under the supervision of that particular department which is called the independent treasury.

Mr. RANDALL. That is, the subtreasuries.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman explain what it is that is technically the independent treasury?

Mr. RANDALL. I take it it is the subtreasuries.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. I take the floor in opposition to the amendment, and yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is a matter of information I desire. I am ignorant about it. There is an office of Treasurer of the United States, and the subtreasuries are presided over by officers called assistant treasurers of the United States.

Some years ago, I do not know exactly when but some years ago, an independent bureau was established called the independent treasury, which was meant to be a check upon the Register of the Treasury, upon the Treasurer of the United States, and upon other officers. That department called the independent treasury (now represented by some clerks, I do not know how many) undertook to be the balance-sheet maker of the Treasury Department, and did on some occasions, as I understand, require the Register of the Treasury, who is in point of law and ought to be in point of fact the general balancer of the Treasury accounts, to have his accounts altered so as to tally with the accounts of the independent treasury. When the present Treasurer came into office——

Mr. RANDALL. I will read to the gentleman the section of the Revised Statutes that controls this paragraph, and I can give him, if he desires, every detail in connection with it——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. You refer to section 3653.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. With which I am familiar. I do not object to the expenditures. What I want to know is why these expenditures should be put under the head of "independent treasury," and why that bureau should be kept in existence?

Mr. RANDALL. All the subtreasuries are called independent treasuries.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. They report directly to the Treasurer?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; for instance, the assistant treasurer at Baltimore, at Boston, at Chicago, at Cincinnati, at New York, at Philadelphia, at San Francisco, at Saint Louis, and I might add at Louisville, since we have provided for a subtreasury there.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I hope you may add at Louisville.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman desires, I will have read the section of the Revised Statutes to which I have referred, or if he desires I will tell him exactly how this money is expended.

The question has arisen whether the Government should be its own insurer in transporting money, or whether it should continue to use Adams Express Company as a means of transportation as well as of insurance against loss. The Government has never lost, I think, more than $117 in course of transportation by the mails; and I, among others, thought that this $70,000, or at least $55,000 of it, might be saved; but the Treasurer of the United States, because he gives a bond for the protection of the Government, and unless we will agree by law to release him from responsibility for loss and from the danger which might arise to his securities, will not consent. If we are willing to take the risk of the mails for the transportation of the gold coin, large quantities of which have been within a recent period shipped from San Francisco to New York—if Congress will insert here a provision releasing the Treasurer from responsibility for loss in transportation, then we can strike out this provision; but the committee had no power to inaugurate that legislation. I wish to have inserted in the RECORD an amendment which the Treasurer of the United States sent to me, with the view of having it put into the bill for the purpose of releasing him from liability in case we determined to use the mails for carrying the Government money. I ask that it be printed for information.

The amendment was read, as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to direct the use of the registered mails of the United States in the transportation of the funds of the Government to and from the Treasury of the United States, the various subtreasuries, and United States depositories. And the Postmaster-General and the Secretary of the Treasury are directed to make such further regulations as will, in their judgment, tend to add to the protection and safety of such funds in their receipt, transportation, and delivery.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I confess that I agree with the view of the Treasurer of the United States. I would rather pay the $70,000 for transportation and insurance. I do not object to this expenditure, but it seems to me that this was a good place to call the attention of the House to the question of the use of this bureau called the "independent treasury."

Mr. HOLMAN. Supposing you abolish what is technically called the independent treasury, what expenditure do you strike out?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I would give this fund to the Treasurer of the United States, to be used by him.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is practically the result now.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is the practical result, but it is the untechnical result.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I take the floor for the purpose of calling the attention of the House, and of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] especially, to the fact that in the first paragraph relating to "miscellaneous objects," under the head of the Treasury Department, the committee has abolished the counters of the paper which is used for printing the internal-revenue stamps. Those counters were regarded as a very important means of preventing fraud by counterfeiting. Every sheet of prepared paper upon which the internal-revenue stamps are printed is counted for the purpose of seeing——

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, we have passed from that paragraph.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I know, but I am speaking to my amendment. I say that heretofore the Treasury Department has stationed at the place where this paper is manufactured counters to count and certify to the Department the number of sheets manufactured, so as to prevent counterfeiters from getting hold of the particular paper which is used for this purpose. They were one of the guards necessary for protecting the internal-revenue system.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but we have passed from the consideration of that point.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman will find in a moment that we have not passed the point to which I am addressing myself. On page 28 of this bill the committee has left in two counters, who count the paper on which the currency or the securities of the Government are printed; in that respect they admit the wisdom of having counters: but they are perfectly willing to throw down the barrier which protects the internal-revenue stamp from counterfeiting.

Now, this is in line with the purpose I have seen manifested more clearly to-day than ever before. I had supposed, Mr. Chairman, that the first attack upon the internal-revenue system would come from the Committee on Ways and Means, which is specially charged with the consideration of that subject. But it seems that those who intend to break down or destroy the internal-revenue system have resorted to furtive means, and by indirection through the withholding of appropriations they propose to destroy that system. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] a few moments ago declaimed against that system; but he has never brought in either on his own behalf or from his committee a proposition to abolish the system.

Mr. MILLS. I am not in favor of abolishing it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It seems that these gentleman have come forward to strike hands with the enemies of the internal-revenue system, to strike down that system by taking away from officers of the Government the means of preventing frauds upon the internal revenue.

Mr. CABELL. A means of perpetrating fraud.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Those who are engaged in the illicit distillation of spirits and the improper manufacture of tobacco will be left free to plunder the public revenue. What will be the result? The people will say, "If you do not enforce the internal-revenue law, let it be repealed." A voice will come from all over the land demanding that this system be abolished.

I congratulate those gentlemen who are opposed to the internal-revenue law upon the long step which they have taken to-day in the direction of perpetuating high taxes by means of customs duties and the demolition of internal-revenue taxes. This is all I desire to say.

Mr. RANDALL. There need be no misapprehension about this. We did make a reduction approaching $20,000; and I will state why. There was a duplication of the counting. It had been the practice to send fifty employés to the mill where the paper is manufactured. This the Department, or some officials connected with the administration of this matter, told us was unnecessary. Therefore we made provision for having at the mill merely a superintendent with a sufficient number of messengers and watchmen. Heretofore the very same counting done at the mill has been duplicated at the Treasury Department. The final counting as to the number of sheets and the character of the paper is done at the Department. This we have provided for.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think the gentleman will see that he is mistaken. The employment of counters at the manufactory is for the purpose of preventing the manufacture of more paper than is used for the printing of revenue-stamps.

Mr. RANDALL. We have provided for a superintendent, messengers, and watchmen to be employed at the mill. The gentleman is striving to get into this bill an appropriation for fifty counters at the mill—an expenditure which the Treasury officials told us was not essential; therefore we propose to avoid that expense.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Who told you that this force of counters at the mill was unnecessary? The Secretary of the Treasury tells you it is needed.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will read the report of the committee he will see the sources of our information.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman will read the estimates of the Department he will find that the counters proposed by my amendment are estimated for.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, yes; and if we had followed in this bill the estimates of the Departments the bill would have aggregated $33,000,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am satisfied the gentleman is entirely mistaken. If he really understood the necessity for these counters in protecting the Government from frauds he would not take the position that he does.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no paragraph in this bill which has been more thoroughly examined than this one.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I see the gentleman is mistaken after "thorough examination;" for I tell him that the counters at the manufactory are placed there for the purpose of preventing the manufacture of more of this character of paper than the Government uses. This is an important safeguard for the prevention of counterfeiting.

Mr. RANDALL. The counters have nothing to do with the mill. They merely count the paper after it comes to the Department. The superintendent, messengers, and watchmen at the mill are all that are required; and provision is made for them in the bill. They will see that no more paper is manufactured than is lawfully to be used.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The force of which the gentleman speaks only watch the paper as it comes out from the roll and hand it over to the counters. It is the counters at the mill who count the sheets and destroy all the surplus.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, we have cut off this much expense because it was believed to be unnecessary.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will state that the only person I ever knew who asked for the appointment of a counter came from a State other than Illinois.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the pro forma amendment will be regarded as withdrawn.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to say a word or two in reply to some remarks that fell from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] a few moments ago.

Mr. SYMES. I have the floor.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask the pending amendment be read.

Mr. SYMES. I offer the following amendment:

Amend lines 656 and 657 by striking out "seventy-five hundred" and inserting "fifteen thousand;" and also by adding at the end of line 657, "Provided, That no charge or deduction shall be made for transportation to coinage mints against or collected from any person who deposits bullion in any mint or assay office to be coined or sold under the provisions of sections 3519, 3544, and 3545, Revised Statutes."

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order against that amendment, but will reserve it until the gentleman can be heard.

Mr. SYMES. I move to increase this fund for transporting gold bullion from one assay office or mint to another in the United States from $7,500 to $15,000, because it has been $15,000 or over every session since the Forty-fifth Congress. The Forty-eighth Congress appropriated at its first and second sessions the sum of $15,000 for this purpose. The Forty-seventh Congress at its first session appropriated $30,000. The Forty-sixth Congress at its second session appropriated for this purpose the sum of $30,000; showing, sir, at least $15,000 must be necessary, and the estimate for the present year from the Treasury Department is $15,000 for this purpose.

One word as to the proviso and one word as to why it does not change existing law and is not subject to the point of order. The Treasury Department in July, 1885, made an order by which, when a person takes gold bullion to the mint at Denver and there deposits or sells it to the Government for the purpose of coinage, the Director of the Mint not only keeps one-fifth of 1 per cent. as seigniorage or coinage charge, which is proper, not only keeps out certain charges for assaying, refining, and determining how many gold dollars of 28.1 grains there are in the gold bullion, but he is also required, when he pays for bullion to the owner, to keep back $2 a thousand for transporting it to the Philadelphia mint for coinage.

This is in plain violation of the sections of the statutes I will refer to, and it is in violation of this appropriation the Clerk has just read. This appropriation, to which I have moved an increase in amount, provides this special fund for transporting gold bullion from one assay office or mint in the United States to another.

Now, sir, Mr. Folger, Secretary of the Treasury in 1882, examined this rule, and found it was in violation of the statute to make any such charge, and no such charge was made. And after that no such charge was made for two and a half years until July, 1885, the present Director of the Mint, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, reinstated that charge by an order which he issued.

Now, sir, what is the law? Section 3519 of the Revised Statutes provides——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. RYAN. I will take the floor, and yield my time to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SYMES. Section 3519 provides that when any owner of gold bullion takes it for the purpose of having it coined the superintendent of the mint is required to receive it and keep out one-fifth of 1 per cent. as seignorage charge for coining and charge for refining, assaying, and determining its value, and then he is required to pay the owner for that gold bullion the number of gold dollars it would make when struck into coins at some coinage mint.

Section 3544 provides that such coin or refined bars shall be delivered to the owner of gold bullion as he may desire.

Section 3145 requires the Secretary of the Treasury to keep on deposit at these different mint and assay offices of the United States a fund for the purpose of enabling the superintendents of the different mints to pay for all gold bullion offered for coinage or sale. These sections simply provide for the free coinage of gold.

Section 3545 expressly provides that after this gold bullion shall be refined, after its value shall be determined, and after it shall be paid for, as I have said, it shall become the property of the United States. Notwithstanding this, that it becomes the property of the United States, the superintendent of the mint at Denver says to the owner of the bullion, after keeping out one-fifth of 1 per cent. as seignorage charge, I will keep back from the value of that bullion $2 a thousand to pay the expense of transporting it to the Philadelphia mint.

Sir, it is a clear violation of the statutes, and the Secretary of the Treasury, the Director of the Mint, and their solicitor have not dared by a written opinion to defend their action when they were communicated with upon the subject. When I asked for the opinion of the Solicitor of the Treasury on the legality of this charge I was answered that it was not in writing. Mr. Secretary Folger found it to be an illegal practice and abolished it. It is for that reason, sir, I offer the proviso, which does nothing more, I desire to say to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, than to construe or attempt to construe the law. One Secretary of the Treasury justifies such a charge upon the owners of bullion, but another does not. Which is right? What is the law? There is a discrepancy between them. What is the proper construction?

Now, sir, a word more. I understand we make these appropriations for the purpose of enabling the owners of gold bullion in the mining regions to come to the mints with their bullion and obtain the same price for it as at any coinage mint. That is what the statute states in effect.

I understand that this appropriation is for the purpose of transporting that bullion for coinage after the Government shall have bought it for coinage and appropriated it to the use of the Government.

Then I ask my friend the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations under what rule or construction of the statutes will he make an appropriation for the transfer of this bullion from one mint or assay office in the United States to another, and then at the same time take from the owner of the bullion, if he happens to be at some other point than Philadelphia or San Francisco, $2 per $1,000.

Sir, the Secretary of the Treasury, or his solicitor, will not defend that system to-day, although they still refuse to revoke the order which allows this injustice.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make a point of order against the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANDALL. The proviso is for the purpose of enforcing a construction of the law different from what the Treasury Department now applies to it, and it is in effect a change of law. When the disposition of the point of order shall have been made I will then touch the other part of the gentleman's amendment where he proposes to increase this appropriation from $7,500 to $15,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SYMES. Does the gentleman think as a lawyer——

Mr. RANDALL. I am not a lawyer, and never claimed to be one, although I have great respect for the profession.

Mr. SYMES. Well, I will do the gentleman the credit to say that upon the construction of these sections of the statutes, upon which he has dwelt for so many long years as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, he would be much more likely to construe them correctly and I would rather have his opinion upon them than I would the opinion of many lawyers. I ask if he is not making an appropriation for the very purpose for which they are making this charge in the Department under the ruling to which I have referred, and if to that extent he does not defend it?

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing before the committee.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Secretary Folger abolished it or that construction of it——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Now I ask a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. SYMES. Has the point of order been sustained?

Mr. RANDALL. As to the proviso it has been.

Now, as to the amendment providing for the increase, I wish to state that the original estimate was $15,000, but Mr. Preston, the deputy director, appeared before the subcommittee and stated that $7,500 was sufficient.

Mr. SYMES. Of course it is sufficient, for you propose to make a man pay, after the statute says the bullion becomes the property of the United States, for carrying it around where the Government may happen to want it.

Mr. RANDALL. The Government has made a rule that they will refine the silver——

Mr. SYMES. I am not talking about silver now, but gold.

Mr. RANDALL. I should have said gold. We are not discussing different subjects. I say they have made a rule with reference to the delivery of the gold, and they will not pay for it except as it is delivered to the mint where it is coined. That is the whole sum and substance of the matter in a nutshell.

Mr. SYMES. I beg the gentleman's pardon. This has continued all the time with the exceptions to which I have referred. A gentleman goes to the mint at Denver, for instance, and delivers his gold bullion in bars at that mint. He is given a check upon the depository——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is nothing before the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me state to the gentleman from Colorado that when bullion is delivered at the mints in that manner it is to be paid for where it is coined, whether it be Philadelphia or San Francisco.

Mr. SYMES. But mark you, when a man takes such bullion to the New York assay office he does not pay anything for carrying it to Philadelphia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the next section of the bill.

Mr. SYMES. My amendment has not been voted upon.

Mr. FELTON. I would like to ask a question before the vote is taken.

Mr. SYMES. Has the amendment been ruled out on the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. The proviso has been, but the first part is not subject to the point of order. I did not make the point of order upon that.

The question being taken upon the amendment of Mr. SYMES, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Distinctive paper for United States securities: For paper, including transportation, salaries of register, two counters, five watchmen, one laborer, and expenses of officer detailed from the Treasury as superintendent, $12,000.

Mr. CANNON. I call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to the necessity of an increase in this paragraph on account of the provision which has been made for the printing of notes of small denominations.

Mr. RANDALL. I will have an amendment prepared to meet that in every particular. I ask that the paragraph be passed over for the present, and I will have a statement from the Engraving and Printing Bureau on which to base an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over for the present.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Transportation of minor coin: For the transportation of minor coin, $5,000.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the paragraph the following:
"Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall no longer be required to redeem in other money subsidiary silver coin."

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order, yielding for a moment to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. A considerable part of the cost of transporting the silver coin is in transporting the subsidiary silver. Now, this coin, as all know, makes its way through the channels of trade to the money centers, and then, instead of being sent back through the same channels through which it came as it ought to be, it is there turned over to the Treasury or some assistant treasury, and paper is taken out for it.

Mr. FELTON. And why ought it not?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It should circulate as other money does. It should go back through the same channels of trade by which it comes. This amendment, I admit, is subject to the point of order; but I hope the point of order will not be made, as this is recommended by the Treasury Department and it is important. There is a scarcity of subsidiary silver in the country for the reason I have given.

Mr. FELTON. The instant you passed your proposition you would put the subsidiary coin at 10 to 15 per cent. discount.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. No, sir.

Mr. FELTON. We have had eight years' experience of that, and I know that to be a fact.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is legal tender for $20 now.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Storage of silver, transportation: For transportation of silver coin between subtreasury offices, $50,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 692 the following:
"Mint at Philadelphia: For the removal of the steam-power plant to the northwest corner of the mint property, locating the boiler-room outside of the walls of the main building, for underpinning new walls, girders, brick work, new boilers, engine, steam-pipes, and shafting, $54,639.20; and for construction of vault for the storage of silver dollars out of the present boiler-room, $60,000; in all, $114,639.20; to be expended under the immediate supervision of the superintendent of the mint at Philadelphia, on contracts subject to the approval of the Director of the Mint.

Mr. RANDALL. There is a necessity for vault room for the storage of the silver dollars. The original estimate of the Department proposed $106,000 to construct a vault in the area within the Treasury building here at Washington, which it was estimated would hold one hundred millions of silver dollars. At the same time there was an estimate providing for $54,000 for a new placement of the boilers and engine at Philadelphia. An examination showed that this vault could be as well placed at the Philadelphia mint as at Washington. First, because it would save a large sum of money, the difference between $60,000 and $106,000, and it would also save the transportation, at $1 per thousand each year on the coinage at the Philadelphia mint of the Bland dollar, which would be necessarily brought from that mint to the Washington vault. So that with $114,000 we can provide for this change of location which is necessary at the Philadelphia mint as against the proposition to extend that building to the street west, which would involve a very large expenditure of money, the purchase of the lot alone being a half a million I think; and we save what would be a cost to the Government of $21,000 a year for transporting the coinage from Philadelphia. That cost might just as well be saved and the silver dollar go directly into the vaults at that point, where they are coined.

I shall ask that the recommendation of the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the estimates, be inserted in the RECORD, so that the nature of the proposition may be fully understood.

The following is the communication referred to:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 12, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of the letter of the Director of the Mint of this date, and its inclosures, in relation to an appropriation for the purpose of changing the boiler plant of the United States mint building at Philadelphia, Pa., and submitting an estimate therefor in the sum of $54,639.20.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Acting Secretary.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF THE MINT,
Washington, D. C., June 12, 1886.

SIR: Under the urgent necessity of bringing the inclosed matter before the attention of the Appropriation Committee of the House of Representatives, I have to suggest that the inclosed communication be transmitted to the chairman of that committee, this being a letter from the superintendent of the mint at Philadelphia, recommending changes in the boiler plant of that institution, and, incidental thereto, the provision of vault space for the safe custody and storage of coin.

In my report for the fiscal year 1885, pages 32, 33, I stated the urgent requirement of such provision, and therefore recommend that an estimate corresponding to the amount named by the superintendent as necessary to carry out his specifications be inserted in the appropriation bill now before Congress.

Very respectfully,

JAMES P. KIMBALL,
Director of the Mint.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

SUPERINTENDENT'S OFFICE, MINT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Philadelphia, Pa., June 11, 1886.

SIR: In reference to the subject of placing the boilers on the outside of the building, in obedience to your instructions I have had a plan prepared of the rear of this building, and the arrangements suggested for the same, which I herewith forward. I placed the matter in the immediate charge of Mr. Samuel James, foreman of the machinists' department, and after frequent consultations with him and the chief engineer I have come to the conclusion that it is a feasible and judicious arrangement worthy of consideration.

A copy of Mr. James's report in detail under current date addressed to me is herewith inclosed.

I deem it most judicious to have a brief sketch made, as I assume that whatever is to be done must undergo the consideration and supervision of the Supervising Architect, or whoever may be detailed by him to superintend the work, and therefore felt that I was scarcely justified in procuring plans from professional men for which they, in all probability, would make pretty high charges. The plan proposed would involve the procuring of new boilers of modern and improved form. I am assured it would make a vast difference in the quantity of fuel consumed in generating steam, and that greatly to an advantage. Besides this, work could go on without disturbing the present engine and boilers until the new machinery would be ready to go into operation. Thus the current work could continue without interruption.

The present engine has been in operation for many years. It is well worn and deficient in many respects. The boilers are in the heart of the building, and the heat there engendered makes it at times almost insupportable to the employés. This would be materially avoided by placing the heating apparatus on the outside and add greatly to the general convenience.

Again, when the new engine and boilers were in position and ready to start in operation the old engine and boilers would be superseded and removed, and the space hitherto covered thereby would be, of all places, the best for the location of the vaults for the storage of coin. They would be in the center instead of the border line of the mint building, a desideratum worthy of much consideration. It would afford space for vaults of capacity and number such as would furnish storage for many years to come. The idea of having to store silver in places outside the building has always been repugnant to me, but in view of the exigency I could do no better. As the department of the Supervising Architect has detailed plans of the mint building, they will doubtless understand the plan of Mr. James at a glance, aided as it is with the written statement. The disadvantages of the present and the advantages of the suggested conditions will be perfectly apparent.

I respectfully submit the plan, statement, and estimate for your consideration.

Very respectfully,

DAN'L M. FOX, Superintendent.

Hon. JAMES P. KIMBALL,
Director of the Mint, Washington, D. C.

MINT OF THE UNITED STATES AT PHILADELPHIA,
June 10, 1886.

DEAR SIR: At your request I respectfully submit the accompanying plan, with approximate estimates on the same, for the removal of the steam-power plant to the northwest corner of the property, by locating the boiler-house without the walls of the main building, in a room underlaying the present pavement.

Fig. 1 is a plan of the basement, embracing that portion of the building north of the chimney S, and includes the proposed plan A of an excavation at the extreme northwestern end of the property for the reception of steam-boilers of a capacity of 400 horse-power; the proposed engine-room at B, and the duct leading from the boiler-house A to the chimney S, as shown by the red lines in the plan.

Fig. 2 is a vertical transverse section of A, Fig. 1, showing the walls C C, the Phœnix floor-beams D D, the ends of the box-girders E E, the supporting columns F F, with the necessary foundations for the same, G G, the stairway leading through the doorway H into the engine-room B, Fig. 1, and the windows I I opening from the north wall of the engine-room B above the surface line of the yard.

Fig. 3 is a vertical longitudinal section of A, Fig. 1, showing the walls C C, the box-girders E E, the ends of the Phœnix floor-beams D D, the brick arches J J, with the overlying pavement K, the supporting columns F F, and the side elevation of the stairway leading through the doorway H, Fig. 2, into the engine-room, as shown at B, Fig. 1. The openings L L, above the surface line of the yard, open into the rooms M and N, Fig. 1, now used by the medal department. The columns supporting the roof of the north porch are shown at O, Fig. 3.

The approximate cost for alterations and additions as per the foregoing is as follows:

For excavation	$7,450 00
Underpinning of main walls	12,900 00
New walls	8,050 00
Box girders	756 00
Phœnix floor-beams	1,286 00
Cast-iron columns	270 00
Hard brick and fire-brick	1,000 00
Bricklaying	1,280 00
Iron work	450 00
Skylights	630 00
Concrete pavement	600 00
Boilers, engine, steam-pipe, and shafting	15,000 00
Add 10 per cent. for incidentals	4,967 20
Total	54,639 20

Respectfully,

SAMUEL JAMES,
Foreman Machine Shop.

Hon. DANIEL M. FOX,
Superintendent.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BAYNE. The amendment unquestionably ought to be adopted. The only difficulty is if the provisions which have been inserted in this bill shall become a law it will require a great deal more money to provide storage for the silver dollar than this amendment provides.

Mr. RANDALL. I suppose this amendment will provide sufficient accommodation up to sixty or seventy millions.

Mr. BAYNE. But the amendments in this bill will withdraw from circulation one hundred millions of silver dollars, and you must provide a place for them as well.

Mr. RANDALL. There are only fifty-three millions in circulation.

Mr. BAYNE. Seventy millions.

Mr. RANDALL. The amount in circulation, I am informed, is fifty-three and a half millions.

Mr. BAYNE. My recollection is that it is seventy millions. But whether it be fifty-three or sixty or seventy millions, they will soon be withdrawn from circulation by these provisions becoming a part of the law; and therefore I see the propriety of providing abundant accommodation.

Mr. RANDALL. That has got to be voted on yet in the House.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] a question. While much that he says is true, yet if he will turn back to lines 665–674 he will find that we appropriate yearly from $75,000 to $100,000 to pay for the transportation of silver dollars out into the country. Now, the moment this bill passes that transportation ceases, and in that way we shall far more than save the cost of the silver notes.

Mr. BAYNE. It is true you stop the cost of that transportation, but you hoard the silver in the vaults of the Treasury.

Mr. SYMES. And it will not cost as much to build vaults to hold all the silver that can be coined in ten years as it does to maintain the Botanic Garden to give roses to members of Congress. [Laughter.]

The question being taken on Mr. RANDALL'S amendment, it was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recoinage of gold and silver coins: For recoinage of gold and silver coins in the Treasury, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $10,000.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph, which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 686, insert:
"Provided, That $3,000 thereof shall be expended for the recoinage, dollar for dollar, into standard silver dollars or into subsidiary coin of the United States, of trade-dollars which may be presented by the holders thereof at the various mints of the United States for a period of six months after the passage of this act."

Mr. RANDALL. I am in favor of that proposition, but it does not belong here. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. REAGAN, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the sundry civil bill (H. R. 9478), and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7183) to authorize the purchase of a certain tract of land near San Antonio, Tex., and to provide for the sale of old site of Fort Brady, Mich., and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 5) authorizing payment of C. H. Mann, messenger to the reporters' gallery.

LEAVE TO EXTEND.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to extend in the RECORD his remarks on the proposition to strike out the portion of the appropriation in the sundry civil bill for the collection of the internal revenue.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 28) to provide for the appointment and compensation of a district judge for the southern district of Alabama, with amendments, requested a conference on the bill and amendments, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HOAR, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. PUGH.

Also, that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of public lands, laws allowing entries for timber-culture, and laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes, requested a conference on the bill and amendments, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. DOLPH, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. COCKRELL.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 2932) to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John F. Miller; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 2463) for the relief of H. J. T. Moss;
An act (H. R. 16) granting a pension to Nancy L. Ribble;
An act (H. R. 426) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Robbins;
An act (H. R. 515) granting a pension to Althea A. Frasner;
An act (H. R. 567) granting a pension to Mary A. Little;
An act (H. R. 1184) granting a pension to Stephen Gardner;
An act (H. R. 1330) granting a pension to Martin Taylor;
An act (H. R. 2800) granting a pension to Mary Manes;
An act (H. R. 3193) granting a pension to Mrs. Edna Roberts;
An act (H. R. 3326) granting a pension to Thomas Simpson;
An act (H. R. 3366) granting a pension to Henry Bollman;
An act (H. R. 3645) granting a pension to Sarah Brooks;
An act (H. R. 3860) granting a pension to John H. Walters;
An act (H. R. 3982) granting a pension to John Pennington;
An act (H. R. 4462) granting a pension to Martha Downs;
An act (H. R. 4490) granting a pension to H. W. McDonald;
An act (H. R. 4631) granting a pension to Mary Merrill;
An act (H. R. 4882) granting a pension to Washington T. Otey;
An act (H. R. 5127) granting a pension to Mary A. Ripley;
An act (H. R. 5174) granting a pension to Mrs. M. A. Lewis;
An act (H. R. 5406) granting a pension to Philip Raigner;
An act (H. R. 5411) granting a pension to John Butler;
An act (H. R. 5645) granting a pension to Rebecca Allen;
An act (H. R. 5931) granting a pension to Erdmuthe Kirchner;
An act (H. R. 6126) granting a pension to Henry G. Ballinger;
An act (H. R. 6135) granting a pension to James W. Sanford;
An act (H. R. 6176) granting a pension to Margaret Mayham;
An act (H. R. 6248) granting a pension to Louis A. Wallenweber;
An act (H. R. 6323) granting a pension to Rebecca Reese McKee;
An act (H. R. 6331) granting a pension to George Anna Leippe;
An act (H. R. 6452) granting a pension to Samantha A. Smith;
An act (H. R. 6453) granting a pension to Martin J. Reynolds;
An act (H. R. 6519) granting a pension to John D. Krehbiel;
An act (H. R. 6193) granting a pension to Charles Foreman;

An act (H. R. 6247) granting a pension to Mayberry Vance;
An act (H. R. 6430) granting a pension to Lucy G. Dutcher;
An act (H. R. 6566) granting a pension to Henry I. Cartin;
An act (H. R. 6639) granting a pension to Catharine Kennedy;
An act (H. R. 6650) granting a pension to Samuel Robbins;
An act (H. R. 6655) granting a pension to Stokeley D. Dagley;
An act (H. R. 6668) granting a pension to Lurena Wages;
An act (H. R. 6670) granting a pension to Susan Malone;
An act (H. R. 6770) granting a pension to Ferdinand Koehler;
An act (H. R. 6776) granting a pension to Catharine Thenn;
An act (H. R. 6780) granting a pension to Henry B. Havens;
An act (H. R. 6801) granting a pension to Elander M. Mooneyhan;
An act (H. R. 6812) granting a pension to Margaret Lucas;
An act (H. R. 6919) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Williams;
An act (H. R. 7074) granting a pension to William P. Carleton;
An act (H. R. 7075) granting a pension to Orson W. Sears;
An act (H. R. 7329) granting a pension to Patrick McKean;
An act (H. R. 7407) granting a pension to Cyrus Dubbs;
An act (H. R. 7509) granting a pension to Cecelia C. McKenna;
An act (H. R. 7511) granting a pension to Margaret Lucy;
An act (H. R. 7617) granting a pension to Solomon J. Grissom;
An act (H. R. 7641) granting a pension to Sophronia Witham;
An act (H. R. 7660) granting a pension to James Stobaugh;
An act (H. R. 7688) granting a pension to Wilhelm Nolte;
An act (H. R. 7843) granting a pension to Edwin R. Parks;
An act (H. R. 8086) granting a pension to Cummins Porter;
An act (H. R. 8111) granting a pension to Rebecca Roberts;
An act (H. R. 1585) for the relief of Mrs. Margaret Colbath;
An act (H. R. 1592) for the relief of Sarah A. Vaughn;
An act (H. R. 1678) for the relief of Henry N. Huggins;
An act (H. R. 3906) for the relief of Catharine Johnson;
An act (H. R. 4976) for the relief of Tobias M. Coon;
An act (H. R. 6003) for the relief of John H. McClelland;
An act (H. R. 6183) for the relief of Bridget M. Cullen;
An act (H. R. 6237) for the relief of Samuel Shuler;
An act (H. R. 6795) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah Casteel;
An act (H. R. 7066) for the relief of Andrew J. Hillberg;
An act (H. R. 7118) for the relief of Bailey Hascall;
An act (H. R. 7253) for the relief of Joseph Guy;
An act (H. R. 7299) for the relief of Green Chambers;
An act (H. R. 7300) for the relief of Randolph Seaman;
An act (H. R. 7365) for the relief of Nancy Franklin;
An act (H. R. 7965) for the relief of Frances Mosher;
An act (H. R. 8078) for the relief of Lydia S. Johnson;
An act (H. R. 1576) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Allcock;
An act (H. R. 5961) granting an increase of pension to Cyrus Vigus;
An act (H. R. 6250) to increase the pension of Thomas A. Rowley;
An act (H. R. 7437) to increase the pension of Levi L. Tongue;
An act (H. R. 7914) to increase the pension of David M. Rennoe;
An act (H. R. 7156) to increase the pension of Maria A. Birney, widow of Maj. Gen. David B. Birney;
An act (H. R. 4689) for the relief of the children of the late Surgeon Alfred M. Owen, and to increase their pensions;
An act (H. R. 7249) to pension Spencer W. Tryson;
An act (H. R. 550) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Adam Gaston;
An act (H. R. 6797) to place the name of Samuel W. Bowling on the pension-roll; and An act (H. R. 6721) granting a pension to John H. Waterhouse, late of Company F, First Regiment Potomac Home Brigade (Thirteenth) Maryland Volunteers.

The following bill was approved June 25, 1886:

An act (H. R. 7809) for the relief of Edwin Stevens.

The message also announced that joint resolution of the following title, having been presented to the President June 12, 1886, and not returned by him to the House in which it originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, had became a law without his approval:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 112) for the relief of the estate of the late James E. Wintersmith, late Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., under the standing order for Friday evening sessions.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., the special order for the evening session being business from the Committees on Invalid Pensions and Pensions, and bills reported from the Committee on the Judiciary to remove political disabilities.

MRS. HANNAH BABB HUTCHINS.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to call up for the action of the House certain bills which have been returned from the Senate with amendments and are now on the Calendar, having been reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I ask first the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3463) granting a pension to Mrs. Hannah Babb Hutchins.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out "twelve" and insert "twenty-five."

Mr. MATSON. I move, on behalf of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, and ask a conference with that body.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDIE L. MACOMBER.

Mr. MATSON. The next bill on which I ask action by the House is the bill(H. R. 1462) granting a pension to Addie L. Macomber. In this case also I desire to move that the House non-concur and ask a conference.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out "twelve" and insert "twenty-five."

The motion of Mr. MATSON that the House non-concur and request a conference was agreed to.

ANN E. COONEY.

Mr. MATSON. I ask that the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4544) granting a pension to Ann E. Cooney be next taken up.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five."

Mr. MATSON. By direction of the Committee I move that the House non-concur and request a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment as conferees on the part of the House upon the three bills just acted on Mr. WINANS, Mr. TAULBEE, and Mr. HAYNES.

MANHATTAN PICKETT.

Mr. MATSON. On behalf of the Committee on Invalid Pensions I desire similar action upon the bill (H. R. 7165) to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out "thirty-six" and insert "fifty."

Mr. MATSON. I move that this amendment be non-concurrred in, and that a conference with the Senate be requested.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SWOPE, Mr. LOVERING, and Mr. MORRILL.

DANIEL H. ROSS.

Mr. MATSON. There are several House bills in which, on behalf of the committee, I desire to ask concurrence in the amendments of the Senate. I will call up first the bill (H. R. 525) granting a pension to Daniel H. Ross.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out section 2, in the following words:
"SEC. 2. This act shall take effect from and after its passage."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would like the gentleman to give some explanation of this amendment and the reason for asking concurrence.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, the general law expressly provides that all pensions shall begin from and after the passage of the act granting them, and hence this section is unnecessary.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Was the insertion of the section an error on the part of the House?

Mr. MATSON. It was an error, or perhaps an inadvertence, on the part of the House to leave this section in. It does no harm and no good. We recommend concurrence in the amendment of the Senate striking it out.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

AMANDA HOUSELL.

Mr. MATSON. I desire next to call up, in order that the amendment of the Senate may be concurred in, the bill (H. R. 3546) granting a pension to Amanda Housell.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out "together with her minor children."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman from Indiana state the point of this amendment?

Mr. MATSON. Perhaps the bill as amended had better be read, so that the House may understand the effect of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Amanda Housell (together with her minor children), widow of John M. Housell, late a private in Company K, First Regiment Maryland Infantry Volunteers.

The amendment was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business under the special order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before that is done I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. When the House adjourned last Friday night a division was being taken on the passage of a bill. I will inquire whether that does not now come up?

The SPEAKER. That is unfinished business in the class to which it belongs; that is, reports from the Committee of the Whole House. It will come up as the first thing in order immediately after the Committee of the Whole House rises this evening.

The motion of Mr. MATSON was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

WILLIAM J. OWINGS.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4097) for the relief of William J. Owings.

Mr. MATSON. I ask that this bill be informally passed over.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that bills be called to-night in the order in which they appear upon the Calendar; and unless some member rises to call for the reading of a bill after the title is read, that it be passed over informally not to lose its place upon the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

AMENDING THE REVISED STATUTES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4702) amending sections 4556 and 4557 of the Revised Statutes relating to pensions of certain disabled persons who have served in the naval and marine corps.

Mr. MORRILL. That goes over under the rule.

The bill was informally passed over.

EDWARD CORNING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1666) granting a pension to Edward Corning.

Mr. SWOPE. I ask that that bill be considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edward Corning, late a lieutenant in the Eighty-fifth New York Volunteers, and afterward commissioned captain and assistant quartermaster of volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

Mr. WALLACE. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) is as follows:

The engrossed Senate bill placed the name of Edward Corning on the pension-roll at the rate of $20 per month. The Senate printed bill, however, amended the engrossed bill by striking out the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month," placing him on the rolls subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

This committee, concurring in the Senate amendment, reported the bill back to the House, recommending its passage; but while under consideration by this committee, through some error, the engrossed Senate bill was changed by striking out the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month," and when under consideration in Committee of the Whole House, on account of said change in the original Senate engrossed bill, the bill was recommitted to this committee.

Therefore your committee, upon a reconsideration of the bill, report it back to the House with the following supplemental amendment: Restore to the engrossed Senate bill the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month," so the bill will read as originally engrossed, and recommend the passage of the bill.

[House report No. 2314, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1666) granting a pension to Edward Corning, having examined the same, concur in the Senate printed report hereunto attached. They recommend that the bill be amended by striking out "pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month," and that, as amended, the bill do pass.

"The claimant, Edward Corning, was mustered into the service of the United States as first lieutenant and regimental quartermaster of the Eighty-fifth Regiment of New York Volunteers, December, 1861; he accepted commission as captain and assistant quartermaster of volunteers October 16, 1862, and served until June 12, 1865.

"He applied for a pension, but it was rejected on the ground that 'no disability exists from causes alleged in claimant's declaration for pension.'

"The evidence shows that he was several times sick in the service, and certificates to the following effect are on file:

"'NEW YORK, July 1, 1862.

"'Lieut. Edward Corning is still confined to his bed from the effects of the fever which he contracted while on the Peninsula in Virginia, and in my judgment he will not be able to rejoin his regiment before the 1st of September.

"'The above statement I certify to as his attending physician.

"'F. L. HARRIS, M. D.'

"'NEW YORK, August 1, 1862.

"'I hereby certify that Lieut. Edward Corning is still confined to his room, and is unable most of the time to leave his bed from the weak and debilitated condition of his system.

"'F. L. HARRIS, M. D.'

"The reports of his condition and the evidence as to the incurrence of the disease in the service are very full and complete, and the only reason why the case was not allowed at the Pension Office seems to be that one board of surgeons refused to rate him as now disabled. It does not appear when such examination was made, but in view of the subsequent examinations it was evidently a gross injustice. November 26, 1884, a board of examining surgeons had claimant before them and they rate him at one and one-fourth of total. This, however, did not satisfy the Pension Office, and the applicant was sent before another board November 4, 1885, and they report that he was entitled to pension for 'total' disability.

"Your committee are of opinion that they may safely rely upon the conclusion reached by these two full boards of examining surgeons, and therefore report back the bill with a recommendation that it do pass."

Mr. SWOPE. It will be seen that the first part of that report is a mere explanation of a mistake in a former reference of the bill.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I understand there is an amendment recommended by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman that there was some doubt at the last meeting of the committee as to whether the amendment which appears on the bill had been intended by the committee. The report seems to indicate that the words stricken out when the bill was under consideration before should be reinserted in the bill; in other words, that it was not the intention of the committee to amend it.

Mr. MATSON. That is a mistake, Mr. Chairman. The proposition of the committee is to amend by striking out the words:

And pay him a pension at the rate of $20 a month.

And I ask a vote on the amendment.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I move that the committee non-concur in the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in regard to the amendment recommended by them. That, Mr. Chairman, would leave this bill precisely as it came from the Senate, and it seems to me that a simple reference to the report which has just been read and the concluding portion of it ought to have been enough to satisfy any candid man that this is a proper form in which the bill should finally pass.

It seems to me the Senate intended by the insertion of the words in the bill, as appears by the Senate report, to do this applicant an act of justice which he has not been able to secure at the Pension Office.

Now it seems, and I refer to the report in support of what I say, that he went before an examining board, who gave him no rating whatever. From this decision he appealed, and as the Senate committee properly say, it seems as if that first examination and the action of the examining board thereon must have been a great injustice to him, because upon appearing and securing another examination he was rated a total and a quarter. The Pension Office, not being exactly satisfied with this, ordered another examination, and he is now rated for total disability. Now, the Pension Office has refused steadily to give him his relief. His only resource then is to come to Congress. If you strike out this provision, which it is assumed would give him the relief to which he is entitled, you simply remit him to the Pension Office again where he has been endeavoring for years to secure this pension. You may as well reject the case altogether as to pass it with this amendment. I hope therefore the committee will agree to the bill as it comes from the Senate and not strike out this amendment. I do not think the Committee on Invalid Pensions ought to urge it.

Mr. SAWYER. As I understand the practice of granting pensions heretofore pevailing, both in the Committee on Invalid Pensions and in this House, it has been to place men upon the pension-roll subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws. That has been the rule that has prevailed in nine out of ten cases that have passed here. I can see no reason why this should be an exceptional case. Every bill that we pass granting pensions to soldiers assumes that the beneficiary is entitled to be placed upon the pension-roll. We also assume that the rating of the persons may vary from year to year, and we have not assumed heretofore to determine the rating of any pensioner but simply decide that he shall be placed upon the pension-roll and leave the medical examination and determination of the case to the Pension Bureau. I can see little difference in this case from others which have been passed heretofore, nor do I see any material reason for making this distinction.

Mr. MATSON. When a claimant asks the benefit of a special act he must take it with the same conditions given to others. It has been the policy and practice of Congress to grant special acts subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws as to the matter of rating; so that when a bill is passed the beneficiary is examined and given that rating to which he is entitled for his disability. It would be very unjust to the claimants perhaps in some instances to fix a rating, because in that event they would be bound by that rating, would have to stop there, and would have no chance for a rerevision under the rules of the office. A special pension places a party upon the pension-roll subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and he is there, as all other pensioners are, to be rated according to disability. The committee will, I am sure, insist upon the amendment, as it has always been the practice.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I do not dispute that the general rule has been as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and, as suggested, this perhaps ought not to be taken out of the general rule unless there is some reason for it. Now, I submit the very fact this applicant has failed to secure any relief after three examinations, two of which were in his favor, is a reason, a substantial and a sufficient reason, why this should be placed among the exceptional cases, and not under the general rule.

As I said before, it is manifest—and it is so stated by the committee—it is manifest justice has not been done to the claimant, and if you adopt this amendment you remit him right back to contend with the same difficulty he has had to contend with in the past. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee.

The question being taken, the chairman stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 20.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2095) granting an increase of pension to Mary B. Hook; which was read by its title.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I ask for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. As no one has asked for the consideration of this bill it is passed over, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. STRUBLE. If this bill is passed over, with what view is that done and for what time?

The CHAIRMAN. At the beginning of this evening session unanimous consent was asked and granted that when a bill was reached on the Calendar it should be reported by its title, and if no one asked for its consideration it should be passed over informally.

The Clerk read the title of the next pension bill on the Private Calendar, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 887) granting a pension to Thomas S. Duvall.

No member calling for the consideration of this bill, it was passed over.

The Clerk read the title of the next pension bill on the Private Calendar, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4265) granting a pension to Josiah Mahoney.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Is it understood if after a bill is passed over a member interested in it comes in that he can then call it up?

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no agreement to that effect. Unanimous consent would permit it.

Mr. STRUBLE. I would like to understand from the gentleman from West Virginia if he objects to the consideration of the bill S. 2095.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. STRUBLE. I desire that bill to be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill having been passed over under the rule made by unanimous consent, can only be recurred to by unanimous consent.

Mr. STRUBLE. I desire it shall be dealt with as other bills are.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been dealt with as other bills passed over have been. All bills the consideration of which have not been called for have been passed over.

The consideration of the bill (H. R. 4265) not being called for, it was passed over.

JACOB S. BIDDLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4712) to place the name of Jacob S. Biddle on the pension-roll.

Mr. SWOPE. I call for the consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jacob S. Biddle, late a member of Company M, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry.

Mr. SWOPE. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4712) granting a pension to Jacob S. Biddle, respectfully report:

Soldier enlisted February 28, 1865, in Company M, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry, and was discharged October 31, 1865. He alleges that while in service and in line of duty in the State of Virginia, in the spring of 1865, from exposure he contracted a severe cold, which settled in his head, forming an abscess, which resulted in bronchial and nasal catarrh. His claim was rejected because there is no record of the alleged catarrh of head, and claimant's inability to furnish medical testimony showing treatment therefor in or since service:

As to prior soundness, Dr. William Burch testifies:

"That there were no symptoms of any bronchial disturbance or nasal catarrh existing in claimant's system before the spring of 1863."

Daniel Burkheimer, comrade, testifies:

"That claimant was with the regiment when on a raid through West Virginia, in March, 1865. The weather was very inclement, with some snow on the ground. We reached the south branch of the Potomac about midnight; halted there until near morning, and were obliged to lie on rails or anything attainable to keep from lying on the snow. Just before daybreak we crossed the river. It was bank full; the slush ice was floating; the horses were obliged to swim; many were wet to the neck; the clothes froze on them. In this rain and from this extreme exposure claimant contracted a severe cold, and was sick for some time thereafter. He never was in sound health since. I know the above from being with claimant almost every day until discharged."

This witness is marked "good."

Dr. Charles Long testifies:

"I know claimant to be a sufferer from chronic nasal catarrh."

Henry H. Fisher testifies:

"That ever since claimant's discharge he has been afflicted with bronchial and nasal catarrh. I have known him to be afflicted with violent pains in his head, caused by catarrh."

The board of examining surgeons, Bedford, Pa., July 30, 1884, certify:

"Of bronchio-nasal catarrh the physical signs are: The nasal cavities, uvula, and fauces are of an abnormally dark-red color, very much congested, and covered with unhealthy mucus. Over large bronchial tubes there are dry râles. His eyes are slightly redder than normal; otherwise there are no physical signs of disease of eyes. He says that he suffers pain in his head nearly all the time, and that when he gets up in the morning he expectorates a great deal. From the condition and history of the claimant it is our opinion the disability was first incurred in the service, as claimed. We find the disability to entitle him to three-fourths of total rating."

Your committee append the affidavit of N. R. Lynch, subscribed to April 1, 1886. This witness is certified to as being a practicing physician in good professional standing.

"Jacob S. Biddle came to me just after the regiment returned from a raid with a very severe cold. I gave him medical treatment for it for a short time, though he was confined to his tent about two weeks; when able to be out he came to me again. Upon examination I found the membraneous tubes greatly affected, and a case of nasal and bronchial catarrh, for which I gave him treatment. Headquarters of regiment was at New Creek, West Virginia."

This last testimony was not on file in the Pension Department.

Your committee are well convinced that this soldier did contract catarrh from exposure on the march, and that this catarrh has become chronic, and that he is a sufferer from it to this day. The bill will give him such a rating as his disabilities entitle him to receive.

Your committee therefore report it favorably, and recommend its passage.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I would like to ask the chairman of this committee at what time this application for pension was made.

Mr. SWOPE. Is not that stated in the report?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. It is not stated in the report. This report, like many others made by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, is remarkable for the absence of a great many facts.

Mr. SWOPE. If the gentleman were to have all the facts connected with every case reported he would have a good-sized volume to read in each case.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I wish to know when the application was first made for this pension?

Mr. SWOPE. The committee do not think it a matter of necessity to specify when every applicant makes application for pension. They state the facts of the case so far as they consider it necessary for the enlightenment of this committee and rest content with that. In this case there is proof of the contraction of the disease in the service. There is proof of its continuance ever since. And the bill simply proposes to put this man on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension law. That is, he will be subject to an examination, and if his disability does not entitle him to receive anything he will be in the position in which he now is. The bill does not propose to give him any specific sum or rate his disability. It leaves that for the Pension Bureau.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The whole statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE] is a mere evasion of the duties of that committee, and it would be a mere evasion of duty on our part if we should accept it. When I asked for facts the gentleman tells me the committee do not think it necessary to report facts, and we must take the report as he makes it.

I want to say to the gentleman that circumstances have not justified this House in taking the reports of this committee for granted as regards everything they report. It was only a short time ago that a report was made in this House from that committee, without instancing a number of others, granting a pension to a soldier from Pennsylvania who in a frolic in the city of Philadelphia went out on a spree and got his throat cut, and that committee reported that case here to this House for a pension; and but for the fact that members of this House want to investigate these matters we would be fast bringing this House into disrepute and almost into disgrace.

Now, that report ought to have shown further facts.

Mr. SWOPE. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. SWOPE. Did that case occur in this Congress?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. In this Congress, sir; and the report was made by your colleague upon my right [Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania].

Mr. SWOPE. I think the gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I am not on that committee at all.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Well, Mr. Chairman, I may be mistaken as to who made the report.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. You are mistaken as to the fact also. There is no such case on record.

Mr. SWOPE. Can the gentleman from West Virginia give us the name of the case?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Gentlemen state that there is no such case on record.

Mr. NEECE. I state that there has been no such case before the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, before this evening's session is over I will introduce the record. Now, I want to say here that this report shows no such state of facts as would justify our acting upon it. We are not satisfied with the report, and I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE] for the evidence upon which the report in this case was made, and I am entitled to it. I want to see the evidence that sustains the claim that this man, who was in the service two or three months, contracted a cold that resulted in bronchial catarrh to such an extent as to entitle him to be placed on the pension-roll. When did he first discover that he had this bronchial catarrh? When did he first apply for a pension?

Mr. SWOPE. The report states that he discovered it immediately.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The surgeon of his regiment does not testify to any such thing. The surgeon testifies that he had a cold at that time.

Mr. SWOPE. What is a cold but a catarrh?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But can not the gentleman answer me when I ask him when this man first applied for a pension? Does he not know enough of the case to know when this man first applied?

Mr. SWOPE. Certainly not.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Well, then, Mr. Chairman, here is a member of the committee who made this report who states to the House that he does not know enough of the case on which he made the report to be able to tell when the man first applied for a pension.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. How long do you think it would take a man to contract a catarrh swimming a river full of ice?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I answer the gentleman by saying that ever since I was a boy I have been in the habit of doing that sort of thing, and I have never contracted such a catarrh. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I repeat that the gentleman who reported this bill has told us that he does not know enough about this case to state when this man first discovered his affliction and first applied for a pension.

Mr. SWOPE. The gentleman seems to misunderstand the case. This man did not apply for a pension at the time when he first discovered his affliction. He tried to get cured of it for a considerable time before he applied for a pension.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. When did he first apply for a pension?

Mr. DUNHAM. Will the gentleman from West Virginia allow a suggestion?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do not yield. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania again, when did this man first apply for a pension?

Mr. SWOPE. That is a matter that is not at all material to the case.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Did he apply for a pension to the Pension Bureau?

Mr. SWOPE. Of course he did.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. When did he do so?

Mr. SWOPE. I have told the gentleman half a dozen times that I do not know and that it is not material to this case that anybody should know that. If the gentleman has any peculiar curiosity on the subject, I refer him to the Pension Office.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I ask the gentleman again, did the Pension Office reject this man or not?

Mr. SWOPE. He would not be here if it had not rejected him. We never act here on cases that have not been rejected by the Pension Bureau.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to see the evidence upon which this report was founded.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I suppose there is no objection to the gentleman from West Virginia getting the evidence if he wants it, but I do not know of any obligation resting upon any member of this committee to procure it for him. If the point is to be made that we can not proceed with this case until the evidence is produced here, we had better go on to another case.

A MEMBER. Let us vote on this case. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Gentlemen had better be quiet. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROWELL. We are not under any greater obligation to be quiet than anybody else. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying this bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I have not yielded the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had ceased speaking and the Chair supposed he had yielded the floor.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I suppose so, but the Chair allowed me to be constantly interrupted. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I repeat my request for the evidence upon which this report is founded, and, as a member of this House who is to vote upon the case, I claim that I am entitled to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair knows of no rule which requires the evidence to be produced here for the gentleman's satisfaction.

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman knows that his demand can not be answered. Of course the evidence is not here; probably it is in the Pension Office. If the gentleman makes objection to this bill, I do not know that anybody will object to its being informally passed over.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I have no objection to that, Mr. Chairman.

Several MEMBERS. No! No!

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make that motion? If not, the question is on the motion to lay the bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 79, noes 6.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I make the point that no quorum has voted. I will state again that if it be agreed that this bill be passed over informally I will not insist on the point. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, and Mr. SWOPE were appointed.

The tellers took their places; but before the count was concluded,

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, said: It is agreed, I understand, that this bill be passed over informally, not to lose its place.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to laying the bill aside informally, not to lose its place on the Calendar? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

JOSIAH MAHONEY.

Mr. PETTIBONE. When the bill (H. R. 4265) granting a pension to Josiah Mahoney was reached I did not catch the title. I desire that bill passed, and I ask unanimous consent that we may now go back to it.

There being no objection, the committee proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Josiah Mahoney, late second lieutenant of Company D, Eighth Tennessee Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. TAULBEE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4265) granting a pension to Josiah Mahoney, submit the following report:

Josiah Mahoney enlisted about September 20, 1863, and was commissioned as second lieutenant Company D, Eighth Tennessee Cavalry, January 1, 1864, and was mustered out September 11, 1865; filed claim for pension April 4, 1870, alleging incurrence of diarrhea, which resulted in hemorrhoids, or piles; rejected February 1, 1875, on the ground that the diarrhea existed prior to the date of enlistment.

The facts, as shown by the records and proof on file in the Pension Office, are as follows:

By reputable and reliable medical evidence he is shown to be sound and free from disease at enlistment, and that while he was in said service he incurred diarrhea, which resulted in hemorrhoids.

The rejection seems to be based on the apparent discrepancy of dates. His captain, in testifying in the case, says:

"That claimant was afflicted at different times and places with hemorrhoids, or piles, which was first complained of to deponent's recollection while at Gallatin, Tenn., in June, July, or August, 1864. He suffered greatly during most of the time of the campaign, and was still affected when mustered out. Was often urged to go to hospital, but refused, he being of a temperament and disposition to never give up, and always anxious to fill his place in the company."

The captain again states (filed January 13, 1872)—

"That claimant volunteered in the company about September 20, 1863, and did duty all the time up to January 1, 1864, when he was commissioned and mustered; do not think the rolls show that he did enlist at that time, yet it is so, and did soldier's duty to date of his commission; if he is shown in his application to have enlisted in 1865 it is a mistake; it should be 1863. He was with us a part of the time and a part of the time on detached duty, by order of deponent and Colonel Patton, from September, 1863, to date of commission and muster, January 1, 1864, and during all that time, as well as the remainder of his service, he was as good soldier as anybody could possibly be. He was a commissioned officer at the time of contracting his disability, January 20, 1864; knows that he was afflicted with piles in the service, but did duty most all the time, when he should have been in hospital."

Dr. C. Wheeler, the examining surgeon for the office, states (filed October 7, 1872)—

"That he is well acquainted with claimant and Captain McPherson, and can state knowingly that neither of them are capable of making any misrepresentations; that any discrepancies that may appear in either of their statements are to be attributed to a failure to remember dates distinctly rather than to any intentional misstatement; is satisfied that the case is meritorious."

Affidavit of hospital steward (E. S. Depnew) filed March 9, 1873, states—

That he acted as hospital steward from about June, 1864, to September, 1865; gave medicine to claimant for piles, from which he was suffering at date of discharge, September, 1865; deponent knows of his own knowledge that he contracted hemorrhoids in the service.

Your committee are of the opinion that while his captain may have been mistaken as to dates, he could not have been mistaken as to the material facts.

They recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS S. DUVALL.

Mr. TAULBEE. When the bill immediately preceding on the Calendar the one last considered was reached, I did not hear the title read. I ask unanimous consent that we may now consider that bill.

There being no objection, the committee proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 887) granting a pension to Thomas S. Duvall; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas S. Duvall, late captain of Company A, Kentucky Home Guards.

The report (by Mr. TAULBEE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 887) granting a pension to Thomas S. Duvall, submit the following report:

Thomas S. Duvall was captain of Home Guard Company attached to Eighteenth Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, under command of Col. John J. Landrum; that on 17th July, 1862, and during an engagement in the battle of Cynthiana, Ky., he received a gunshot wound in left hand, resulting in amputation.

He filed claim for pension June 16, 1882, which was rejected on the ground that no claim of a State militiaman or non-enlisted person, on account of disability from wounds or injury in battle with rebels or Indians while temporarily rendering service, shall be valid unless prosecuted to a successful issue prior to July 4, 1874.

Your committee has invariably recommended the passage of similar bills. This case is a very meritorious one. We therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CATHARINE WATERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 325) granting a pension to Catharine Waters.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I ask for the consideration of this bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States, the name of Catharine Waters, mother of Thomas Waters, deceased, late steward of the steamer Benefit, at the rate of $8 per month.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill strike out the words "at the rate of $8 per month."

The report (by Mr. NEECE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 325) granting a pension to Catharine Waters, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The claimant is the mother of Thomas Waters, who was killed by the enemy while serving as steward on the steamer Benefit while going up Red River in April, 1864.

Her claim has been rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the son at time of his death was not in the military or naval service of the United States.

It appears from the evidence on file that Thomas Waters served as officers' steward on the United States steamer Sovereign from December 11, 1862, to February 25, 1863. He then acted in like capacity on the General Lyon, operating on the Mississippi River, and afterward on the steamer Benefit on its trip up Red River, having on board Lieutenant Terry, United States Navy, and about one hundred and fifty marines and sailors for the Red River fleet. The steamer was chartered by the Government as a dispatch boat, as appears from the certificate of Admiral Porter, who also states that Lieutenant Terry (now commander, United States Navy) was ordered to pass a battery, and in doing so his vessel (the Benefit) was much cut up and a number of men were killed. This occurred at Grappe's Bluff, Louisiana. All the men on board of the steamer were engaged in the fight. Claimant's son was struck by a solid shot from the enemy's battery and instantly killed. The claimant was employed as laundress of the boat at the time of her son's death.

Although not a war vessel of the United States the steamer Benefit was by reason of its employment by the Government a part of the Mississippi fleet under the command of Admiral Porter, and exposed to the same damage from confederate attacks as vessels of the Navy.

The claimant was dependent upon the son for years before his death, being left a widow about 1850, without property or other means of support. She is old, and as stated by Hon. Mr. TOWNSHEND, of this House, is compelled to earn her subsistence by washing.

While it is true that the pension laws do not confer any benefit upon this claimant, because her son at time of his death was not directly connected with the naval service of the United States, yet it is equally true that he was killed in an engagement with the enemy while on board of a vessel under the immediate control of the highest officer of the Mississippi River fleet, and we therefore believe that Congress should grant the relief asked for.

Your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, amended, however, by striking out all after the word "Benefit," in line 7.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not see how any one can claim that this bill comes under any provision of law in relation to soldiers. The report shows that this was a private vessel employed for hire—for remuneration to the owners—and engaged in the transportation of troops, just as any vessel is employed to transport passengers. This vessel had its officers and deck hands; and among the employés on the boat was this steward, who at the time was acting as a laundress. [Laughter.]

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I understood the report so stated.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. His mother was a laundress.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Well, he was a steward on that boat. He was in no sense engaged in the military service.

He was not in the employ of the Government. He could give up his occupation on that boat at any time. He was carrying no gun, was engaged in no offensive or defensive service at all. Now, suppose a deckhand on the boat had been killed, could it be said that his widow or dependent mother should have been placed upon the pension-roll in the same manner as if he had been engaged in the military service and subject to military orders?

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen need not think they can come here now and with this sort of levity rush all these bills through.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is not the gentleman willing to let this bill pass, and allow the President to veto it if he thinks best?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I am not willing to shirk my duty in a cowardly way and throw it upon some other shoulders. I honor the President for his courage, his industry, his patriotism in supervising all the acts of this Congress; and when we do wrong I honor him for calling us to account. As a member of Congress, I mean, so far as I can, to uphold his hands in administering the law and standing by the statutes of the country.

I want to know, sir, by what law this man is entitled to a pension?

Mr. GOFF. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. GOFF. Does the gentleman understand from this report the claimant, whose mother he speaks of, was actually killed in battle? When this boat became engaged does he understand this steward, realizing the danger, took a gun into his hand and went into battle against the enemy and went down to death?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I understand this man hired himself as a steward on this boat in the position of a civilian for wages.

Mr. GOFF. Does not the gentleman understand that is not the fact?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. It does not so appear.

Mr. CUTCHEON. He was killed by a cannon-shot while in action. His mother was a laundress on the same boat.

Mr. GOFF. My colleague from West Virginia evidently has misunderstood the report.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I will read one sentence from the report: "Every man on this boat was actually engaged in this fight."

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Was this man engaged with a gun in his hand in battle? There is a simple statement that all the men on board of the steamer were engaged in the fight, and that is a very different statement from that which we have heard that this man had a gun.

I submit when a man voluntarily outside of the Army, outside of military commanders to command him, goes for pecuniary compensation and takes a hazardous risk in employment as a civilian he is not entitled to a pension. I submit such a one has no claim to be put in the same position as a soldier who suffered in the line of duty. There are a large number of soldiers' claims, and instead of considering a case like this you should go on and consider those claims. I make the motion this be passed over informally and those soldiers' cases be taken up.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent. [Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. BAYNE. I wish to ask the gentleman from West Virginia whether or not he desires to raise the question of no quorum on this case?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will say frankly to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I am always frank in reference to these matters, that if he will bring up any case of a man who received an injury in the service of the United States I will raise no factious opposition. But if you undertake to go outside of such cases and vote pensions to civilians, if you undertake to vote pensions to men who were not soldiers but engaged as civilians, I will do anything to defeat those bills.

Mr. BAYNE. I understand the gentleman then in case of no quorum voting will raise the question of no quorum.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will be frank with the gentleman and state that if it is necessary to defeat this bill to-night to raise the question of no quorum, I will do it.

Mr. BAYNE. I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, the session to-night, and all sessions on Friday evenings, would be devoted to the consideration of pension bills reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions, and without any controversy which would involve a waste of time to defeat the consideration of these bills. If I were not advised by what the gentleman has said he proposes to raise the question that no quorum is present to-night I would not occupy a moment in discussing this matter. But I know no quorum is present, and I know it lies within the power of the gentleman under the rules to defeat further proceeding, and the issue may be met now as well as at any other time.

I had heard it intimated a gentleman was coming here to insist a quorum should be present for the passage of these bills. I was astounded to hear any member of the House of Representatives would insist on anything of that sort. When gentlemen come here on occasions like this interested in this sort of legislation, whose whole functions consist in giving pensions to individuals whose cases had been presented to Congress by favorable reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions or the Committee on Pensions, I thought no man in the whole breadth of this Union would have the temerity to come here and say the men who went into the service and rendered military duty to the Government in the hour of its need should be denied a pension when they not only needed it but deserved it.

I am astonished at the vetoes of the President. I think the whole history of this Republic presents no parallel to them. The austere Andrew Jackson, desirous of asserting his power and anxious to make his individuality conspicuous, never monopolized power as the President of the United States has done with reference to these bills.

Why, sir, this man has even had the temerity to sneer at a report of a committee of this House granting a pension to an invalid soldier of the Republic. He has had the temerity to put the seal of his sarcasm upon reports unanimously made by this House granting pensions to widows of men slain in the service of the country.

This man, himself no soldier, himself walking in the paths of peace when these others went out and imperiled their lives to defend the Union, and thus enable him to occupy the position of a President of the country, now comes here and puts his veto upon a unanimous report of a committee and the unanimous vote of the House of Representatives and of the Senate of the United States!

On what ground does he assert these prerogatives? What constitutional authority has he for going to this length? Who invested this man with such power that he may thus assert himself under these circumstances and say to the people of the country, "I am larger than you all, and know more about what should become law than the three hundred and twenty-five members of the House of Representatives and the seventy-six members of the United States Senate?"

Ah, Mr. Chairman, it is often a fault of men endowed with brief authority to arrogate to themselves power and knowledge that they do not really possess. He is no better than any of us. He is no better than any American citizen, and is not the equal in patriotism of any man who went out and imperiled his life to save the Union. [Applause on the Republican side.]

What are the functions of a President in vetoing bills? His primary function is to question the constitutionality of the law. Were any of these special bills unconstitutional? Not one of them. He made no suggestion in any one of these messages that they were unconstitutional. Has he the power to intervene and prevent the enactment of rash or immature legislation? That was an old theory that was discussed when our Constitution was framed and when it was believed, having patterned our affairs after the old English Government, that the king could do no wrong; that he exercised a sort of paternal control and supervision over all the affairs of the nation and did nothing that would not commend itself to the public.

But that is an antiquated idea, and especially so in a great country like this, under our form of government, where all the people are educated, and where one man knows just about as much as any other man knows. Could he attribute to Congress in the formation of these pension bills rashness, immaturity, want of consideration, partisan purposes, political prejudices, or anything of that sort? Not at all. There is no partisanship. A large majority of the men who fought against these men now applying for pensions vote for these bills. Democrats and Republicans alike vote for these bills; and there is substantially no opposition to their passage.

But as if to put a quietus forever upon these arrogant vetoes the Senate of the United States reported a bill and passed it unanimously that will cover every individual case that he vetoed, and has sent that bill over to this House, and that bill was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. That committee reported a substitute for the bill, which contains substantially the same provisions as the bill passed by the Senate; substantially the same thing. I venture to say that there was not a single bill vetoed by the President which would not fall within the scope and meaning and spirit and law of the bill reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions of this House.

Now, sir, could the President say if the House of Representatives should take up the Senate bill and pass it, or if the House should pass the bill reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions as a substitute for the Senate bill, after the consideration that has been given to it by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, coming as it does unanimously from that committee—could the President say that that was rash, precipitate, immature legislation?

Recall, you of the North—you of the North recall what you said to these men when they entered the service. Recall the encouragement you gave them, what you said to them. Why, they went with the blessings of the country upon them. They went with the encouragement and good cheer of mothers, wives, and sweethearts into the service. They went forth and they did valiant duty for three or four years, while others who remained at home were growing rich on the fruits of the war and the absence of that competition in economic affairs which the war brought. But there was not one of them who went into the service who was not promised for himself, if he became disabled, or his widow, or his children if they became orphans, that they should be taken care of by this Government.

Why, the man who would have dared to have risen in the communities of the North and said that that man's widow or his children should not be cared for would have been strung up to a lamp-post, so earnest, so honest, so patriotic were the people of this country. The struggle involved the life of this great nation. It involved the principles of self-government; and now, twenty years after the war has closed, in come a poor lot of fellows, a poor lot of widows, and a poor lot of orphans, knocking at the doors of the poor-houses, in the almshouses, unable to earn their bread, asking this rich Government to keep its faith; asking simply for a pitiful sum of money in order that they may live out their unhappy lives, and it is proposed by dilatory motions here and by vetoes by the Chief Executive to say that these men who rendered this service, or their widows and children, shall not have that support which was so lavishly promised to them, and which they above all men in God's great world deserve.

But it makes my heart bleed, it takes away from me every idea that men can be grateful, and can remember with gratitude the great service rendered their country. What does it mean? Does it mean the few dollars involved? Who pays these dollars? The people that vote for pensions pay these dollars. These obstructionists pay none of these dollars, or mighty little of them. It is the great rich North that pays this tribute to the Government and fills its coffers every year with money, and it is the great rich North that wants to pension these people and provide for them in their hour of trouble and in their hour of need.

Who are these people that would come and say, "Save this trifling sum from this man, from that man, and another man?" What interest have they in saving this small sum of money, to which they contribute mighty little? No, gentlemen must not forget that the men who went into the service of this Government to preserve the integrity of this Union, who fought for three or four years for that purpose, who came home disabled, or who left widows, being slain in battle, or dying from disease contracted in the service, who left dependent fathers and mothers unable to provide for their own wants, because old age had come upon them, and because their sons who would have naturally been their support had gone into the service of the country—we must not forget that to all these men this Government not only owes an everlasting debt of gratitude, but owes to them preservation, subsistence, and a decent living while they remain in this world.

It is not so big a matter. All these men will pass away in a few years; they will all go to their graves in a few years. In the life of this Republic the time that we will have to provide subsistence for these men is but as a day. In a few years all these pensioners will disappear from the pension-roll. While we have them with us, while they are dependent upon us for support, let us have the courage, the manliness, the generosity, the magnanimity, to vote for them the amounts provided for them in these various bills, that they may at least eke out an existence without being under the necessity of going to the poor-houses of the land to be maintained at the public expense. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MATSON. I regret very much that the subject of the vetoes of the President should have been introduced at this time, and that it is likely to consume time unnecessarily. I only desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to the fact that he has consumed the time of the House on a subject not properly before it and has wasted more time than all the other members put together during this evening.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. MATSON. I decline to yield.

Mr. BAYNE. Then I will say he misrepresents the facts.

Mr. MATSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BAYNE. Did I not ask the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] whether he would insist on a quorum, and did he not say he would?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman from West Virginia stated that he was willing the committee should go forward with the consideration of any case of a man who was in the service of the Government, and that on any such case he would not raise the question of a quorum.

Mr. MATSON. If I make any statement in which the gentleman says I am wrong, I want to be corrected.

I insist that this House shall proceed with the regular order of business. I insist that these matters either upon the one side or the other ought not to be dragged in here to impede this legislation. I regret very much that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has seen fit to make this assault upon the President. I think it will not alarm him. I remember very well that the gentleman from Pennsylvania made the very same kind of assault upon the predecessor of Mr. Cleveland.

Mr. BAYNE. And I will do so upon any President that will do wrong.

Mr. MATSON. And his own President survived, and I guess ours will.

Mr. BAYNE. He did not survive very long.

Mr. MATSON. He did, and your party stood by; and I tell you the Democratic party intends to stand by its President, too. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There may be some things, some little things, in relation to these vetoes as to which I do not agree with the President. As to some of these bills he has vetoed I have taken a different view. But that is a very small matter in relation to great questions that affect the whole people. I think there are some cases that he has vetoed that he ought not to have vetoed perhaps. Perhaps he did not look at them from the same standpoint.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do you stand by him in the vetoes he ought not to have made?

Mr. MATSON. I do not.

Mr. BOUTELLE. You proclaimed you would stand by him.

Mr. MATSON. I said I would stand by him on the general proposition. But so far as I am concerned, I will not stand by him in cases where I do not approve his veto.

Mr. BAYNE. Do you repudiate the action of your own committee in regard to these cases?

Mr. MATSON. Wherever that committee is wrong I will not stand by it. Wherever I think it is right I propose to stand by it.

Mr. HOLMES. Do you think the committee has reported any case favorably which ought not to have been so reported?

Mr. MATSON. I do. Every one of the bills increasing the pensions of the widows of officers to $50 a month is wrong, and the President ought to have vetoed every one of them.

Mr. HOLMES. But these bills pension private soldiers. Do I understand the chairman of the committee to say that he repudiates the action of his committee?

Mr. MATSON. I do not say that I repudiate the action of the committee in any case. There may be some cases that ought not to have been reported favorably. The fact is that a large number of cases have been reported, some adversely and some favorably, many of them being right upon the line, so that it was hard to say whether they should be reported favorably or adversely. Our committee saw fit to take the view that they should be reported favorably, but there is no use in one getting excited because somebody takes the view that they ought to be reported adversely. A case may be right upon the line so that two men may honestly differ about it; that is all there is in this talk; you can not excite anybody about it, and I think that what my friend from Pennsylvania has said in the way of abuse of the President was totally uncalled-for. The President is an honest man, and the people of this country know it [applause], and he is a courageous man, and I honor him for it.

Mr. LAIRD. What about the courage of the soldiers?

Mr. MATSON. He is President of the United States, and he is called upon, in the discharge of the functions of his high office, to take the responsibility of approving or vetoing bills, and when he does it honestly, no matter if I think he is mistaken, I will not abuse him for it, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania can not make any capital by abusing him, any more than he did by abusing his own President.

Mr. PETERS. We can not honor him for his ignorance of his prerogatives.

Mr. MATSON. The President knows his prerogatives, and knowing them he has the courage to exercise them. Now, Mr. Chairman, I insist that we shall proceed with the proper business of this committee, and if my friend from West Virginia has any substantial objection to this bill—I think he ought not to have, I think it is a good bill, but rather than have this turmoil and trouble I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over informally.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does the gentleman think that this House of Representatives should lie down and let the gentleman from West Virginia walk over it.

Mr. MATSON. You must do as you please about that. You must allow some conscience to others. I assume that the gentleman from West Virginia is conscientious about this matter.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The trouble is he wants to be a conscience for us all.

Mr. MATSON. I do not take the same view of this case that he does, but I am willing to allow that he is conscientious in his view.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman I would be very glad——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MATSON. I have not yielded, Mr. Chairman. I have asked unanimous consent that this bill be passed over informally.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope that will not be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over informally. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMES. I object.

Mr. MATSON. Then I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], whose bill this is.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I came in while this debate was in progress and did not know until this moment what case was under discussion. I know this old lady. She is old and extremely poor; she has been compelled to resort to hard labor at the wash-tub in order to maintain herself. Her son was lost in the service of the country. I know the facts and circumstances of the case as they have been told me by her neighbors. I believe this is as meritorious a case as any ever passed upon by Congress, and I trust that my friend from West Virginia will not persist in his opposition. The committee have carefully investigated the case and have made a report which will convince him, if he will read it attentively, that the case is meritorious.

Mr. LINDSLEY. I ask the gentleman if poverty has anything to do with the matter in the eye of the President?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not know whether the President weighs that question or not. I know this old lady well. I know that she is to-day in extreme want and probably dependent upon this pension to keep her from the almshouse. This I know of my own personal knowledge. The case was rejected by the Pension Office upon a merely technical ground, and I trust that it will be favorably considered here.

Mr. ROWELL. I will ask my colleague if it is not true that the men who served upon those boats that were in the service of the Government had to fight whether they wished to or not?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, they were compelled to fight when there was fighting going on, and they were exposed to great danger.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether there are not several precedents for this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I know that several such bills have been passed in previous Congresses.

Mr. PERKINS. And in this Congress also.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not know about this Congress, but I do know there have been such bills in previous Congresses.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, I will state that I believe it has been the practice of this Government from the Revolutionary war down, in the matter of pensions, to treat those killed or wounded in battle as entitled to pension the same as if they were regularly mustered into the service. The fact that one was killed or wounded while actually engaged in battle has been considered sufficient to entitle him or those dependent on him to a pension. This, I say, has been the practice from the time of the Revolution down. The reason that this case requires a special act is that it does not come under the general law; and such cases can not well be reached except by special act.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow me a single observation?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can not yield further at this moment. I want to call the attention of my friend from West Virginia especially to the fact, of which I am informed by a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that a case of precisely this character has been favorably passed upon at this session by both Houses of Congress and the bill signed by the President without objection. It may be that the gentleman's attention has not been called to that fact.

Now, in order to end all this controversy, I beg that the House allow the bill to be laid aside with a favorable report.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. In answer to the chairman of the committee [Mr. MATSON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], I will state very frankly that I intend to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MATSON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has just yielded the floor to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to make a very brief observation about this case.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, how do I get off the floor? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana resumed the floor, supposing that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] had yielded it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have not.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will wait until the gentleman from Kentucky has spoken.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state to the gentleman from West Virginia, who has made objection to this bill, that we not only have precedent for the bill in the fact of having passed one in a precisely similar case at this session of Congress, which bill met no objection from the President, but in addition to that we have now on the Calendar a general bill reported from our committee, which, if passed, will cover all cases of this character.

The general law which expired by limitation on the 1st of July, 1874, would have covered this case. That was a law granting pensions in the cases of persons belonging to State militia or non-enlisted persons, if during a battle they were under command of a United States officer. Our committee had no hesitation in recommending the passage of the general law now on the Calendar covering cases of this kind. I hope that further time will not be consumed on this case, and that the gentleman from West Virginia will withdraw his objection to favorable action.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy a few moments only in briefly stating the facts of this case as they are summarized in the report and as they are shown beyond question by the evidence. The evidence is that—

Thomas Waters served as officers' steward on the United States steamer Sovereign from December 11, 1862, to February 25, 1863. He then acted in like capacity on the General Lyon, operating on the Mississippi River, and afterward on the steamer Benefit on its trip up Red River, having on board Lieutenant Terry, United States Navy, and about one hundred and fifty marines and sailors for the Red River fleet.

The steamer was chartered by the Government as a dispatch-boat, as appears from the certificate of Admiral Porter, who also states that Lieutenant Terry (now commander, United States Navy) was ordered to pass a battery, and in doing so his vessel (the Benefit) was much cut up and a number of men were killed. This occurred at Grappe's Bluff, Louisiana. All the men on board of the steamer were engaged in the fight. Claimant's son was struck by a solid shot from the enemy's battery and instantly killed. The claimant was employed as laundress of the boat at the time of her son's death.

I trust that the House will not strike down this poor old woman in her old age, and when she is in danger perhaps of going to the almshouse. After the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has concluded his remarks I will ask that this bill be laid aside with a favorable report.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would occupy no time on this question if we could proceed with the business for which we have come here; but as it appears that we can not, I wish to say a few words touching the assault which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] has seen fit to make upon the President.

It is very evident that the gentleman came here loaded and for the purpose of making the assault which he has seen fit to indulge in; and I think it is evident also that it was prearranged and understood by his friends that he was to make this attack. In addition to his criticism upon the action of the President, he has occupied the time of the House in getting off a speech which we have all heard a thousand times. It has been heard so often that there is scarcely a soldier among those who gather at camp-fires who can not go over it. It is the old, old story.

Now, let us understand just where we are and the ground we occupy. Nobody in this House or in the country wishes to see, or is willing to see, a single soldier who was disabled in any way in the service of his country in the Union Army deprived of a pension commensurate with the disability which he has sustained.

If there is one sentiment which is universal and in which there is entire unanimity throughout the country it is this. Nobody questions that. Nobody would have it otherwise. It is a recognition of the soldier's right. A pension is but deferred pay. It is compensation for disability sustained in the service. It is a right, not a gratuity.

But in order to acquire this right the soldier must have first served in the defense of his country, and in the second place must have suffered disability.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He did serve his country.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I am not alluding to any particular case. I have spoken in favor of the case the gentleman refers to.

We all know, and the truth might better be told, that every army has its deserters, its cowards, its camp-followers, its good-for-nothings, and so it was with our Army. There were bounty-jumpers by the thousands—yes, by the tens of thousands; and I knew something about this class toward the close of the war. There were deserters, camp-followers, men who performed no military service, who were a clog on the army of true soldiers, but who now, after the war has been over for a quarter of a century, seek to get on the pension-rolls under the cover of the good name of the true soldier. They see the sympathy everywhere manifested for the disabled soldier, and seek to take advantage of it to get themselves placed on the pension-rolls. There are black sheep in every flock, and there are never wanting those who seize upon every opportunity afforded to get themselves carried on the backs of others.

I believe I speak the real sentiment of the true soldiers when I say that not one of those who served his country faithfully and knows what it was to fight battles believes that a deserter or bounty-jumper or mere camp-follower should go on the pension-roll. I know soldiers generally desire that the pension-rolls shall be kept free from such incumbents, that it may be kept a roll of honor, and it is the duty of all true soldiers to guard it from this class of claimants. The President has aimed at nothing more in the veto messages he has sent to the House. I know nothing of the merits of the respective cases except as gathered from hearing the messages read.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Not now. He may possibly have vetoed some bills where you or I would think the claimant was entitled to a pension. That is a matter of judgment. But I am sure the purpose of the President has been, acting on the best evidence before him, to keep off the rolls men who ought not to go there; and in that he is right and the country will sustain him. No man will stand up here and say a deserter should have a pension, or that a bounty-jumper or a mere camp-follower should have a pension, or that a man who never performed military service should have a pension. Let me give an instance.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Instances he vetoed?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. In a previous Congress I heard a name during the reading of a report which seemd familiar to me. After the bill had passed the House I obtained a copy of the report, and looking it over I found I had not been mistaken. I found that I knew the soldier, or pretended soldier, who was seeking a pension. I knew, too, that he had never performed an honest day's service for the Government; that he had scarcely passed the borders of his own State before he deserted; that he was arrested and brought back, and again deserted; that he was convicted of bounty-jumping, and made his escape from the penitentiary, since which I had not heard of him until he turned up in this House as a claimant for a pension and had his case favorably reported. Suffice it that that bill did not become a law.

All we are concerned about, Mr. Chairman, is to know that the President is exercising his prerogative rightfully, as I believe he is, and not only rightfully but courageously, honestly, and conscientiously.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the gentleman say these men whose pensions are vetoed are of that class?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have not said anything of the sort. I know there were bounty-jumpers, and that there were deserters, and that some of them are trying to get pensions. I know very little of the merits of any particular case, except as gathered from the messages.

But I do say that in the exercise of his rightful prerogative I believe the President is acting conscientiously and honestly, and I trust his judgment in cases he has examined and I have not.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania complains because these bills had received favorable consideration at the hands of a committee. I know something about reports from committees.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do you know the examination the President has given to these bills?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. No; I do not. I have no means of knowing, and have not examined carefully the several messages.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the gentleman know the methods employed by the President in the examination of these bills?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I understand that he gives a great deal of care to their examination, as he does to all public matters. But I am not to be drawn into a discussion of the merits of these claims, because no evidence is before me.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Allow me to suggest——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I can not yield now.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, I shall have my day in court.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Well, you can have your time, but I do not propose to be drawn into a discussion of the merits of these cases without the evidence upon which they rest before me.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, I will discuss them by and by.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I speak only of the manner in which the President has discharged his duty in sending these messages to the House, in which he has exercised but his rightful prerogative. There never was a bill vetoed that had not been reported by a committee and been acted upon by both Houses of Congress; of course not.

And in these matters I think the President, who has examined the cases, is more likely to be right than these Houses which pass bills by titles only, without even reading them. I know they are reported from committees, but we know how many of these reports are got up; that largely, and especially the bad ones, are the work of claim agents, who want to get their $25. I repeat that I know little or nothing myself of the merits of these cases, but I have faith in the ability to judge and the integrity and honesty of purpose of the President in the discharge of his duty as in other public duties to which he gives his attention.

Mr. LAIRD. Have you any faith in the men whose cases are vetoed?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I say I know nothing about them. I have not examined the cases. My own judgment might differ from that of the President on an examination; but the attempt of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and others to make capital out of these vetoes will fail; it will fail because the people understand and soldiers understand that in vetoing undeserving claims the President is only keeping from the pension-roll those who have no right to go there.

Mr. BAYNE. How do you know they have no right?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I am not speaking of these particular cases. I am speaking of a class who are not entitled to pass anywhere as soldiers, like the one I alluded to a little while ago.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What are you talking about? [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have said repeatedly that I knew nothing about the merits of these particular cases which have been vetoed by the President. But the President has done what I have not.

Mr. LAIRD. How do you know that?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The messages show it, and I shall confide in his judgment till it is shown that he has erred in any case.

I yield the time back to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON].

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee rise now for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I desire to ask a question. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 37, noes 38.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from West Virginia rise?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. For the purpose of discussing the proposition before the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia can not be heard under the rule until others who have sought recognition have had an opportunity of being heard.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do not want any misunderstanding. I want to know if I will be recognized by the chairman in this debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will take pleasure in recognizing the gentleman under the rule.

Mr. BAYNE. I have some time remaining and desire now to resume the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from West Virginia that if the gentleman remembers the rule provides that all shall be recognized who desire recognition before one who has been recognized once is again entitled to the floor.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Then having been recognized once by the Chair the Chair suspends recognition for that purpose?

The CHAIRMAN. For that purpose only.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Very well.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I do not seek recognition for the purpose of making a speech upon any case that is not now before the committee, nor do I wish to be heard upon the action of the Executive upon any matter connected with these pensions.

This seems to me, sir, and it seems to this committee, I think, to be a meritorious case. I had it called up because I knew something of the facts. The son of this widow was killed in battle under the eye and command of the chief officer of the fleet on the Mississippi and the Red Rivers. We, sir, who were in that service know that the men on these boats had to fight, whether they were enlisted men or not. We know that these men did fight for the country.

In the present instance this man fought and he did go down to death. We know that he left a widowed mother, and that under the pension laws (he not being an enlisted man) the mother can not receive the pension to which she would otherwise have been entitled. It is therefore a case that eminently appeals to Congress for recognition of the claim for pension which the mother of the boy that fell in battle defending the flag of his country should receive. And I do hope, Mr. Chairman, that gentlemen with speeches to make will seek some other case than that of this old widowed lady, a case that has waited for twenty years for the recognition of the Government, standing, you may say, almost at the door of the poor-house appealing to Congress for relief; and I hope that gentlemen will permit this to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation, and reserve the speeches upon other matters for some other time. I move that it be now laid aside with the favorable recommendation of the committee. [Cries of "Question" and "Vote."]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, and Mr. BLANCHARD addressed the Chair.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is a motion pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is made but can not be enforced, unless there is a limitation of debate, while members are seeking recognition. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] is recognized.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, as a Southern man, and representing an ex-confederate constituency upon this floor, I have stood here for the last five or six years, along with numbers of Representatives from the South, and none of us have ever yet raised objection to the passage of these special pension acts at these Friday night sessions.

Speaking for myself, and voicing, as I believe, the sentiment of the Southern people, I assert that there is no captious objection in the South to the granting of pensions to soldiers who fought on the side of the Union, when proper cases are presented to this House.

Sir, the members on both sides of this Chamber will, I have no doubt, bear cheerful witness to the fact that Southern Representatives have, without cavil or ungenerous criticism, given their votes, and given them willingly, for large appropriations to pension the ex-soldiers of the Federal Army who were disabled by wounds or sickness in the line of duty and the widows and heirs of those killed in the war. And, sir, it comes now with very bad grace from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], in the discussion which has been had on this bill here to-night, to draw the sectional line.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Not just now. The gentleman stood in his place and asked, with great vehemence and force of manner, "Who paid these pensions?" And then he proceeded to answer the question himself. "They are paid," said he, "by the great, rich North."

Does not the Southern section of this country, I would ask, pay a portion of the taxes levied to meet these pensions?

Out of their opulence, I grant you, "the great, rich North" pays the most of these taxes; but, sir, out of their poverty the Southern people pay a large part of them.

The revenues of the Government, from all sources, aggregate in round numbers from three hundred and fifty to four hundred million dollars annually. And does the gentleman from Pennsylvania contend that all of the taxes which produce this enormous sum are paid by "the great, rich North?"

In making such a statement, Mr. Chairman, he drew the sectional line; and this I deprecate, whether it be in a debate on a pension case or in the discussion on any other proposition which may come before this House.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Not at this time.

This Government of ours can not be reproached by anybody within its own limits or out of them with illiberality as respects voting pensions to its soldiers.

The spectacle is presented to the world of $85,000,000 per annum being voted by the Congress of the United States to pay pensions to the ex-soldiers of the Republic, their widows and heirs. Now, of this sum of eighty-five millions raised yearly for this purpose how much does the South pay, and pay it out of its poverty?

Sir, I make the assertion, and challenge contradiction, that of this $85,000,000 the southern section of this Union pays from twenty-five to thirty millions.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do not.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understood you to challenge contradiction?

Mr. BLANCHARD. In the gentleman's own time he may answer.

Mr. BOUTELLE rose.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman will excuse me if I ask him not to interrupt me.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will not. But when you challenge contradiction——

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask that the gentleman from Maine be called to order. When I am through he may take the floor to respond.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana declines to yield. He will proceed.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I had no intention at first of participating in this debate; but, sir, I cannot sit here in silence and hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania declare that these taxes are all paid by "the great, rich North." That declaration of the gentleman has gone on the record and to the country; against it I enter my objection and protest. It is not true.

Mr. BAYNE. I did not say that. I said the great bulk.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He may correct it in the RECORD if he desires, and I hope he will.

Mr. BAYNE. I will let it go into the RECORD verbatim et literatim.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If he lets it go into the RECORD verbatim et literatim, it will appear just as I have stated it. Let his words be known of all men. "Who pays these taxes?" he declaims with energy; and in the next breath declares, "They are paid by the great, rich North."

Now, Mr. Chairman, since the gentleman has precipitated that issue, I am at liberty to say, not only does the South pay about twenty-five millions of the eighty-five millions that are voted for pensions yearly, but almost every dollar of the vast sum thus paid by the people of the South finds disbursement in the North to the soldiers who live there. Not one dollar in one hundred of it returns for disbursement in the South. So that when our friends in the North, when the gentlemen on the other side twit us as paying none of these taxes, I answer we do pay our proportion of them, and not one dollar in a hundred of what we pay ever comes back for disbursement in our section of a common country.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I wish to know——

Mr. BLANCHARD. I can not yield. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

There is disbursed in the North not only all the vast sums paid by the South for pension taxes but also all that the Northern people themselves pay for this purpose; so that the North not only gets back all that she pays out for pensions but also all or nearly all that the South is called upon to pay. It is a constant drain, therefore, on one section of the country to the advantage, the building up, and enrichment of the other section. And yet in the face of these facts the gentleman from Pennsylvania has the temerity to throw in the teeth of Southern men on this floor that all of these taxes are paid by "the great rich North."

Mr. Chairman, as for the assault made upon the President of the United States by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it needs nothing at the hands of myself or any other member in the way of answer.

The President can stand such attacks made upon him by the gentleman from Pennsylvania or by any other gentleman on that side of the House who thinks proper to indulge in that kind of debate. The President is intelligently, firmly, and patriotically discharging his duties as Executive of this nation according to his best understanding of those duties, and his understanding of them, I submit to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the country is far more disposed to adopt and concur in than that which the gentleman's own judgment might suggest for his approval. Because the President has returned to the Senate and House a number of special pension acts without his approval, the gentleman from Pennsylvania reads him a lecture as to his duties under the Constitution. Mr. Chairman, the President is required by the Constitution to examine and investigate every bill which passes the two Houses of Congress and goes to him for his signature, and it is his duty under the Constitution and under his oath of office when he believes that a bill has been passed which is unwise or without merit to append his veto to it. Is there not cause for close scrutiny on the part of the President? Why, sir, the spectacle has been presented at this session in the other House of Congress of a number of pension bills being passed without any portion of them being read except the titles.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do not yield. Mr. Chairman, I believe the country is prepared to applaud the action of the Executive when he points out that mistakes have been made in passing certain pension bills and vetoes them. Not one of the bills he has vetoed should ever have passed Congress. The reasons he has given in his veto messages why they should not become laws are conclusive.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Well, ask it.

Mr. BAYNE. I want to say to my friend from Louisiana that if he can not appreciate the condition of the sick or wounded soldiers who are in indigent circumstances, we at the North can. He can not, of course, because he does not have them in the South.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That is not a question, but a statement. We can appreciate their condition; we do appreciate it. Our action on this floor has shown that we appreciate it. For the last seven or eight years these special Friday night pension sessions have been going on, and all this time, even when a majority of the members on this side of the House were and are from the South, no voice has been raised to stop this legislation; and this notwithstanding the fact that at these pension night sessions but a handful of the people's representatives are ever present, and the call for a quorum at any one of them would have broken it up. It is a fact that but few members attend these night sessions, from twenty-five to forty out of three hundred and twenty-five is the rule. Many of us from the South have long thought it is bad policy, a vicious practice, which permits so few of the accredited representatives of the people to engage in the wholesale passage of bills taking money from the Treasury, adding to the pecuniary obligations of the Government; but out of the delicacy of our position as representatives of ex-confederate constituencies we have refrained from attempts at checking it. We did not wish our motives impugned or our purpose misrepresented.

I plead guilty, Mr. Chairman, to attending but few of these Friday night sessions myself; not as many as I should have attended. We all have much to occupy us, and that is why, I judge, so few attend them. And I may add that the few times I have been here, in looking over the other side of the House, I have generally failed to see the familiar face of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. I have been here.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly the wide range that the debate has taken this evening, and I now ask the attention of the committee for a few minutes in the hope, probably the vain hope, of inducing it to return to the business for which we are assembled. It may be well, Mr. Chairman, that our friends who year after year have thrown obstacles in the way of this pension legislation should understand some of the causes that have led to the order under which these pension sessions are held and to this character of legislation. I desire to call attention to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, and especially to page 14, where he declares that the Pension Office "has exhausted human ingenuity in attempts to furnish tests and barriers against claims."

Those two lines in that report furnish the keynote to the whole plan of operations of the Pension Bureau under the present administration, and when gentlemen ask us why we come here with these special pension bills, I answer that it is because we have a pension law that is defective in the extreme, and because that law is administered by a man who states that "human ingenuity has been exhausted" in devising barriers by which applicants for pension may be shut out. We ask you to make a broad, comprehensive, generous pension law, under which any worthy claimant may make his application, and, upon furnishing an amount of proof which would be sufficient to convict a man of any crime known to the calendar, may have his case adjudicated, and whenever we make an effort to secure such a law, those gentlemen to whom this class of legislation is objectionable say to us in substance, "You may have it if you will harness to it, connect with it, make a part of it, some other proposition foreign to it, not relevant to it, not germane to it, but unless you swallow that unpalatable dose you shall not have your pension law."

Does any gentleman deny this? There is the plain fact staring us in the face. Now, what are we to do? We come to these evening sessions, and although we do not get a quorum, we do get a larger number of members who give to the business before us their best thought and their best conscience than we get upon any other class of legislation that comes before this Congress in the daytime. We do have these reports prepared by a committee organized by a Democratic House, a dominant portion of the committee being Democrats. These reports unitedly ask us to pass these bills; and then, in violation of all ordinary procedure in this House, you demand—a few of you, not all of you—demand in every instance the long and tedious process of reading the report, although you do not demand the reading of reports upon bills coming before us which carry ten, twenty, twenty-five, and fifty million dollars.

Look at your inconsistency. Then you came here one week ago and gave us notice that this kind of legislation should cease unless we could have a quorum present. Then you come to us again with eighty-eight bills signed and thirty or more vetoed. I will not venture to comment upon that subject, because it has been already pretty well dealt with. Every man of you knows that it is not the prerogative of the President to be a legislative branch of the Government; that according to the primary, original proposition, it was only measures conflicting with fundamental principles of constitutional law, or measures otherwise hasty, ill-considered, or immature against which the President should interpose his veto. None of these considerations apply in this case. Four hundred and one men in the two branches of this Federal Legislature say that a bill ought to pass, and one man says it ought not to pass, and he so says not on account of any constitutional objection, but simply because he differs in opinion with those who passed the measure. Thus you see how we are hedged in all the way around.

Nor is this all. I want to show you that you have a man executing the pension laws who is unworthy of the trust reposed in him; and I show it by reading the two lines I read a moment ago on the lower end of page 14 of his last report. Further, the same man has said (page 13) that the Pension Office "has been used as a dumping-ground of other offices; much weak and some very bad material has accumulated therein."

On behalf of the clerical force of that office I deny this statement as slanderous. At the date of his report the Commissioner had not dismissed a single man of the drift-wood which, if he told the truth, had been "dumped" upon him.

Many of the former employés had heretofore held office on the implied trust that they would serve the person under whose "influence" they were appointed.

This is another official declaration coming to us from the Commissioner of Pensions, and is to be found on page 14. The absurdity of that statement is only equaled by its falsity, as you all know. Every man here knows that such a fact, if it existed, could only be known from the admission of the party holding the place, and no man with brains enough to draw his salary would make such an admission. From no other source under heaven could such a fact be known.

Mr. TAULBEE. I agree that as a general thing they do not tell it.

Mr. PRICE. I say the Commissioner could not know that such was the case.

A MEMBER. And it is not so.

Mr. PRICE. It is not so. The statement is of a character corresponding with the whole report; and it is indicative of the spirit in which the Commissioner has administered the present deficient and defective pension laws.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. PRICE. Yes; if you will not make it too long.

Mr. TAULBEE. I will make it short. As to those two lines which you have cited at the bottom of that page, do you understand them to mean that the Commissioner of Pensions who makes that statement had "exhausted human ingenuity," or do you understand him to mean that he, together with his predecessors, in laying restrictions upon the adjudication of claims, had arrived at that result? How do you understand that?

Mr. PRICE. I understand that he did it. I understand he has no right to speak for his predecessors; and I understand that none of his predecessors ever took any such ground as that it was proper to "exhaust human ingenuity in attempts to furnish tests and barriers against"—not bad claims, remember, but "claims." I believe the Commissioner tells the truth in that statement if he does not in another syllable of his entire report.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. PRICE. Now, you are asking too many questions, but I will yield.

Mr. TAULBEE. Does the gentleman understand that the present Commissioner of Pensions has been more strict in his administration of that office than his predecessors or has allowed a fewer number of pension claims, taking into consideration the time he has been in office, than any of his predecessors?

Mr. PRICE. I mean to say that when he took that office there were a large number of cases which had been followed up and the proofs submitted so that the cases were practically ready for final action, requiring only his finishing touch; and taking these cases into consideration, he has allowed within the same number of months an equal number of cases with any other Commissioner. But I mean to say that restrictions have, in his administration, been placed around the proving of claims, so that from matters coming under my personal observation the truth of the statement to which I have referred is justified.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman cite any rule or regulation of the office which justifies his statement?

Mr. PRICE. I mean to say that he has presented letters to me in relation to persons in whose claims I was interested—not financially—in which he has said that such and such causes were operating to prevent the liquidation of the claim, which causes were not so treated by his predecessors.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman give the particulars in those cases?

Mr. PRICE. Will you kindly sit down? I know you can make very good music with your mouth, and I know that you are a very genial gentleman, but I do not have so many opportunities of making myself heard here as you do.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to give one specification?

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Since General Black has taken charge of that office he has made a regulation that in order to have a claim made "special" an affidavit must be filed setting forth the indigent condition of the claimant.

Mr. PRICE. Yes; I know that; but I had forgotten it at the moment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. In my district, in the county of Delaware, a widow woman applying for a pension——

Mr. PRICE. No use of specifying——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. A petition, signed by every county officer, by the Democratic postmaster, by the leading business men of that town, and, on my investigation, indorsed by the people of that district, set forth the condition of that woman, and that petition was returned to me by the Commissioner of Pensions with a little printed circular stating that an affidavit had to be signed. So it stands. That is, a petition signed by every Representative of Congress from Iowa, every Senator, every officer of Delaware County, setting forth the condition of that poor woman could not be made special, and yet on the representation of one Democratic Congressman a widow woman of a soldier at Cannelton, Ind., alleging she was an "offensive partisan," had her official head taken off as postmistress of her town.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. PRICE. No; I can not allow myself to be interrupted so frequently. While I am anxious to oblige gentlemen, still I shall not be able to present my views on this question if I am constantly interrupted.

Mr. TAULBEE. The gentleman can not afford it.

Mr. PRICE. I know I can not, for I have not the time to yield.

Mr. TAULBEE. You have an hour.

Mr. PRICE. I do not want to take an hour from the business of the House; so I will proceed with my remarks.

Again, he says on the same page, in the same connection:

A widespread practice had grown up by which they really acted as the agents and attorneys by those securing their appointments; and the eradication of this wrong, whereby for personal ends advantages were given to a few at the cost of the many, has compelled the adoption of stringent rules and severe disciplinary measures.

Now, I challenge any apologist of General Black on this floor or elsewhere to show me one single solitary instance where any "severe disciplinary measures" were tried, or where he did anything to destroy "a widespread practice" which he says had grown up.

After diligent inquiry I have been unable to find a single case of the kind described, and believe the statement thus made by Commissioner Black to be without any foundation in fact. I believe that it is not only unfounded, but in absolute contradiction of any facts which can be found at the Pension Office at that time. Yet he said the practice was "widespread," and that "stringent rules" and "severe disciplinary measures" had been adopted. I challenge any gentleman who is willing to stand as his apologist to point out here or hereafter any instances of the enforcement of such severe "disciplinary measures" mentioned by him in his report up to that date, as I believe the statement to have been recklessly incorrect.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to another fact, and to read one more extract from his report.

In second clause, on page 14, he says:

It is now an offense, prohibited by orders, as well as repugnant to all fairness, for any employé to act as the agent or attorney of any outside party. Yet, within a recent period, one clerk has confessed to the Commissioner that he acted as agent for one man in aiding to prepare from three hundred to four hundred cases. This instance is only solitary in its extent, not its character.

A week or ten days ago I denounced that statement as absolutely, unconditionally, and inexcusably false. I challenged the production of any proof of the charge contained in that extract, and so far I have failed to receive any response to that challenge. It has not been produced, because there is none which can be produced. I again renew the same challenge, and am willing to give them any time in which to make good any such charge. I denounce it as an absolute, unadulterated falsehood, as the insertion of a stump speech in the report, not only calculated to mislead but intended to mislead the country, made by a man who has been appointed to administer our laws relative to granting pensions to those who were disabled in fighting for the country.

Mr. O'HARA. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question, and it is this: Is not this same General Black drawing a pension?

Mr. PRICE. Yes; he is to-day drawing the only one-hundred-dollar pension a month in the country. That may be right or wrong, and I do not say anything in that regard. But, sir, I denounce as inexcusably false the charge made in the extract last read from his report.

The clerk referred to is F. H. Allen, formerly clerk of the circuit court, and afterward county judge of Jackson County, in the State of Wisconsin, and now my private secretary; a gentleman who for years stood among the very foremost employés of the Pension Office for promptness, for rapidity, and correctness of work, intimate knowledge of the pension laws, and incorruptible integrity.

I denounce as inexcusably false either that he acted as "agent" for me or any other man on earth, or that he ever prepared or assisted in the preparation of any paper in any case then or now pending, and that the statement made by Commissioner Black was and is false and unworthy a country pettifogger, much less an officer in charge of the important and sacred duty of administering the pension laws.

Now, there are other cases that I would like to call attention to, but it is going to take too long. I have got instances here where he has taken charge of cases which will not bear the light of investigation, and the apologists for him do not dare to order an investigation. You did order one on the 1st of March by your Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, and directed an investigation, and now it is the 25th day of June, and yet they have not struck a blow, pointed a gun, or snapped a cap at it, and dare not. I refer to case No. 348883, Christian Borcherdin.

I have a list here of such cases, but I will not stop now to read it; but I do say that the whole administration of that office is a fraud upon justice, a fraud upon common sense, is a fraud upon the soldier, and that everything has been thrown around it that human ingenuity can devise for preventing the admission and consideration of claims. That is the very reason, then, that these cases are here. They are here, and we are here to-night because of that fact. Why your pension law itself would disgrace even a heathen country, and yet we can not cure it. We are simply powerless to remedy it.

Do you know how our pension-list stands? Let me tell you. We have 1,260 pensioners who get at the rate of $1 a month, or 3⅓ cents a day; 26,134 who draw a pension of $2 a month, or 6⅔ cents a day; 2,956 who get $3 a month, or 10 cents a day; 60,268 who get $4 a month, or 13⅓ cents a day; 34,639 who get $6 a month, or 20 cents a day, and 44,775 who get $8 a month, or 26⅔ cents a day; and yet this man who you say the country is going to stand by for his action in vetoing bills will go on and veto these little things and let Mrs. Hancock's two-thousand-dollar bill go kiting through without a murmur. Where is the justice of such a principle?

Mr. Chairman, the whole system is wrong, and yet we who would do it have not the power to remedy the defect. I introduced in the Forty-eighth Congress, and again in the Forty-ninth Congress, a very generous and comprehensive bill, which provided that every deserving, every suffering soldier might receive a pension; and yet your Committee on Invalid Pensions, under the control of my excellent and honorable friend from Indiana [Mr. MATSON], never permitted it to see the light of day except upon an adverse report in the Forty-eighth Congress, and not at all in the Forty-ninth.

Mr. MATSON. But your bill proposes to pension everybody whether they are disabled or otherwise.

Mr. PRICE. I would pension all who are deserving, all who are suffering, and do it by a proper system; because you might just as well pick out the names of the applicants and put them in a hat and let a blind boy take them out one by one and expect to get as good and honest results as under the existing law. I propose a bill that would pension those who were entitled to the benefits of it, but the present system keeps out the great bulk of those who are entitled. It is the only way to reach justice in these matters. Why, to-day, if you take the sums that are paid to claim agents and in the administration of the office in the application of your present law you will have a sum very nearly equal to the pensions you would have to pay out under that system if properly organized. I would do away with this expense and this obstruction.

Mr. MATSON. But your idea is that the man who is not disabled ought to be pensioned as high as the man who is.

Mr. PRICE. No, sir; but I would take him in for the sake of getting a pension for those who are entitled to it. Unfortunately the present system keeps all out. I would give you a better law than this. Your present system keeps an army of pension claimants all over the city who have grown great and rich and wealthy on the pension business, and they absolutely dominate the Pension Office and the pension legislation of the House through its committees.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question.

Mr. PRICE. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Do you know the average pension that is now allowed to pensioners?

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir; I have it here, and will tell you in a moment.

Mr. PERKINS. It is about $109.50 a year.

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir; it is about that.

Mr. PERKINS. Do you know how many special pension acts have been granted at this session of Congress?

Mr. PRICE. No; not exactly.

Mr. PERKINS. Six hundred and four.

Mr. PRICE. I should have said about five hundred and eight.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman make a computation, after ascertaining the aggregate, as to how much this involves as a charge upon the people which would entitle it to the denomination of wasteful, extravagant expenditures? I will tell the gentleman it is only $65,000 in the aggregate that this Congress has granted to the dependent parents, widows, and disabled soldiers; and yet the President denounces these pensions as an extravagant and wasteful expenditure of the public money. Sixty-five thousand dollars! but very little more than the President's own salary. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let me ask the gentleman from Kansas——

Mr. PRICE. I deline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, allow me to make this suggestion to the gentleman from Kansas in reference to this $65,000 being a little more than the President's salary. I saw on a single page of the executive and legislative appropriation bill that we appropriated $96,000 for the President and his household, and that does not take it all in. I speak from recollection.

Now, all this has been done to get up a cheap notoriety by cutting off not one-fifth of the $65,000 that we have given our gallant soldiers, while at the same time we are carrying $96,000 for the President and his household on a single page of one appropriation bill. Yet we hear no complaint of that.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman let me call attention to one of these veto messages?

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. On page 6013 of the RECORD is a veto message in the case of John W. Farris. It seems that he did not apply for a pension until 1881, as the President said, sixteen years after his discharge. I quote the message:

In 1881, sixteen years after his discharge, he filed an application for a pension, alleging that he was afflicted with chronic diarrhea contracted in the army, and in 1885 his claim was allowed, and he was granted a pension for that cause.

It seems he was allowed a pension under the present administration.

In September of the same year, and after this pension was granted, he filed an application for an increase of his rate, alleging that in 1884 his eyes became affected in consequence of his previous ailments and the debility consequent thereupon.

The President then says—and I ask every gentleman present to note his language:

The ingenuity developed in the constant and persistent attacks upon the public Treasury by those claiming pensions, and the increase of those already granted, is exhibited in bold relief by this attempt to include sore eyes among the results of diarrhea.

And I noticed a good many gentlemen smile in the House when that was read.

I am entirely satisfied with the opinion of the medical referee who, after examining this case in October, 1885, reported that "the disease of the eyes can not be admitted to be a result of chronic diarrhea."

On all grounds it seems to me that this claimant should be contented with the pension which has been already allowed him.

That is the message. Now, I was informed yesterday in this Capitol by a gentleman who is a citizen of the State of Missouri that this pension was granted upon the certificate of the most skillful oculist in the city of Saint Louis and State of Missouri; that the disease of the eyes was a direct result and consequence of the long-continued nervous debility resulting from the chronic diarrhea; that that certificate was supported by two other eminent surgeons; and further, that this man is now almost totally blind; and further still, that he is to-day a Democratic senator of the State of Missouri. And yet the President unadvisedly, without investigation of the medical questions involved, without looking carefully through the case, vetoes a bill which this Congress, by the deliberate action of its two Houses, has passed and brands this man with a stigma.

Mr. LAIRD. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAIRD. I ask the gentleman was not his information concerning this soldier obtained from the officer who commanded his regiment, and if that officer did not say he was one of the bravest soldiers in that regiment, and served his country gallantly for four years?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, sir. He told me he served under him, that he knew him intimately, and that he was one of the bravest men he had ever known in his entire army experience. And yet the President deliberately—because when the Chief Magistrate sends a grave veto message to the Congress of the United States it must be assumed to be deliberate—deliberately brands this man as one of the class that develops ingenuity in the constant and persistent attacks upon the public Treasury; brands him, in other words, with trumping up an excuse for getting a pension, while the fact is that this man served his country faithfully, lost his eyesight in that service, and to-day is honored by his fellow-citizens with the position of a senator of his State.

Mr. PRICE. I decline to yield further. I desire now to call attention a little to another circumstance which seems remarkable and which I think the country ought to know, and which I think we ought properly to weigh.

You will recollect, every gentleman will remember, that while these men from among our erring Southern brethren tell us they are enthusiastically in favor of and dearly love and desire to do justice to the Northern soldier, still every proposition which has come before this House for delay on these pension evenings until to-night has come from that side of the House. We came here to-night with the threat thrown in our faces that we should not pass those bills unless there was a quorum. Then we have the reading of the reports called for, and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], who has spoken this evening, I think has been the most persistent of all in calling for these reports night after night. Now he comes in and says, "We deserve very great credit for great generosity, because we, the impoverished South, of this eighty-five millions for pensions pay twenty-five millions."

Let me call the attention of the gentleman to some of the circumstances which may be justly considered as an offset to this consideration. Take, if you please, the Post-Office Department. Where does the gentleman get the money with which to pay his post-office facilities in the Southern States?

Mr. PETTIBONE. I rise to a question of order. We desire to hear what our associate is saying.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. PRICE. I have done the best I could to give solid facts in the best tone of voice I can command.

Mr. PETTIBONE. What I want is order that we may hear the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman from Louisiana tells us that about twenty-five millions out of the eighty-five millions paid for pensions are paid by the Southern States. I believe that is true. The best estimate I can make is about such an approximation.

But the gentleman seems to forget that it does not establish a particular claim on our generosity that they have generously, as he says, yielded to the payment of this taxation. He ought to remember that this great North, this rich North of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] brags—and it is rich in many things, and not the least it is rich in undying gratitude to the men through whose sacrifices we are permitted to occupy seats on this and on that side of the Chamber—he should remember that we pay enough to maintain our own postal facilities and then leave a large surplus, and when the last dollar of that is exhausted we allow them to draw further for their postal facilities. He ought to remember that thirteen millions of people in the South as compared with the twenty-six millions in the North cost the Government for their postal facilities in the proportion of 10 to 7.

He ought to remember also that in the river and harbor bill those thirteen millions of people get about 62 per cent., while we get 38 per cent. He should remember all these things as something of an offset, if he fails to remember the fact that the whole South is infinitely more benefited by the financial debt, and this debt of gratitude which we have incurred, than even the North. We gave them an opportunity to unshackle themselves from an incubus that had drawn them down for centuries. We gave them an opportunity of starting on the road of progress, along which I am glad to say they have bounded with unprecedented rapidity.

They have been benefited more than we, and yet they begrudge the poor pittance that we undertake to dole out here, $65,000 in a long session of Congress, to throw a ray of light across the pathway of men who are to-day groping in poverty and suffering as a result of devotion to their country.

Mr. PETTIBONE. About six hundred homes.

Mr. PRICE. Six hundred homes! Why, in Iowa alone there are one hundred and forty-three soldiers in the poor-houses, so I was told the other day. Great God, think of it! We sitting here, the representatives of a great nation with an overflowing Treasury, with more liberties and more privileges than any other people beneath the sun, with the right to say what we please and the right to do nearly as we please, and the men who made it possible for us to enjoy all these blessings compelled to take refuge in poor-houses—one hundred and forty-three such cases in a single State—men who are reduced to this condition as a result of their sacrifices in the cause of civil liberty, sacrifices by which the South has benefited far more than we.

Do not let these gentlemen raise that question again. Let me appeal to them to say with me that the whole revenues of this Government, North and South, ought, if necessary, to be devoted to make the homes of these men comfortable in their declining days. I do not want "soldiers' homes;" I want the soldier's own house to be his soldier's home.

It is an everlasting disgrace to us that any of these men should be forced to take refuge in the poor-houses of the land, and it is a still more withering and blasting disgrace that the administration of our Pension Office should be placed in the hands of General John C. Black, who is permitted to twist and curve and wriggle and throw up barriers and obstacles even in the way of the execution of the pension law as it stands. I will now yield to——

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PRICE. I have not yielded yet [laughter]; but I do now yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MORRILL. And I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON].

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the committee do now rise. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] rises to a question of order. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I was recognized by the Chair as being entitled to the floor, but the Chair made the statement that if any other gentleman desired to speak under the rule I should be further heard after he had done so. I then asked the Chair distinctly if the rule took me off the floor in order that some other member should have an opportunity to speak whether I should have a right to be heard later, and the Chair stated that I would be entitled to the floor to be heard. Now, I say that it would be in bad faith, contrary to the rules of the House and contrary to the practice of the House, after the Chair took me off the floor for the purpose of allowing other members to speak, who have assaulted our party, and assaulted our administration, and assaulted me, to deprive me now of the privilege of being heard in reply.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to address the House for an hour and a half, but I refrain from it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia will remember the rule under which the Chair was forced to hold that the gentleman was not entitled to a second hearing until all other gentlemen who desire to speak upon the pending question had been heard once.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But the Chair held that I must yield the floor for that purpose and for that purpose alone, and that I could be heard later.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman from West Virginia will be heard if the committee adjourn to continue the discussion, but it is in the power of the committee to rise and limit the discussion at any time that a gentleman has the floor for the purpose of making that motion. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE], having time remaining, yielded to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL], and the gentleman from Kansas yielded to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON], and the question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I simply desire to give notice that I intend to be heard before this bill is disposed of.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I asked my friend from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] to allow the pending bill to be favorably reported to the House. I ask unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has made the motion that the committee do now rise, and until that motion is withdrawn nothing else is in order.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. MATSON; and the chairman declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 7.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. NEAL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar had had under consideration, under the special order of the House, bills upon the Private Calendar, and had instructed him to report to the House sundry bills with various recommendations.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope we shall not adjourn till we pass the bill which has last been under consideration. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. What is the use of making a request of that kind, when I have given notice that none of these bills can pass until I have had an opportunity to be heard?

The motion of Mr. MATSON was agreed to; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ARNOT: Petition asking that a pension be granted Mrs. Anna E. Dickens, to accompany House bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of Fannie Freeman, sister and heir of Sarah Freeman, and of Robert Green, of Culpeper County; of Willis Long, of Fauquier County; of Robert Waters, of Prince William County; of John W. Jones, of Stafford County, and of C. J. King, of Fauquier County, Virginia, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claims of John E. Febry, of Falls Church; of Robert Waters, of John R. Hornbaker, and of Craven J. King, of Prince William County; of Robert Green, of William Francis, of John W. Fletcher, and of Francis F. Curtis, of Fauquier County; of James L. Lowery, of John Lowery, and of John W. Jones, of Stafford County; of Sarah A. Freeman, of Culpeper County; of William Hough, of Loudoun County; of Oliver Bartley, of Orange County; of Benjamin Bowman, of Rockingham County, and of Sarah A. Beckham, of Orange County, and of Willis Long, of Fauquier County, Virginia—to the same committee.

By Mr. BURROWS: Petition of 30 ex-soldiers and members of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Mendon, Saint Joseph County, Michigan, asking for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CATCHINGS: Papers relating to the claim of Martha R. Blanton, of Washington County; of Mary Deen and of Mattie H. Jarnigan, of Bolivar County; of William Whittaker, of Rowena Clark, and of Samuel Chase, of Warren County, Mississippi—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. A. C. DAVIDSON: Papers relating to the claim of Harriet M. Jones, executrix of Nelson Jones, of Monroe County, Mississippi—to the same committee.

By Mr. DOCKERY: Petition of members of Cainsville Post, No. 216, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Missouri, asking for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. R. S. GREEN: Petition of William C. Berry Post, No. 85, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New Jersey, for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the same committee.

By Mr. GUENTHER: Petition of A. F. Hilland and others, citizens of Adams County, Wisconsin, praying for the early passage of Senate bill 1886 without amendment—to the same committee.

By Mr. J. S. HENDERSON: Papers relating to the claim of Jacob C. Douthit and of Marmaduke D. Howard, of North Carolina—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOLMES: Petition from Charles Payne Post, Grand Army of the Republic, No. 141, of Iowa Falls, Iowa, praying for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. IRION: Papers relating to the claim of Estelle Chidester and Henry C. Chidester, heirs of N. C. Yoes, deceased, of Baton Rouge, and of John J. Gardiner, of Saint Landry Parish, Louisiana—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MCCOMAS: Protest of the Civil Service Association of Maryland, against any legislation weakening the sixteenth rule of the Civil Service Commission—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. MORGAN: Papers relating to the claim of William V. Potts, guardian, &c., of Panola County, Mississippi—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MORRISON: Eighteen petitions of citizens of New York, earnestly requesting the reduction of tariff duties, and the placing on the free-list of wool, lumber, jute, hemp, and salt—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Mohr, Hannewan & Co. and 75 others, members of the New York Cotton Exchange; of J. S. Kengkid and 156 others, members of the New York Produce Exchange; of W. F. Hewing and 100 others, citizens of New York, and of Ed. Briggs and 47 others, citizens of New York, for the same—to the same committee.

By Mr. NEECE: Petition of 100 citizens of La Harpe, Ill., praying for the passage of a bill for the relief of soldiers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PETERS: Two petitions of citizens of Terry, Finney County, Kansas, favoring the Teller bill granting right of way over public lands for irrigating ditches—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. PLUMB: Protest of the Chicago Board of Trade against any curtailment of the meteorological service of the Government—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. SINGLETON: Petition of C. P. Tharp, of Marshall County; of W. B. Coates, of Madison County; of James B. Box, of Newton County; of F. B. A. Meador, of Ira A. Sprouse, of Wright A. Moore, and of T. M. Patrick, administrator, of Scott County, Mississippi, for payment of their war claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SPRINGER: Petition of the Constitution Club, of New York, in favor of the carriers' bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. STEPHENSON: Memorial of the William A. Nelson Post, No. 97, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Wisconsin, favoring the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SYMES: Papers relating to the claim of Rodman Chapman—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. VIELE: Petition of Professor J. S. Newberry, president of the New York Academy of Sciences, and 26 others, in behalf of the National Board of Health—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MILO WHITE: Petition of citizens of Minnesota and Wisconsin, in favor of placing salt fish on the free-list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the board of immigration of New Mexico, in favor of volunteers for Indian service—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 26, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

JOSEPH PAUL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate by the Commissioner of Agriculture of a deficiency appropriation to pay Joseph Paul for paving grounds of the Department of Agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT JUDGE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 28) to provide for the appointment and compensation of a district judge for the southern district of Alabama.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know that I desire to have this bill or the amendments read; but I think it proper to call the attention of the House to the fact that the bill as it went from the House was a private bill, proposing to authorize a new district judge in the State of Alabama and provide for his pay. In the Senate this bill has been converted by amendment into a public bill, providing for a general increase of the salaries of United States district judges. Now, the original bill may be right, and the proposition which has been attached to it may also be right; but if so, this is a wrong method of reaching a right result—a method, in my judgment, thoroughly indefensible.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The proposition with reference to the pay of United States judges has passed the Senate in other forms.

Mr. RANDALL. As the bill went from the House it was a private bill, providing for a single judge. It has now been made a general bill, affecting the salaries of judges generally.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The question of increasing the salaries of district judges of the United States is one which interests a good many members. Suppose we take up that question and see what the House thinks of it. I submit that would be a good plan, especially if we are in doubt about the proper reference.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I ask that the question be now taken up with a view to its consideration.

Mr. OATES. I move non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House for consideration except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I ask that the bill be now taken up.

The SPEAKER. That has been requested, and objection has been made.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, suppose the House should vote down the motion to refer the bill to a committee, would it not then come up for action?

The SPEAKER. If the House should vote down all motions to refer the bill, it would be before the House for action, the Chair supposes——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let us do that.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is subject to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. If a point of order should not be made——

Mr. REED, of Maine. What is the point of order?

The SPEAKER. That the bill involves an appropriation of money and must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then would it be in order to move at once to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The bill would go to the Committee of the Whole like any other bill against which a point of order might be made.

Mr. OATES. I desire to occupy one moment in explanation of the position of this bill and the general bill with regard to judges' salaries, a matter which some gentlemen do not seem to understand. I reported this bill from the Judiciary Committee. The bill which the Senate passed to increase the salaries of judges has also been reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee, and is now on the Calendar of the House. That proposition is improper as an amendment to this private bill. Hence I ask unanimous consent to move non-concurrence.

The SPEAKER. Various requests for unanimous consent have been objected to.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri demands the regular order, and under the rules of the House the bill goes to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. REED, of Maine. One word. This is not a private bill, but a public bill.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded, and the Chair has sent the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRE-EMPTION AND TIMBER-CULTURE LAWS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill, with the amendments of the Senate, will be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, this is a House bill with Senate amendments——

Mr. MORRISON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. PAYSON. But I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. When the Senate has amended a bill and asked a conference with the House, and has appointed conferees on the part of the Senate, is it not the regular order for the House to appoint conferees?

The SPEAKER. There is not yet any disagreeing vote of the two Houses on this bill. When matters of this kind have been reported back from any committee of the House with a recommendation of non-concurrence the Chair has been in the habit, as a matter of courtesy toward the other branch of the legislative department, of treating the question as one of quasi privilege and submitting it to the House. But the House in this case has not up to the present time disagreed to any action of the Senate, and hence there is nothing to confer about.

Mr. PAYSON. To expedite the matter, would it not be in order at this time to move to non-concur and agree to the conference.

The SPEAKER. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MORRISON and others objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The bill and amendments will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, who can report it back with their recommendation.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR MILLER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2732) to authorize the printing of eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John F. Miller; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be taken up and put upon its passage.

There was no objection.

The bill was considered, ordered to be read a third time, and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. MORROW moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WHITING, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. COMSTOCK, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. FREDERICK, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. SKINNER, until Monday, the 28th instant.

To Mr. DANIEL, for the remainder of this week, on account of important business.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE, EMPLOYÉS GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to submit a privileged report from a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 544) granting leaves of absence to employés of the Government Printing Office having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

E. BARKSDALE,
JAS. W. REID,
JNO. M. FARQUHAR,
Managers on the part of the House.

CHAS. F. MANDERSON,
JOS. R. HAWLEY,
A. P. GORMAN.
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. There appears to be no statement accompanying this report. The rules of the House require a statement in writing to accompany each report of a conference, such statement setting forth the effect of the adoption of the amendments in controversy between the two Houses.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I will ask unanimous consent to make the statement orally.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to that if the gentleman will file the report hereafter.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the gentleman will make an oral statement and accompany it hereafter with a written statement.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that this bill was originally introduced for the purpose of giving to the employés of the Government Printing Office a certain leave of absence, with pay, placing them measurably upon the same footing as the other Government employés. It is known that under existing laws the departmental employés have thirty days' leave of absence, with full pay, and this proposition as introduced in the House was to give the Government employés of the Printing Office leave of absence for fifteen days, which is simply a holiday for hard-worked laborers.

The first amendment of the Senate is a general one, designed to make the terms of the bill more specific as to the character of employés who are entitled to be embraced within its provisions. The principal amendment of the Senate, however, is in the following words:

Such employés as are engaged on piece-work shall receive the same rate of pay for the said fifteen days' leave as will be paid to day hands: Provided, That those regularly employed on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shall receive leave, with pay, at the close of each session, pro rata for the time of such employment.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect on and after the 1st day of July, 1886.

The object of this amendment is to classify the employés for the purpose of adjusting their allowances and to secure to the employés on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the benefits of the act. These amendments were inserted in the bill by the Senate, and agreed to after due consideration by the members of the committee of conference on the part of the House.

The statement subsequently submitted by Mr. BARKSDALE is as follows:

The effect of the conference report on this bill, if adopted, will be as follows:

The bill was designed to embrace all the Printing Office employés. The Senate, to make it explicit on this point, added the words in the fourth line, "whether employed by the piece or otherwise." As it passed the House it provided that "a leave of absence, with pay, not exceeding fifteen days in any one year, be allowed." The Senate has amended by adding "fiscal;" so that it will read "any one fiscal year." The third amendment, beginning after the word "designate," in the eighth line, is intended to classify the employés and to conform to the views of the proper accounting officer; and is further designed to secure to the employés on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the benefits of the bill. The fourth amendment prescribes that the act shall take effect on and after July 1, 1886.

E. BARKSDALE.
J. W. REID.
J. M. FARQUHAR.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to passing this bill. I do not know precisely the position in which it stands, but I object to providing by law that men shall be paid for doing nothing. In private life no such thing exists, where the pay of men is much less than it is in the Government service. Why is it that because a man is favored by Governmental employment, where he gets better pay than in private life, that he should be granted by law a leave of absence with pay for the full time that he is doing nothing? If he is employed at home or in private life he does not get any compensation for his absence, and if he leaves he does so at his own expense. What reason then is there, unless we intend to build up a class of officials with special and peculiar privileges, why we should undertake to begin paying men for doing nothing? It is bad enough that we allow this to be done in the Departments. It is a privilege that should not be extended. It is wrong there, and this is wrong; but because this is wrong in the Departments, because it is a practice wholly unwarranted by law, it seems to me that we should not undertake now to extend it by granting this privilege to other men to get paid for doing nothing.

I know, Mr. Speaker, how much men object to any criticisms upon their actions when they seek to plunder the Treasury; I care not what name they come here by, whether officials, officers, clerks, or otherwise. For one I do not propose to extend to any one American citizen any privileges which we do not extend to any other American citizen. When a man has undertaken according to contract to perform a duty he should be made to comply with the contract; and if they propose to take a holiday from their work, for which they get large compensation, let it be taken at their own expense.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The object of this bill is to place the employés of the Government Printing Office on a similar footing of privilege to that enjoyed by employés of the Departments. It occurs to me the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has not commenced with his proposition of reform at the right point. Why does he not propose to take away the privileges enjoyed by the Department employés? Why does he seek to deprive of the same privilege other employés who are as hard-worked as any who are in the service of the Government now? I say it is not in the line of economy at all that this privilege should be denied the employés of the Government Printing Office. Every one knows that a holiday is always needed by those who are employed in constant labor. It is simply a rest which enables the toiler to perform better work, and inures to the benefit of the Government. The gentleman from Texas himself, as a member of Congress, takes such a holiday with pay, and no one asserts that he belongs to a privileged class.

Mr. OATES. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BARKSDALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. Will any of these employés abandon their work or resign their positions if this privilege is not granted?

Mr. BARKSDALE. I do not see what relevancy that question has to the bill. No, sir, I assume they would not; but that is no reason why we should take advantage of their necessities and place them on a footing below that occupied by other employés of the Government.

This measure was deliberately considered by the committee. It was discussed for two hours in the House, and by an overwhelming majority this body decided to pass it without a division. At this stage of the session I will not take up the time of the House with further discussion. It does not confer a special privilege, as I have explained. I move the previous question, unless my colleague on the committee of conference, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR], desires to be heard.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish to say a word or two.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] had his time, and I believe I am entitled to the floor. As one of the members of the Printing Committee, I want to say that the matter of disagreement between the House and the Senate was as to this: The original bill was drawn with a provision providing that these regulations should be made by the Public Printer. The matter came before the First Comptroller, and he decided it was necessary to specify distinctly and in detail the various departments of the Printing Office whose employés should receive the benefit of the fifteen days. Amendments were put upon the bill in the Senate in accordance with that decision. The conferees on the part of both Houses have now agreed to the plan adopted by the Comptroller, so that no mistake shall be made in the pay-rolls, and that this shall be legal and not dependent upon any after decision of the Comptroller.

When gentlemen talk of rests and vacations they had better commence with Congress, and when they reform that they may take up the thirty days for clerks of the Departments, because these printers and workers in the Government Printing Office are the hardest-worked branch of the whole national service here. The bill only grants a leave of fifteen days, while all the others get thirty days. I think it is a very small privilege to ask.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to call the attention of the House to a fact which should be considered in this connection. These employés are not employed by the year or the month, but are engaged on piece-work. I understand they get good pay. When the gentleman tells me I ought to consent to this because the employés in the Departments have this leave it seems to me that is hardly a fair argument. The question is, are they entitled to it? Are they entitled to pay for doing nothing? Do men get it in private life? If not, why give it to men in the public service who are getting better pay than others similarly employed in private life?

I desire to move to amend by striking out the words "with pay."

The SPEAKER. This is a conference report and is not subject to amendment.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I understand the previous question has been moved, but I did not call the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to order, because I thought there should be a full explanation.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. BARKSDALE. I call for the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. Has the gentleman told us what is the amount involved in this?

Mr. FARQUHAR. About $90,000 annually.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on agreeing to the report, there were—ayes 74, noes 24.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 15 members voting therefor.

So (further count not being called for) the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. CRISP. I desire to submit a privileged report. I send to the desk the report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5874) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act), after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add as a new section section 4:

"SEC. 4. That section 21 of chapter 216, approved July 2, 1864, is hereby so amended as that the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying therein required to be paid shall become due and payable at and on the demand therefor made by the Secretary of the Interior as provided in section 2 of this act, and nothing in this act shall be construed or taken in any wise to affect or impair the right of Congress at any time hereafter further to alter, amend, or repeal the said act as in the opinion of Congress justice or the popular welfare may require or to impair or waive any right or remedy on the premises now existing in favor of the United States. This act shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal."

And the Senate agree to the same.

CHARLES F. CRISP,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Conferees on the part of the House of Representatives.
P. B. PLUMB,
E. C. WALTHALL,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

The statement by the conferees on the part of the House was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to House bill 5874 submit the following in explanation of their report:

The purpose of the bill, as it passed the House, was to enable the States and Territories to impose taxes upon the land granted to the Pacific railroads under the acts of 1862 and 1864, and to collect from the railroads the amount due the United States for the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the lands. The Senate amended the bill so as to make it general in its operations, applying to all land-grant railroads. The conferees on the part of the House, believing that such extension of the operation of the proposed act was right and proper, therefore agree to the amendments proposed by the Senate, with an amendment suggested in the conference committee, to wit, that section 21 of the act of 1864 granting to the Pacific railroads land and subsidy bonds be so amended as to declare that the cost of collecting, surveying, and conveying should be immediately due on demand therefor by the Secretary of the Interior.

Your committee do not concede that they are not presently due under existing law, but to remove any doubt upon that question the bill is amended by adding a proviso that they shall be due upon demand by the Secretary of the Interior.

Section 4 further reserves, in its fullest extent, the right to amend the acts of 1864, 1878, or the present act.

The whole purpose of the bill as now reported to the House is to, first, secure the collection of these railroads of the amount due by them to the Government for surveying, selecting, and conveying their land grants; and, secondly, to grant to the States and Territories in which these lands lie the right to tax the same, notwithstanding the Government has not been paid, the bill containing a proviso that the amount due the Government for the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying shall remain a first lien upon the land, to be paid by purchaser at tax-sale in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may provide.

CHARLES F. CRISP.
JAMES D. RICHARSON.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, unless some gentleman desires further explanation I move that the report be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question, to which I think the report does not furnish a complete answer. The original bill applied to the Union Pacific alone. By the terms of the bill as amended it applies to all the land-grant roads. My question is, whether there is anything in the provisions of the bill as amended which, by implication or otherwise, would confirm any land grants.

Mr. CRISP. The committee have been very careful to guard against any danger of that character, but perhaps the most satisfactory answer to the question of the gentleman from Indiana would be the reading of the amendment as proposed by the Senate and as agreed upon by the conferees.

Mr. PAYSON. May I suggest to the gentleman from Georgia, as this is an important matter, that the bill as amended had better be read at length.

The bill as amended was read.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to the first part of the proposed new section, and to inquire whether there are any lands surveyed by these companies that have not been earned, because if there are any lands that have been surveyed but to which the companies are not entitled, it seems to me that as the provision stands now there is nothing to prevent the companies from purchasing those lands at tax-sales and thus getting a title that they would not otherwise get.

Mr. CRISP. In response to the question of the gentleman from Texas, I will state that the first section provides that lands to which the companies are entitled and which have been surveyed shall be subject to taxation. If the companies are not entitled to the land—and by this bill we do not propose or pretend to pass upon that question—if they are not entitled to the lands, then under this bill the lands would not be taxable. The sole purpose of the bill, sir, is to enable, in the first place, the proper officers of the Government to collect from all land-grant railways the amount of money paid out by the United States for their benefit in selecting, surveying, and conveying their lands. As an incident to that, apprehending that there might be some delay about the collection of this money, the bill provides that the States and the Territories in which the lands lie—lands to which the railroads are entitled, lands that they have earned—that those States and Territories may subject the lands to taxation, provided that the cost of selecting, surveying, and conveying shall remain a first lien upon the lands, to be paid by the purchaser at the tax-sale in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. In the event that the Government has collected from an individual purchaser at tax-sale the cost of selecting, surveying, and conveying the particular tract which he purchased, then, if the Government afterward by suit collects that cost from the company, the Government is to reimburse the purchaser at tax-sale who had previously paid the cost. This, Mr. Speaker, is a full explanation of this part of the bill. Neither the committee nor the bill undertakes to pass upon any question of the liability of the land to forfeiture, or upon any question of its liability to the United States in any other respect. On the contrary, the bill expressly provides that, as against the railroads and as against the purchaser at tax-sale, all the rights and all the remedies of the United States shall remain, after the passage of this act, as full, complete, and ample as they are now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow that third section to be again reported in connection with what he has just said?

Mr. CRISP. If there be no objection, at the request of the gentleman from Indiana, I ask that the section be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That this act shall not affect the right of the Government to declare or enforce forfeiture of any lands so granted, but all the rights of the United States to said lands, or to any interest therein, shall be and remain as if this act had not passed, except as to the lien mentioned in the first section hereof.

Mr. CRISP. I presume the gentleman from Indiana wants an explanation of the last clause, referring to the lien mentioned in the first section.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; I do not understand that.

Mr. CRISP. Well, Mr. Speaker, we understand the effect of that to be this: Under the law as it is now the security which the Government undertakes to hold, to enforce the collection of the cost of selecting, surveying, and conveying, is the title. Under this act, if it passes, the security that the Government undertakes to hold for the collection of the cost of selecting, surveying, and conveying is a lien upon the land. That is what that provision means. It has no reference to any of the rights of the Government as to the forfeiture of these lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. So that the conferees upon the part of the House as well as on the part of the Senate are satisfied that this provision is broad enough to render it impossible that this act should by possibility, by implication or otherwise, impair the right of the Government to declare the forfeiture of any of these lands.

Mr. CRISP. The conferees have no doubt upon that point. The section that has just been read is not the only section of the bill that bears upon that question. There is a provision in the first section bearing upon the rights of the United States as to mortgages and liens.

Mr. HOLMAN. That applies only to the Union Pacific system, I think.

Mr. CRISP. No, sir; as it now stands in the bill it applies to all the land-grant railroads. I will ask the Clerk to read the section.

Mr. REAGAN. Before that section is read I wish to call attention again to the question I before put: If there are lands which have been surveyed but not earned, may not the railroad companies themselves buy them in and thereby acquire the title? It was suggested that the bill as agreed to in this conference report applied only to lands which had been earned, but looking at the first section that does not seem to be its language.

The Clerk read section 1 of the Senate amendment, as follows:

That no lands granted to any railroad corporation by any act of Congress shall be exempt from taxation by States, Territories, and municipal corporations on account of the lien of the United States upon the same for the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same, or because no patent has been issued therefor; but this provision shall not apply to lands unsurveyed: Provided, That any such lands sold for taxes shall be taken by the purchaser subject to the lien for costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying, to be paid in such manner by the purchaser as the Secretary of the Interior may by rule provide, and to all liens of the United States, all mortgages of the United States, and all rights of the United States in respect of such lands: Provided further, That this act shall apply only to lands situated opposite to and conterminous with completed portions of said road, and in organized counties: Provided further, That at any sale of lands under the provisions of this act the United States may become a preferred purchaser, and in such case the lands sold shall be restored to the public domain and disposed of as provided by the laws relating thereto.

Mr. CRISP. That section, as the gentleman from Indiana and the House will observe, undertakes additionally to preserve not only all mortgages and liens of the United States, but all rights of the United States in respect to those lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. As against the taxing power of the States and Territories.

Mr. CRISP. It reserves all rights that the United States Government now has as to the lands, without respect to the action of States or Territories as to taxation. And the bill expressly provides that every right we now have with respect to these lands shall continue to the same extent and degree as if this act had not been passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. One other question: If the Government exacts from a railroad corporation the cost of survey and location, and it is paid, upon lands now subject to forfeiture, to what extent might the Government be held to be estopped by virtue of this act from asserting the right of forfeiture?

Mr. CRISP, I can only say that if the English language can make it clear, it is the intention and design of this act to leave the railroad companies and the Government of the United States in regard to their respective rights in the very same position after the passage of this act and after the collection of these costs as at present.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then under the provisions of this bill no estoppel can occur by reason of any act the Government may do touching the enforcement of this lien.

Mr. CRISP. I submit that the doctrine of estoppel cannot apply where it is expressly provided that it shall not apply. In the face of such a provision as this bill contains the doctrine of estoppel could not by any construction, however forced, have any application.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one word as to the question asked by my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]. He inquired whether anything in this act would prevent the railroad companies themselves from becoming the purchasers of this land at tax-sales. I submit that it is not in our power to prevent their becoming purchasers if the land be sold at tax-sale. I submit it is no concern of ours whether they become purchasers or whether a stranger is the purchaser. Either party will buy subject to all the rights of the United States.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And would have to pay our lien.

Mr. CRISP. Yes, the lien of the Government must be paid.

Mr. REAGAN. I am not concerned that the companies shall not become purchasers, but that they shall not become purchasers of unearned lands.

Mr. CRISP. Conceding for the sake of argument—and it can only be conceded for that purpose, because such a construction is not sustained by the bill—that unearned lands would be taxable, I ask the gentleman from Texas what any railroad company or any individual that might buy would gain by a purchase of that sort. The purchaser would buy subject in the first place to the lien for the cost of survey, and subject, in the second place, to every right that the United States Government now has.

Mr. REAGAN. I apprehend I have not made myself understood. The question which I submitted was this: If any railroad company has surveyed lands which were not earned——

Mr. CRISP. The railroad company does not make the survey; it is made by the Government.

Mr. REAGAN. It is immaterial who makes the survey? If on these lines lands have been surveyed which have not been earned and those lands are offered for sale and the railroad company buys them, paying the taxes, may not the company in that way by simply paying the taxes get a title to lands which it has never earned?

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, they do not get titles, because this act provides that every right which exists now shall continue to exist against any purchaser.

Mr. MILLS. The right of forfeiture among the rest.

Mr. CRISP. Yes; the right of forfeiture among the rest. It is immaterial who is the purchaser. The right to forfeit after the passage of this act if it exists now, and every right if language can preserve it. Every right as to forfeiture we have now we will have then.

Mr. LAIRD. May I ask the gentleman from Georgia a question?

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CRISP. I have promised to yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

Mr. LAIRD. I notice, Mr. Speaker, that the bill states taxes shall not be collected except where the land is located in organized counties. Now in the West, for instance, as in Nebraska, Kansas, and Colorado, a constitutional device of this kind exists: Where a county is unorganized it is attached to a county that is organized for judicial and revenue purposes. Of course that is an additional charge to the county to which it is attached. And when you lay off Union Pacific and railroad-grant lands to be located in organized counties they can recover taxes on them, but they can not under this bill recover taxes on lands in unorganized counties, although, as I have already stated, the organized county to which unorganized counties may be attached have additional charges to bear in consequence of that connection.

Mr. CRISP. I think the gentleman will find that all provided for in the bill.

Mr. LAIRD. I suggest to the gentleman from Georgia there should be some provision added to this bill to cover this point, making an exception in such cases—except where attached to organized counties for revenue and judicial purposes.

Mr. CRISP. The question presented by the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. Speaker, was considered by the Committee on Pacific Railroads of this House, and was presented by myself in the House when the original bill was considered and passed by the House.

The objection to the proposition the gentleman suggests is this: There are portions of this territory that are in what are called unorganized counties. This vast territory in unorganized counties is put under the nearest organized county. It is attached to the organized county contiguous to it for the purpose of the administration of the criminal law and for the purpose of the administration of the civil law. But the committee were of the opinion, inasmuch as this taxing power we proposed to concede was only at least temporary in its character, that the provisions of the bill would be sufficient to answer the just complaint which comes up from every Territory.

I say temporary in its character, Mr. Speaker, because, as is well known, it is not in the power of Congress to determine what property shall be taxed in a State. That is the sovereign right of the State, except where the sovereignty of the United States, as the owner of the property, prevents its taxation by the other sovereign. The very moment we collect the cost of surveying and conveying this land the State where the land lies may tax it as it pleases. We have neither the right nor, I trust, the inclination to interfere with such a sovereign right of a State.

Now, we thought it was not exactly the right thing to do to tax the land lying in unorganized counties by organized counties which had temporarily the taxing power. Let me explain. A county in Nebraska might have a territory large enough to make half a dozen counties attached to it for certain purposes, for the purpose of the administration of the criminal and civil law. That county we thought ought not to have the right so long as we are dealing with the rights of States to tax it, ought not to have the right to require the payment on land which lay for instance a distance of 100 or 200 miles from the organized county, ought not to have the right to lay a tax for instance to build a schoolhouse in the organized county to which it was attached, ought not to have the right to collect a tax for the building of a court-house in the organized county, ought not to be taxed to carry on the affairs of that organized county, and therefore we thought in waiving our right to tax we would only waive it as to land in organized counties.

Mr. LAIRD. Just a word, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman from Georgia indulges in no new doctrine. Of course the State of Nebraska could not tax the paramount title of the United States. Nobody pretends that. The argument presented, therefore, is a distinction without a difference. An organized county could not lay a tax upon a territory attached to it for judicial purposes for the raising of revenue to be devoted to its own municipal improvements. It could not build a court-house or a school-house out of a tax raised on property which did not belong to it for purposes of taxation, or which was not included in its organization. All that it can do, therefore, at the utmost is to make the unorganized territory which is attached to it for judicial and revenue purposes pay the burden which springs from the business and expenditures of that unorganized territory. It can not go beyond it. It would, therefore, be unfair for instance in the county of Hitchcock, having 24 square miles of territory, perhaps each alternate section of 10 miles of which is made up of railroad land grants, to which is connected the county of Dundy, having 50 square miles of territory, each alternate section of which is railroad property, that this county of Hitchcock shall have the expenses of Dundy County, unorganized, paid out of the tax upon the property of Hitchcock County, organized, when perhaps it has two or three times as much tax for its necessary local or municipal expenses, which are germane to its territory, as Hitchcock County.

Mr. CRISP. I should be glad to yield to gentlemen for further discussion of this question, but having already occupied much more time than I intended, if no other gentleman desires to ask a question I shall be compelled to ask the previous question.

Mr. OATES. Before that I trust the gentleman will answer my question asked some time ago.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman has any question I shall be glad to answer.

Mr. OATES. This bill, as I understand, applies only to the earned lands. Is it not a solecism then upon its face to require them to pay taxes upon lands which are not theirs? How can the Government, in other words, require a tax to be paid upon lands which the Government claims as its own?

Mr. CRISP. Why, we are requiring no railroad company to pay any tax. We have no right to deal with the subject of taxation except that we propose to waive our immunity and let the States tax.

Mr. OATES. That is the effect of the question I asked, as to the extent of the waiver. Now to what extent does this go? You waive the right of forfeiture. Does that mean a temporary waiver? Does it apply to past delinquencies only? Does it mean for the past acts of the company, their failures to perform the duties which they undertook to perform, or those which may transpire some time hereafter?

Mr. CRISP. If I gather the scope of the question of the honorable gentleman from Alabama the answer is plain. For a great number of years many thousands of acres of land that have been earned by the railroad companies under the land grants or charters of the Government giving them land grants have been by these companies and their assignees held in certain States and Territories free from taxation. When the municipality of a State or county seeks to tax such lands, the reply is that the legal title is in the Federal Government and therefore they can not levy a tax. But these railroad companies are indebted to the United States in as far as this bill deals with them only to the amount due for the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the land grants thus awarded to them as they earned it; that is all. We propose by this bill, Mr. Speaker, simply to require them to pay to the United States the amount thus due, and, in the mean time, apprehending from the past course of these companies that there may be some delay incident to litigation, inasmuch as we can do so, securely waiving no ultimate rights, we simply waive our immunity.

Mr. OATES. The declaration then practically is this: Here are your lands; you must pay taxes or we will subject them to sale.

Mr. CRISP. The declaration is, Mr. Speaker, if I understand it, that we propose to collect from these companies what they are indebted to the Government for the cost of surveying, selecting, &c.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. And in the mean time they pay the tax.

Mr. CRISP. In the mean time we waive our immunity. Now let us see if the position of the gentleman from Alabama is logical. The bill says that as to every right that we have got now we shall have the same right after the passage of the act or after the sale for taxes. Every right that we now possess, the right of forfeiture or any other right, still remains with the Government. Well, now, how can this act militate against our right if it expressly says that it shall not? The gentleman from Alabama intimates that the declaration that the States may tax the land is a declaration that the railroads are entitled to the lands. How does that follow? We do not declare what particular property is taxable. We do not undertake to deal with the question of legal title. We do not undertake to say that if the State should tax a piece of property as the property of A that that makes it A's property; and I do not know of any rule or construction by which such a conclusion could be arrived at. But we do expressly say that whatever rights the Government has now we will have then.

If gentlemen do not desire to ask any further questions I demand the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia demands the previous question.

Mr. LAIRD. I trust the gentleman will allow me to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. There can not be an amendment to a conference report.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT SAN LUIS OBISPO.

Mr. CLARDY. I present the report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5862) providing for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at San Luis Obispo, Cal., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 17, after the word "bill," insert the word "provided." In line 18 strike out the word "which" and insert the words "the structure;" and the Senate agree to the same.

MARTIN L. CLARDY,
A. B. IRION,
ROBERT T. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the House.
S. J. R. MCMILLAN,
J. N. DOLPH,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the conference on the part of the House was read, as follows:

In the matter of conference on Senate amendments to bill (H. R. 5862) entitled "An act providing for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at San Luis Obispo, Cal.," the conferees on the part of the House report that the amendment embraces the substance of certain bills establishing light-houses passed by the House at this session of Congress, and in addition an item authorizing the appropriation of $2,000 for the purchase of a right of way from Cape Orford light-station to the town of Cape Orford, Oregon; also, one establishing a light-house at Two Harbors, Minn., at a cost of not more than $10,000; also, one establishing a light-house on Gould Island, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, at a cost of not more than $10,000; also one establishing a light-station at North Point, to take the place of the old one near Milwaukee, on Milwaukee Bay, Lake Michigan, Wisconsin, at a cost not to exceed $15,000; also, for the purchase of a site and the construction of a first-order coast light-house at Cape Meares, Tillamook Bay, Oregon, at a sum not to exceed $60,000.

MARTIN L. CLARDY.
A. B. IRION.
ROBERT T. DAVIS.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1357) referring to the Court of Claims the claims for property seized by General Johnston on the Utah expedition for examination and report.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. HALL. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield for two or three moments that I may call up a bill for present consideration.

Mr. RANDALL. I will move that the committee rise ten minutes before the hour for adjournment so as to give the gentleman the opportunity to call up the bill at that time. Pending the motion I have made I ask unanimous consent to allow the session of to-day to continue till 6 o'clock to avoid having a night session. I have conferred with a number of members, and they seem to agree that that would be the better course.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend the session of the House to-day to 6 o'clock.

Mr. PETERS. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. We have lost an hour already to-day from the consideration of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. RYAN. I hope the objection will not be insisted on.

Mr. PETERS. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. WELLBORN. I ask unanimous consent that the order setting apart to-day for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Indian Affairs may be made a continuous order from day to day.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. REAGAN in the chair), and resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANDALL. It will be remembered that amendments in relation to the printing of one and two dollar United States notes and also one and two dollar silver certificates were made to certain paragraphs; but no provision was made at the time for the execution by appropriation of those provisions. I gave the assurance to the House that I would, as soon as I was able to do so correctly, move to insert the necessary sum of money. I ask now to offer the amendments which I send to the desk to cover those matters. There are three amendments. I desire that they shall be taken together to save time.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 277 and 273, strike out the sum proposed and insert "$327,740."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that that amount has already been placed in the bill on motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. RANDALL. Let the Clerk read the two other amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 280, strike out "fifty" and insert "eighty;" in line 283, strike out "one hundred and seventy" and insert "two hundred;" and in lieu of the sum proposed in lines 286 and 287 insert "$307,380."

In lines 292 and 293, strike out the sum proposed and insert "$141,820."

Mr. RANDALL. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Superintendent of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which I think it is not necessary to read.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING,
June 25, 1886.

SIR: It is estimated by the Treasurer of the United States that in the event of the final passage of the amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill providing for the issue of United States notes and silver certificates of small denominations, which were adopted by the House in Committee of the Whole yesterday, there will be required during the fiscal year 1887 6,000,000 sheets of United States notes and silver certificates. To produce this number of sheets it will be necessary to increase the appropriations for the support of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing as follows:

"For salaries of all necessary clerks and employés, and for labor (by the day, piece, or contract), including labor of workmen skilled in engraving, transferring, and other specialties necessary for carrying on the work of engraving notes, bonds, and other securities or obligations of the United States, and national-bank notes, the pay for such labor to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, at rates not exceeding the rates usually paid for such work, $327,740, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"For wages of not more than one hundred and eighty plate-printers, at piece rates, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of not more than two hundred printers' assistants at $1.25 cents a day each when employed, and for royalty for use of steam plate-printing machines, $307,380, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That any part of this sum may be used for purchasing and operating new and improved plate-printing presses.

"For engravers, printers, and other materials, except distinctive paper, and for miscellaneous expenses, $141,820, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The total of these amounts is	$776,940
The aggregate amount appropriated by the pending bill for these purposes is	689,546
The increase asked for is therefore	87,394

The estimates originally submitted, and printed on pages 197 and 198 of the Book of Estimates, provided for the printing of 6,000,000 sheets of United States notes and certificates. The estimates now submitted for the same quantity of work conform to those originally submitted, except that there is a reduction of $21,000 in the estimate for plate-printing, of twenty in the number of plate-printers, and of eighteen in the number of printers' assistants, in consequence of the contemplated introduction of six additional steam plate-printing presses.

Very respectfully,

E. O. GRAVES, Chief of Bureau.

HON. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
U. S. House of Representatives.

Mr. BLAND. Is there provision made in regard to the distinctive paper?

Mr. RANDALL. I will have another amendment as to that. The chief of the bureau states that after conference with the Treasurer he has fixed the amounts in the amendment at what will be necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to submit these amendments at portions of the bill which have been passed over.

There was no objection.

The amendments were adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I now want to complete this matter of the ones and twos, and offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 664, strike out "$12,000" and insert "$30,000."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRISP took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 67) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter.

The announcement was received with applause and counter-manifestations of disapproval.

Mr. CUTCHEON. May the Lord have mercy on his soul. [Laughter.]

The message further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7481) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MAHONE, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. CALL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment I have offered is to the paragraph in relation to distinctive paper for United States securities, the consideration of which was passed over. It provides for an increase of the appropriation from $12,000 to $30,000.

Mr. RYAN. This increase is for the purpose of purchasing distinctive paper for the ones and twos in exchange for the mutilated currency, and the one and two dollar silver certificates. Now the estimate of the Department for the ones and twos in exchange for mutilated currency is $22,000, and that would leave but $8,000 for the one and two dollar silver certificates.

Mr. RANDALL. A word will explain it. The original estimates which the gentleman has given included a number of employés who are not included here. I have a telegram from the Department stating that this is sufficient.

Mr. BLAND. Would it not be better to specify?

Mr. RANDALL. We never specify. I ask that the telegram be read.

The telegram was read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 26, 1886.

J. C. COURTS, Esq.:

Referring to your telegram of this morning, I beg to say that an increase of $18,000 will be needed, making a total of $30,000 for the item "distinctive paper for United States securities."

J. W. WHELPLEY,
Assistant Treasurer United States.

Mr. RANDALL. My inquiry was in reference to the amount of money to be added to the appropriation for paper in view of the amendments to the bill.

Mr. RYAN. The estimate of the Department for paper for ones and twos in exchange for mutilated currency was $22,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, they say now that $18,000 is sufficient.

Mr. RYAN. They say now that $18,000 is sufficient for paper for ones and twos in exchange for mutilated currency, and also for the one and two dollar silver certificates.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; they so state.

Mr. BLAND. The five-dollar silver certificates are included also, I suppose?

Mr. RANDALL. Just the amendments as they are in the bill. Those amendments were referred to in my inquiry to the Department, and this telegram is the answer.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman if in his telegram he spoke specifically of the silver certificates, ones, twos, and fives?

Mr. RANDALL. The Weaver and the Bland amendments were referred to distinctly by name in my telegram. I will have the telegram read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Hon. C. N. JORDAN, Treasurer:

Referring to item on page 28 of sundry civil bill, "Distinctive paper for United States securities," Mr. RANDALL desires that you will inform him before 11 a. m. what increase, if any, should be made in this item because of the Weaver and Bland amendments which have been adopted by the House.

J. C. COURTS, Clerk, &c.

Mr. CANNON. I think the Department must have misunderstood the inquiry.

Mr. RANDALL. I guess not.

Mr. CANNON. Because it will take a hundred thousand dollars for this paper.

Mr. RANDALL. We have a large quantity of paper on hand now.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit me, I suggest that he repeat his inquiry. I do not suppose there is any doubt about the matter, but it might be well to repeat the inquiry.

Mr. RANDALL. The officers of the Department understand their business, and I understand mine.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I think so.

Mr. RANDALL. There is a large quantity of paper on hand now; six million sheets, I believe. There is no mistake about the matter; but I will make further inquiry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment offered yesterday by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERMENTROUT], upon which the point of order was made by his colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after "dollars," in line 686:

"Provided, That $3,000 thereof shall be expended for the recoinage, dollar for dollar, into standard silver dollars or into subsidiary coins of the United States, trade-dollars which may be presented by the holders thereof at the various mints of the United States, for a period of six months after the passage of this act."

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Mr. Chairman, in proposing the pending amendment it is not my intention to consume precious time to open a debate on the trade-dollar; but, sir, during the current week we have had very earnest contentions about the currency, the greenback, the silver dollar, and the silver certificate, pensions, internal revenue, and the tariff, and while every cause had its advocates, not a voice was raised in favor of the redemption of the trade-dollar. Yet, if I may judge from the past sentiments of the House on the subject, it is entirely favorable to the passage of such legislation. Both in the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses the House sanctioned the measure. Such legislation has been recommended by every Secretary of the Treasury, other officers of that Department, and the President himself. There is a popular demand for it, and the Committee on Coins and Coinage have reported favorably a bill that seeks to accomplish the purpose. Hardly a day passes that some member does not receive a communication in favor of it. In some districts, as in my own, public meetings have been held by the people, by boards of trade, and other bodies—meetings composed of all classes of people, the merchant, the farmer, the banker, and the tradesman, asking for this legislation. I will in this connection cause to be spread upon the RECORD as part of my remarks the proceedings of such a meeting held in Reading. A committee from my district, and probably from others, have taken the pains to come to this city and wait upon your Speaker, the chairman and members of the committee having charge of such legislation, and other members of this House. From one and all they have received assurances of support.

These facts render argument in favor of this amendment unnecessary; but it makes it none the less my duty to call attention to this important matter, and yet one that in my judgment will require little or no time to dispose of. Here is a favorable opportunity to fulfill what appears to be a universal desire. It seems to me it should be agreeable to the members of this House to skip questions upon which they disagree and vote measures agreeable to all. I am aware that the amendment is perhaps obnoxious to a point of order, in that it is ingrafting new legislation upon an appropriation bill. If there be no insuperable objection to such a course, I hope the point of order will not be made. It is a just proposition. The delay or refusal of Congress to grant this legislation is not only a stain upon the public faith, but works a great wrong to a large number of our citizens who have taken these coin in honest trade at their par value. I know that this is a fact. Some gentlemen dread contraction of the currency. Favorable legislation will put into circulation millions of the trade-dollars kept hoarded in the faith that nothing can disturb, that the Government will make good to the holders the coin upon which it has stamped its legend and the motto "In God we trust." Other gentlemen complain of the burdens of taxation and manifest great zeal on the subject. If legislation of the character proposed in this amendment and also covered in H. R. 8330, to which I have above adverted, is enacted, you will lift a great burden from the backs of many meritorious people, and you will restore at once to the people in the neighborhood of $2,000,000 unjustly taken from them. This statement is made upon the basis that there are about ten million trade-dollars out and that they are worth about 80 cents in the market. But the House should act promptly, so that the Senate may have time, if they will, to give the subject consideration. In case it is not deemed expedient that this legislation should be enacted as a part of this bill, I hope that what I have said may pave the way for speedy action on the bill for the redemption of trade-dollars reported by the Committee on Coins and Coinage. I ask leave to print as part of my remarks some documents bearing on the subject:

This is to certify that at a meeting of holders of "trade-dollars," held in the city of Reading, Pa., on Tuesday evening, April 20, 1886, at which the sum of $275,000 in trade-dollars (held by merchants, business men, farmers, mechanics, banking institutions, and others) was represented, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas large sums of money in so-called trade-dollars are held by the farmers and business men of this section, hundreds of thousands of dollars of these coins having been put in circulation throughout the Schuylkill Valley; and

"Whereas the trade-dollar when issued and allowed to go into circulation was a legal tender to the amount of $5 and readily passed: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That we call upon the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State to use their most earnest efforts in behalf of the early redemption of the trade-dollar, and thus sustain the honor and integrity of the nation;

"Resolved, That a refusal on the part of the Government to redeem these coins dollar for dollar would amount to a virtual repudiation of its obligations, and such a course can not be too severely condemned."

Certified from the minutes.

ISAAC W. KEIM,
President of the Meeting.

Attest:

CYRUS T. FOX, Secretary.

THE TRADE-DOLLAR.

The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to whom were referred the bills (H. R. 1497, 1749, 2057, 2069, 2082, and 2138) relating to the retirement, redemption, and recoinage of the trade-dollar, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report them back to the House, and recommend that they do lie upon the table, and that in lieu thereof the bill accompanying this report, entitled "A bill for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar," be substituted and passed.

The bill here reported is substantially the same as that which passed the House April 1, 1884.

The trade-dollar, by the act which authorized it, was made a legal tender in sums of $5. By a subsequent law (see act July 22, 1876) it was deprived of its legal-tender quality. It is said that the coinage of the trade-dollar was for purpose of export to Asiatic countries. Very many of these coins have gone abroad. It is estimated that the amount which would probably be presented for redemption will not be greatly in excess of $10,000,000 out of a total coinage of $35,965,924. It is thought that the amount now in this country is about $7,000,000, and that no very large amount of that which has been exported would be returned to the United States. It is difficult to enact any law upon the subject which might not in some degree operate to the advantage of those who may have purchased these coins for speculation; but it is believed that many of them have found their way into the hands of people who did not receive them for such purpose, and that the passage of the accompanying bill will serve as well as any other measure in the solution of the matter. It will certainly have the desired effect of eliminating an anomaly from our system of silver coinage.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. If it is not deemed expedient to put this amendment on this bill——

Mr. RANDALL. It is not a question of expediency, it is a question of order.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Well, if that point is made of course I must yield to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of assistant custodians and janitors: For pay of assistant custodians and janitors, including all personal services in connection with all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department outside of the District of Columbia, $400,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall so apportion this sum as to prevent a deficiency therein.

Mr. BYNUM. I move to amend by striking out in line 710 "$400,000" and inserting "$474,000."

In support of this amendment I desire to call attention to the fact that this appropriation goes to that class of Government employés who are peculiarly laboring men—custodians of public buildings, or what might properly be termed janitors. In 1885 there was a deficiency of $19,000 upon the appropriation for this purpose. I do not remember the exact amount of the appropriation. That deficiency is still unpaid, and will no doubt be appropriated for in the deficiency bill. The appropriation for 1886 was $300,000; and upon that there is a deficiency of $60,000 to be made up. Not only that; the present Secretary of the Treasury about a year ago was compelled to make a reduction of about 30 per cent. in this branch of the service. That reduction is still in force; and if this increase which I now propose be not made, the officers will be compelled, as they state, to make another reduction. As these reductions fall upon the class known as laboring men, I trust the House will agree to the amendment.

There is now employed in the post-office at Indianapolis an engineer who took that employment a little more than a year ago. Within thirty days after he took charge of the building he had his salary cut down, and he has ever since been laboring for $10 a month less than he received at the Atlas Engine Works, where he was previously employed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, when this paragraph was read I rose to make a point of order on the concluding clause, in lines 710 to 712, but the Chair recognized the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] to offer an amendment. I wish to reserve a point of order on that portion of the paragraph.

Several MEMBERS. Too late!

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair it is too late now to make a point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. The provision is not subject to a point of order at any rate; the very same provision is in the existing law.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The words to which I refer provide that "the Secretary of the Treasury shall so apportion this sum as to prevent any deficiency therein." Now, is there any existing law requiring that to be done?

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that the point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment having been offered and discussed a point of order comes too late.

Mr. RANDALL. In reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM], I wish to state that the amount appropriated for this item for the current year was $300,000. There is, as alleged, a deficiency of $54,000, of which $15,000 is for incidental expenses. The Department is now running this branch of the service upon a basis of $350,000. We have given an increase of $50,000 beyond that, making the amount $400,000, which we believe adequate; and I understood that the Department was content.

Mr. BYNUM. I desire to call attention to a fact, which I before omitted to state, that there are sixteen new buildings requiring janitors.

Mr. RANDALL. We considered that in granting the $50,000 increase.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] that I presume the Department will get along with this appropriation of $400,000. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has said, the appropriation for the current year was only $300,000; and if you will read the law making that appropriation you will find that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, with his usual ingenuity, put in strong words and clauses to prevent the expenditure of any more money than was appropriated for the current year. When the present administration came into the kingdom they did (following, no doubt, so far as possible, the direction of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as expressed in the law) make reductions all along the line. They reduced the force 30 per cent. all round. It is true there was some complaint that public buildings at different points were not properly swept and kept in order; but the administration made the reductions; and the Democratic press throughout the length and breadth of the country took up the cry everywhere and said, "What a good thing reform is!"

But notwithstanding the cast-iron provision, as strong as the English language could make it, to hold this expenditure down to $300,000, we find that in the teeth of this provision this administration has expended all that appropriation and $50,000 or $60,000 additional, which comes in as a deficiency. So that this administration has had the glory of a reduction of 30 per cent., and at the same time, violating a law drawn with the astuteness and ingenuity of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, has piled up this deficiency of nearly $60,000. And we are going to appropriate for it. So that upon the one hand the administration gets the credit for its economy, and on the other hand it gets this money in excess of the appropriation.

Now, it is true, as the gentleman from Indiana says, that a large number of new buildings are to be provided for; it is true, I suspect, that $400,000 will not be sufficient. But that will not be any difficulty. Your administration will go on and spend the $400,000, will drive through any provision of law intended to restrict the expenditure to that amount, will create a deficiency; and no doubt the appropriation for that deficiency will in due time be made.

Mr. RANDALL. When we reach the end of the current year under the new administration this branch of the service will have spent $350,000 or thereabouts, and a large number of new buildings have been included. Yet as compared with the prior year under the gentleman's administration when there was spent $394,000, I think the figures will justify the remark I have made that we have corrected at least some extravagance.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I am not complaining or charging this expenditure is extravagant; but I did say this, that in reference to some of these buildings they have not been properly cared for.

Mr. RANDALL. I differ with the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to a proclamation he made along with the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] and others on that side of the House when we were considering the Navy bill, in which they said they would not consent to the making of any deficiency. Yet the gentleman confesses to a deficiency of from fifty to sixty thousand dollars. I am not complaining of that, but simply wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact.

Mr. PETERS. Had we not better have an investigation of that? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. If pro forma amendments are withdrawn the Chair will submit the question on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM].

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the committee I desire to say a word in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. My object in submitting the amendment was not for the purpose of securing any political advantage, but to call attention to the fact that the appropriation for last year was so low the present administration, in order to keep within the law, was compelled to cut down the wages of the laboring men some 30 per cent. I put the question fairly to the House to determine whether the members will allow the amount to remain where it is, which in all probability will compel a further reduction of the wages of these laborers, or consent to increase the amount to the full estimate, so that the wages of these employés may be restored to what they were before the reduction was made.

Mr. RANDALL. These are not laboring men.

Mr. BYNUM. Of course they are salaried men, but they are performing the duties of day laborers. They are janitors, but they are the representative men of the laboring class in the employment of the Government. They are the only class of Government employés taken from the ranks of the laboring classes, and I insist that if there is to be economy practiced by this House it should not be at the expense of this class.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM].

Mr. CANNON. I withdraw my pro forma amendment to strike out the last word and renew it by moving to strike out the last two words, and I do it, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of saying again to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that while it is true only $400,000 is given, nevertheless that is about $50,000 more than the appropriation for the current year. I say the precedent is such on the part of this administration of having expended $50,000 more than was appropriated that I have no doubt they will do it again.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope they will not, for I believe the amount appropriated is entirely sufficient.

Mr. CANNON. They spent $50,000 more than was appropriated this year, and I believe I am justified in saying they will expend more the next year than has been appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the pro forma amendments will be considered as withdrawn, and the question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM].

Mr. BYNUM demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes 52.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I now raise the question of order on this paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. The point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is too late.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Why?

The CHAIRMAN. Because the paragraph has been under consideration and the committee has taken a vote on an amendment to it.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I gave notice at once of my intention to raise the point of order. I stated to the Chair I raised the point of order on this paragraph as soon as it was read. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] rose at the same time and submitted an amendment and he was recognized by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman if he had a point of order to submit should have presented it before the consideration of the paragraph had been entered upon. It would have been better at that moment to have interrupted the gentleman from Indiana in submitting his amendment.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I am too modest a man to do anything of that kind. [Laughter.] In a general way I said that I would reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from Ohio or he would have recognized the point of order when it was raised.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. As soon as the paragraph was read, Mr. Chairman, I gave notice that I would raise the point of order and that I would reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order must be made before the paragraph has been considered, and of course if the point of order is not made until after the paragraph has been discussed, it necessarily comes too late.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I had no point of order to the question he was discussing, nor to that part of the paragraph; but I had to the part not yet reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule is that the point of order must be made upon the paragraph before it is discussed. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana related to a part of the paragraph preceding the part to which the gentleman from Ohio desired to make the point of order, yet still the point must have been made on the paragraph before any of it was discussed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Then I will endeavor hereafter to secure recognition in ample time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to recognize the gentleman.

Mr. LONG. I move to strike out the last word.

In some of the remarks I submitted on yesterday with regard to the coast and geodetic survey I referred to a letter which had been written by Major Powell, the Director of the Geological Survey, to Senator ALLISON. I will now ask leave to have this letter incorporated as a part of my remarks in the RECORD, but will not detain the committee by having it read at length.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The letter referred to by Mr. LONG is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., June 10, 1886.

SIR: For the past two or three days I have been carefully reading the testimony given by myself to the commission of which you are chairman, and find one statement made by me, relating to the charts of the Coast Survey, which is unfair by reason of an important omission. I beg to call your attention to the following extract from the testimony, found on pages 197 and 198:

"The Coast and Geodetic Survey constructs maps, or, more properly speaking, charts, of the coast. These charts represent in part water areas and in part land areas. On the water areas are represented the soundings and important features of the sea and river bottoms. Other things also are represented, such as buoys, lights, &c. The land areas represented are in part islands and in part mainland. On these land areas are represented the landmarks which are used by mariners in the navigation of the waters. So far they are strictly coast charts, useful in navigation.

"In surveying the land areas, the Coast Survey does something more, by extending the map work back a short distance into the country, varying from half a mile to 5 miles. This additional work is of a peculiar character. All streams, large and small, that run in or through this margin of land, are plotted upon maps; all coast marshes are plotted; all rocky ledges and points are indicated, and to some extent hills are represented. In addition to this, many artificial features are plotted, such as city, town, and village plats, country roads, farms, fields, houses, and many other artificial or cultural details. The surveys made for these cultural details do not include complete cadastral surveys, but only sufficient cadastral surveying to make it possible to correctly plot such items upon the maps. I am unable to state any useful purpose which this cadastral or artificial element in the coast charts subserves; first, because it is not executed so as to form a complete cadastral map; second, because these artificial topographic features are ephemeral; that is, this culture changes from year to year in such a manner that the charts speedily become misleading."

In the above it is stated that "I am unable to state any useful purpose which this cadastral or artificial element in the coast charts subserves." At the time when this statement was made I had in view the industrial purposes for which maps are made, and, as my argument throughout will show, I was trying to set forth the fact that such charts as were made of the coast, if made for the interior of the country, would not be useful for general industrial purposes. With this end in view I failed to present an important reason for the construction of coast charts as they are and always have been made by the organization having that work in charge.

In this connection I beg to call your attention to a portion of my testimony on page 388, as follows:

"THE BEST METHOD OF CONSTRUCTING MILITARY MAPS.

"Peculiar conditions arise when topographic maps are to be used for military purposes, which must not be neglected. The military purposes for which topographic maps are used are of two classes: First, they are necessary in planning and conducting the movements of troops from one portion of the country to another; that is, they are useful for strategic purposes. Second, topographic maps may also be useful for the maneuvering of troops on the immediate theater of conflict; to discover how infantry, artillery, and cavalry may best be combined in the battle, and to show how bodies of troops may be grouped, and how outposts and pickets may be distributed when armies stand confronting each other. This may be called the tactical use of topographic maps. The two purposes are so distinct that the same map will not subserve both. The general topographic map is all that is necessary for strategic purposes, but experience has shown that for tactical purposes military maps should be on a scale of about 6 inches to the mile, and that they should represent all of the facts of importance to the stationing of troops on the eve of battle and the maneuvering of troops in the conflict. These facts are only in part found upon proper topographic maps, and only in part found upon cadastral maps.

"If, then, a nation maintains a large standing army, and war impends from year to year, it is found to be advantageous to compile from cadastral maps such facts as they contain which are of value to the military maps, and to add to the same such facts as may be necessary by an actual survey on the ground. To make these maps useful it is necessary that they should be constantly revised and kept in a perfect condition; and, in order that advantage may be reaped from them which can not accrue to the enemy, the maps must be solely in the custody of the War Department, and kept strictly as military secrets."

The Coast Survey charts are constructed upon the scale and by the methods best adapted for military maps, as such maps are described in the above extract.

The history of the organization and progress of the Coast Survey clearly shows that the theory at the basis of its work has always been that military maps should be constructed of the coast of the United States for defensive purposes. In 1828, Mr. Carter, of the House of Representatives, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, presented a report (vide Twentieth Congress, first session, Document No. 264, House of Representatives) in which the Hon. Samuel L. Southard, then Secretary of the Navy, in reply to the question "whether, in the opinion of the Department, such survey ought to be made," says: "It is called for by regard to our commercial and naval interests, and to our means of national defense."

In the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for 1834, Mr. Hassler says: "The survey of the coast must evidently, merely as such already, extend inward at any place until to the ridges of hills or mountains that border the valleys emptying their waters into the sea, or the large bays and rivers; it must present the localities of all the passages and gorges that lead to these valleys, &c., because it must contain all that is needed for the proper defense of the coast in case of any attack whatsoever, just as much as the outlines of the coast and the soundings; because like these furnish the guide to the navigation, so the others are the elements upon which the directions for a proper defense of the country in the case of need must be grounded; and all these elements must be so detailed and present such a full and self-explaining picture of the country that, with the map before the eye, the military operations may be properly judged and guided in the Cabinet. It is therefore as habitual to join for each district a statistical statement of its natural means and resources; it is as desirable to have these accounts of the land part as those upon the currents in the naval part of the work."

Again, in 1841, Mr. Hassler says (vide Twenty-seventh Congress, second session, Document No. 28, House of Representatives): "The aim of the Coast Survey is, and has always been considered to be, by all the successive administrations since its existence, to furnish, with the fullest accuracy possible, all the geographical, topographical, and hydrographical data that may in any way be needed for the navigation and the defense of the coast."

Again, in 1841, Superintendent Bache, of the Coast Survey, says "(vide Twenty-eighth Congress, second session, Document No. 25, House of Representatives): "The results of these operations, when requiring calculation, are reduced by the parties making the observations, and checked by others. They go to form the maps and charts which are the ultimate objects of the work; to give a minute knowledge of our coast, in a high degree important to our commercial and naval marine and in connection with defense."

Quotations from executive documents and from the debates of Congress might be greatly multiplied, all showing, like the above, that the purpose for which the charts of the coast were constructed was for military defense, and for this purpose the engineers of the Army and the officers of the Navy were united in the execution of the work. The Coast Survey has, therefore, from its inception to the present time, been engaged in the preparation of a military map of the coast of the United States, and for that purpose the scale, the method of projection, and the general plan of the charts adopted, have been wise. No better military map has been constructed in any country at any time.

It must be understood that the map of the coast is a hydrographic map for the Navy and a land map for the Army. It should be further noted that in my statement to the commission quoted above I referred to the fact that in the construction of military maps certain facts should not be published. It has been the practice of the Coast Survey to collect a large body of data which it has not put upon its published charts; and while I can not cite any authoritative statement of the reasons for the failure to publish such material, yet I have no doubt that they are the same as those I have indicated.

I am the more anxious to correct my statement to the commission in the above respects from the fact that in carefully reviewing the testimony I have failed to find that any reference has been made by officers of the Coast Survey or by others to this prime factor in the national policy for the survey of the coast of the country.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

J. W. POWELL, Director.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Joint Commission, United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

Furniture and repairs of furniture: For furniture and repairs of furniture, including carpets, for all public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, including marine hospitals, and for furniture, carpets, chandeliers, and gas-fixtures for new buildings, $150,000. And all furniture now owned by the United States in other buildings shall be used as far as practicable, whether it corresponds with the present regulation plans for furniture or not.

Mr. RYAN. I move to strike out, in lines 725 and 726, the words "one hundred and fifty" and insert "two hundred;" so that it will read "two hundred thousand dollars."

I do so because I am entirely satisfied that $150,000 is not a sufficient appropriation for this purpose. The Secretary of the Treasury says in his estimates that he needs $300,000 for this purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. The estimate is $275,000.

Mr. RYAN. I subsequently visited the Department and was assured by the Assistant Secretary that he could not get along with less than $100,000 more. I think it is but just to the Department to raise this at least $50,000 more than what is proposed here; and I suggest the propriety of this to the gentleman from Pennsylvania the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. They had spent since the new administration came in power $65,485 up to the time when we were considering this paragraph of the bill in the subcommittee. They had contracts out for about $30,000 more, showing a total expenditure of some $95,000. A fair estimate for the balance of the year would not, therefore, be a very large addition to that sum on the same basis, and that estimate has also included, as I understand it, a large number of new buildings.

This sum is quite sufficient, and I have never heard a word from there, either from the Assistant Secretary or the chief clerk, to the contrary.

In fact there is a pride exhibited on having reduced the expenditures in this connection enormously over prior years. The truth is that there has been the grossest waste of the public money in connection with the furnishing of these public buildings, and it ought to be stopped. I must confess my surprise that there should be an effort on the part of my most esteemed friend to raise this appropriation, because there is no man who knows better than he does that there has been undue extravagance in the character of the furniture purchased for these public buildings.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to whether there has been extravagance or not, it is not so material as to determine whether the expenditure asked by the present administration is necessary. The estimate of the present administration was made in the light of that extravagance and in view of reform in that respect; and yet the committee say that the amount of $150,000 less shall be appropriated. That is to say, they cut the appropriation down from that amount to what it is in the present bill. It is true that there was not as much expended in the current year as is asked for here; but it is simply because there were not the number of public buildings to be furnished that must be inevitably furnished next year, if we utilize the new buildings. I have a list here of these buildings and the reduced estimates of the Department, the lowest which the Department says it can get along with. These buildings amount to twenty-two in number, not including the one for Baltimore, which the Department expects will be ready to be furnished during the next fiscal year at an additional cost of $30,000. I affirm here that unless the Department is incompetent and does not know what is necessary, this expenditure in the next year, unless it is deliberately intended to mislead the House, indicates that there must be a deficiency unless we increase this appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. The estimate no doubt was made on the basis of prior years; and yet when the administration comes to spend the money they have not spent of that $300,000 more than $125,000. The balance of course will be covered into the Treasury. We want to make an appropriation now for the coming year based upon the expenditure of the last year with the additional view of the new public buildings.

Mr. RYAN. I want to say that I have not made this appeal for any increase because I have a special interest in it.

Mr. RANDALL. I know that.

Mr. RYAN. I only speak in the interest of the general service. There is not a single dollar that will go into my State, so far as I know. There is no building in my State that will receive anything from this appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not ascribe to the gentleman any other motive than a desire for the public interest.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish to say a word. In the first place, there has been a decrease in the last few years in the price of furniture of 30 or 40 per cent. In the second place, there is perhaps more waste in furnishing offices in public buildings than in almost anything else connected with the Government. As a rule the furnishing of offices alone in the Departments of the Government is made to cost more than on an average the homes of the people are worth who are taxed to pay for it. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars will answer the purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. It is quite enough.

Mr. RYAN. If there be no objection I ask to have the list of buildings read, and the amount asked for each.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman that to save time he can have the list printed.

Mr. RYAN. It will take but a moment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Estimated amount required for new buildings to be completed during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

Building.	Date of completion.	Amount.
Buffalo, N. Y., custom-house extension	August, 1886	$20,000
Baltimore, Md., marine hospital	May, 1886	10,000
Columbus, Ohio, court-house and post-office	December, 1886	15,000
Council Bluffs, Iowa, court-house and post-office	June, 1887	8,000
Concord, N. H., court-house and post-office	June, 1887	15,000
Dallas, Tex., court-house and post-office	December, 1886	8,000
Des Moines, Iowa, court-house and post-office	June, 1887	5,000
Fort Wayne, Ind., court-house and post-office	January, 1887	6,000
Frankfort, Ky., court-house and post-office	September, 1886	8,000
Greensborough, N. C., court-house and post-office	December, 1886	5,000
Harrisonburg, Va., court-house and post-office	July, 1886	5,000
Hannibal, Mo., post-office, &c	June, 1887	8,000
Jackson, Tenn., court-house and post-office	September, 1886	8,000
Jefferson City, Mo., court-house and post-office	March, 1887	15,000
Lynchburg, Va., court-house and post-office	May, 1887	8,000
Oxford, Miss., court-house and post-office	December, 1886	8,000
Pensacola, Fla., court-house and post-office	December, 1886	5,000
Quincy, Ill., post-office	December, 1886	15,000
Shreveport, La., post-office	December, 1886	5,000
Syracuse, N. Y., post-office	December, 1886	15,000
Terre Haute, Ind., post-office	June, 1887	15,000
Toledo, Ohio, custom-house	December, 1886	15,000
Total		222,000

Mr. RANDALL. Does that come from the Supervising Architect?

Mr. RYAN. No, sir; I visited the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Smith, with a view to ascertaining definitely what will be needed for this service. He called in the person in charge and they had a consultation in reference to it, as the result of which this list was sent to me.

Mr. RANDALL. I have the official list sent to the committee and it includes only twelve buildings.

Mr. RYAN. The letter accompanying the list which has just been read referred to that and shows that this is the revised list.

Mr. RANDALL. There are a number of buildings there which are not completed, and will not require to be furnished. I might instance Hannibal and Jefferson City, Mo. I do not know how many more there may be.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman has probably named all there are.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Propagation of food-fishes: For the introduction by the United States Fish Commission into and the increase in the waters of the United States of food-fishes and other useful products of the waters, including lobsters, oysters, and other shell-fish, and for continuing the inquiry into the fisheries of the United States and their subjects, and for such general and miscellaneous expenditures as the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries may find necessary to the prosecution of his work, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employés, $130,000.

Mr. NELSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 765 of the printed bill the following:

"That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction and establishment of a fish-hatchery at Duluth, Minn.: Provided, The city of Duluth furnishes a suitable site for such hatchery."

Mr. ROGERS. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. NELSON. I do not understand what point of order is made.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is that the amendment is new legislation.

Mr. NELSON. I did not hear the gentleman from Arkansas state that.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Arkansas state what is his point of order?

Mr. ROGERS. That this is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to sustain the point of order.

Mr. NELSON. I would like to be heard on it. As I understand no point of order was stated by the gentleman from Arkansas in the first instance. I understand also that when a gentleman makes a point of order something should be alleged to sustain it.

Mr. HISCOCK. It seems to me there is no doubt that the amendment is in order. It is simply extending, continuing, and enlarging the same works as are provided for in the paragraph in the bill. The Chair has already ruled when an amendment which is subject to a point of order is admitted, the point of order not having been made, then it is itself subject to amendment so that it may be put in correct shape. And if the paragraph in the bill is in order, the amendment also must be. I think the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will hardly contend that this amendment is not in order.

Mr. LONG. It is simply an extension of the system for the propagation of food-fishes.

Mr. HISCOCK. It might as well be said that the committee had not the power of increasing an appropriation. The amendment increases the appropriation and provides how that increase shall be expended. I know nothing about the merits of this question, but I believe the amendment is in order.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to say on the point of order in the first place I do not think that any point of order which the Chair could recognize was made; and before any point of order had been made the Chair undertook to sustain it.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been the habit of the House when a point as to new legislation arises that the member objecting simply makes the suggestion that there is a point of order; and the Chair has always recognized that as the practice. If the nature of the point of order is demanded, then it can be stated.

Mr. NELSON. I would like to be heard on the point of order. I desire to say there is no existing law for any of this appropriation; I know of no law except the appropriation bills from year to year which furnishes any warrant for the appropriation of this amount, and I simply seek to do what the bill itself proposes to do, to make an appropriation under and pursuant to the law establishing the United States Fish Commission. There is a general law as I understand establishing the United States Fish Commission, and under this law these appropriations are made. But there is no specific law providing for an appropriation to be made from year to year, and the very point made against this amendment which I have offered might be made against this whole paragraph to which I have proposed the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point as to whether this amendment is in order can be reached in this way: Can this be done without a law? If it can, then it can be done by an application to the Department having control. If it can not be done in that way, then the amendment is new legislation and not in order.

Mr. NELSON. There is no law on the subject at all in reference to this matter. It has simply, as I understand, been the habit and custom to make an appropriation from year to year substantially as you find it in this paragraph for the Fish Commission, leaving the Fish Commission to expend it.

But there is nothing in the law, and it has been always in the power of Congress to make the appropriation smaller or greater, or to eliminate it altogether. In other words, Mr. Chairman, there is no law directing that any specific amount shall be appropriated for the benefit of this commission for any purpose whatever, for any year, or from year to year. It is like a good many other matters that you find appropriated for in the appropriation bills, which are simply matters of discretion and are appropriated for upon estimates submitted by the officers of the Departments. Now this amendment does not change existing law; it is no more new legislation than is this entire paragraph.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have the regular order. I understand that the point has been ruled on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Minnesota that there is a law creating this Fish Commission. The gentleman is mistaken, too, in supposing that there has never been any special legislation on the subject of fish-hatcheries. The Chair remembers that legislation was reported by the Committee on Commerce at different times providing for the establishment of these fish-hatcheries. This appropriation may carry out the work of the Fish Commission where there are hatcheries already established, but it is to be assumed that new hatcheries can not be established without authority of law, any more than the existing hatcheries could have been established without such authority. If there is authority in the existing law for the establishment of a fish-hatchery at the point indicated in the amendment, then it is only necessary to apply to the Department; but if the hatchery can not be established under existing law, then this amendment is clearly new legislation, and, however the case might have been under the former rule, it can not be entertained under the new rule. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. NELSON. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 765 of the printed bill the following:
"Of which sum $13,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the construction and establishment of a fish-hatchery at Duluth, Minn., provided the city of Duluth furnishes a suitable site for such hatchery."

Mr. ROGERS. I make the same point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. This seems to be subject to the same point of order as the last amendment.

Mr. NELSON. There is a difference between this and the other amendment, which I desire to explain. The first amendment was distinctly a new appropriation to build a fish-hatchery at the city of Duluth. The amendment I have just offered simply directs that a portion of the sum appropriated in this paragraph shall be devoted to that purpose. That is the distinction. This amendment only directs that a part of the general appropriation hereby made shall be devoted to the purpose of establishing a fish-hatchery at Duluth, and in that respect it differs from the former one, and is not subject to the same point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The object of this amendment, as of the prior one, is to establish a fish-hatchery at the place indicated. As the Chair stated in ruling upon the other amendment, if this can be done under existing law, it can be done under an order of the Department; but if it can not be done without the enactment of an additional law, then clearly this is new legislation.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that a hatchery can be established under existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it had better be done in that way instead of by a violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is a general authority of law to establish fish-hatcheries. Now, if that be so, it seems to me very clear that in making an appropriation like this we can add a condition that the money shall be expended in this particular way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not aware of the existence of any general authority for the establishment of fish-hatcheries.

Mr. HISCOCK. The general language of this bill itself might give such authority: "For the introduction by the United States Fish Commission into and the increase in the waters of the United States of food-fishes and other useful products of the water."

The CHAIRMAN. While unable to recollect the precise legislation, the Chair does remember that at different times acts have been passed establishing fish-hatcheries on the Schuylkill, on the Lower Potomac, and at other points. Those hatcheries were established not under a general law, but by specific legislation. But at any rate, if the hatchery proposed in this amendment can be established under the general law, then it is for the Department to do it; but if this legislation is required to authorize it, then clearly this is new legislation, and therefore not in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To meet such expenses as may be necessary to be incurred in carrying out the provisions of the act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, approved May 6, 1882, including the printing of certificates therein required, $5,500.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 812 and 813, strike out "five thousand five hundred dollars" and insert "ten thousand dollars: Provided, that the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be prepared and furnished to collectors of customs at ports where the same may be required suitable books of registration and books of preliminary and return certificates, in such form as shall enable the said collectors to conveniently set forth and certify accurately, distinctly, and fully all the particulars necessary to identify the Chinese persons to whom such certificates shall be issued."

Mr. STORM. I reserve a point of order on that proposition as new legislation.

Mr. MORROW. When the Committee of the Whole was first proceeding to consider this bill the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] reserved certain time, a portion of which he has kindly agreed to surrender to me; and I will, if it be agreeable to the committee, occupy that time now.

Mr. LONG. Being entitled, under the agreement made when this bill was taken up, to certain time for general debate, I yield twenty minutes of that time to the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW].

Mr. RANDALL. Let us pass this item.

Mr. RYAN. Let us pass it, and wait until we come to the general debate.

Mr MORROW. All I want is my twenty-five minutes—five in my own right and twenty yielded to me by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California consent to pass this item for the present?

Mr. MORROW. I understand the amendment is to be passed for the present, and discussion will take place when the general debate is reached.

Mr. RYAN. When we reach the clauses in relation to the public lands, which will be soon.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary traveling expenses of agents actually incurred in going to and returning from Alaska, not to exceed $600 each per annum, $2,400.

Mr. LONG. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska without reference to race, $25,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I make a point of order on this proposition, with the view of giving the gentleman from Massachusetts an opportunity to state any authority of law which there may be for the provision.

Mr. LONG. I desire to be heard on the question of order. I have no doubt that the amendment is entirely in order.

Mr. RANDALL. Under what law?

Mr. LONG. I call the attention of the Chair to the organic act establishing civil government in Alaska, approved May 17, 1884, the thirteenth section of which provides:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall make needful and proper provision for the education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska, without reference to race.

There, in the organic act establishing this Territory and providing civil government for it, is a provision, the very language of which is embodied in the amendment I have proposed, that "the Secretary of the Treasury shall make needful and proper provision for the education of the children" in that Territory without distinction of race. Not only is there fundamental law for this provision, but in 1885 we appropriated $25,000 for this purpose, under which law and appropriation teachers since then have been and are now engaged in Alaska. So that the work of education there is a work or object which is in progress. Hence, both on the ground of this being a work in progress, and on the ground that there is a fundamental law providing that the Secretary of the Interior shall make provision for the education of these children, I hold that the amendment is clearly in order. Under these circumstances I hope that the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not insist on the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. We have provided by appropriation for the law which the gentleman cites.

Mr. LONG. No, sir; that appropriation was for Indians. This law is for education without distinction of race.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, there is but one race there.

Mr. LONG. There are several races. I understand, then, the point of order is not insisted on?

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, yes; we insist on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is not well taken, and overrules it.

Mr. LONG. Then, if I may be heard upon the merits of this amendment, I desire to say that the Bureau of Education very cordially recommends an appropriation for this purpose, claiming indeed that the sum of $50,000 ought to be appropriated, whereas my amendment is content with $25,000.

Mr. RANDALL. What bureau did the gentleman mention?

Mr. LONG. The Bureau of Education.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, yes; and they got up all these petitions.

Mr. LONG. Not only is this recommended by the Bureau of Education, but Governor Swineford, the governor of Alaska, has in his annual report and in personal statements before the committee recommended the appropriation for this purpose, saying that the amount ought to be $50,000. I take the liberty of reading from his report:

In this connection I desire to say that in my opinion the sum appropriated for the establishment and maintenance of common schools in Alaska is not nearly sufficient. No argument is needed to establish this fact. A glance at a map showing the location of the schools enumerated as having already been and having yet to be established ought to be sufficiently convincing. Aside from the cost of their original establishment, the supervision and control involves many thousands of miles of expensive travel annually on the part of the general agent and the teachers. The appropriation should be increased to a least $50,000.

I urge this proposition upon intelligent members. I call attention to the fact that the Territory of Alaska, unlike any other Territory, has no Territorial Legislature of its own, no means whereby it can impose a tax upon its people, no representative on this floor. But through those who represent the Territory in other ways—the Secretary of the Interior, the governor of the Territory, the agent of the Bureau of Education—we are urged to continue the appropriation already made for this purpose.

In 1885 we appropriated $25,000 for the general education of these children without distinction of race. The same year we appropriated $15,000 for the Indian schools, that appropriation being with distinction of race. In 1886 we appropriated $15,000 for Indian schools, but nothing for general education. This year we have already appropriated $20,000 for the Indian schools, but thus far we have made no appropriation for general education.

Mr. WILSON. Why should there be an appropriation for general education of white children in Alaska more than in other Territories?

Mr. LONG. Because that Territory has no means of raising money for itself; it is dependent upon the National Government; it has no Territorial Legislature. Even the Russian Government a generation ago, as we are told, educated the children there. The adult generation of to-day have been educated in Russian schools, and are somewhat familiar with Russian common-school education. But the young children are growing up without any education at all. It would be a shame and disgrace to this great country if we should refuse to make some provision for the education of the children there, especially when the people of that Territory have no representative on this floor, no Territorial form of government by means of which they can raise money for schools.

Mr. PETERS. I understand the Government has heretofore appropriated money for that purpose?

Mr. LONG. Yes; the Government appropriated $25,000 for that pupose in 1885, and we ought to make a similar appropriation this year. There are teachers thousands and thousands of miles away from home who will be obliged to abandon their work unless we continue it. The idea of standing here and pleading with the American Congress that the pittance of $25,000 should be appropriated for general education of children there, when a generation ago the Russian Government educated their children, is intolerable.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. And think, too, of pleading in vain.

Mr. LONG. Oh, no. I shall not plead in vain, for I am pleading to intelligent gentlemen.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. No; you are not.

Mr. LONG. Yes, I am. I know there are men on that side of the House ready to support this matter.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the population there is increasing. From the report of the Secretary of the Interior I extract the following.

He says, referring to the report submitted to him by Governor Swineford, of Alaska:

He estimates the population of Alaska, exclusive of the eastern portion of the Territory, which has not yet been reported on, at between 33,000 and 34,000 inhabitants, including creoles, Aleuts, whites, and Indians. He states that the native Alaskans are largely educated in the elementary branches of a common-school education, and as a rule are industrious, provident, living in permanent and substantial homes, and all self-sustaining. Many of them are members of the different Christian churches—Greek, Presbyterian, and Catholic.

Or, as my friend from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] would say, Pres-by-te-rian. [Laughter.]

The Secretary of the Interior then goes on still further:

He says that they belong to an entirely different race from the Indian tribes, and are capable of being educated up to the standard of good and intelligent citizenship, and recommends that just in proportion to their educational progress they should have the rights and privileges conferred and the duties and penalties of full citizenship imposed upon them.

In 1883 the Commissioner of Indian Affairs said:

If the published statements in reference to Alaska be true, we are doing much less for the civilization of these people than was done before we took possession of that country. The Russian Government gave them laws, churches, and schools; the American Government has done nothing in that direction.

Since then we have given it a form of civil government.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LONG. If I am correct, Mr. Chairman, I have additional time. I will take it under my general leave.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to take more time now?

Mr. LONG. Yes; out of my general allowance.

Now, Mr. Chairman, since that time we have done something. We have given them civil government, sent a governor there, and in 1885 we made an appropriation of $25,000 for school purposes. Now, I can not conceive it possible it should enter the mind of any man here that we should abandon that provision until we furnish them with a Territorial government to legislate in reference to all these matters for themselves.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. If we do not continue it the $25,000 heretofore appropriated will practically be thrown away.

Mr. LONG. Yes; as the gentleman from Pennsylvania well states unless we make some provision of this character the appropriation already made will practically be thrown away. I appeal to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] and others on that side of the House to support me.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he has read section 13 of the organic act?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I have read that in connection with the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. That only applies to one year.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, I wish to add one word to what has been said by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] in support of this amendment. I have examined the report upon education in Alaska made by Rev. Sheldon Jackson. I addition to that I have been acquainted with that reverend and distinguished gentleman for fifteen years past. I first met him when he was a missionary in Montana. I afterward knew him in Colorado, when engaged in the same calling—missionary work and preaching. I desire to state I do not think we have in the western part of the United States a better or more competent educator than Rev. Sheldon Jackson. He is a man of wonderful intelligence, persistence, industry, and self-denial in all matters pertaining to the education of inferior races, for which this appropriation is now required.

His self-denial in the Territory of Alaska in building up that school system is something that commends itself to the earnest commendation of any man who wishes that country redeemed and made fit for Territorial government. Sir, he has built up there among those half-civilized people called Indians a system of education utilitarian and industrial in its character which is destined to redeem those people from barbarism and make them an industrious people in that part of our territory.

I talked with him for some hours recently on this subject, and subjected him to somewhat of a cross-examination; and I am satisfied, sir, it is not one of those cases where an appropriation is asked for the civilization of Indians which is impracticable and theoretical, as I think some appropriations have been made and wasted in behalf of what is called the civilization of the North American Indians in times past.

These people are of quite a different character and race from what is commonly known as the North American Indians. When the settlers first go there, when the companies first establish their trading posts, these people go and hire themselves out and work as industriously as our people in this country. They are not of a nature to bear arms and commit murder and outrages and treacherously kill the pioneers at night and destroy their property as the tribes inhabiting the Northwestern States and Territories do. They are of an entirely different composition, and I am satisfied in my own mind that this Government could not make a better appropriation than to expend $25,000 to redeem these people from barbarism and educate their children to habits of industry and usefulness.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to say a word or two upon this question. I doubt very much whether future generations will credit the proceedings of this House to-day when it is seen that the American Congress is called upon to appropriate the pitiful sum of $25,000 to educate the citizens of this great Territory, and it meets strong opposition even when it is known that under the organic act we are obliged to do this very thing.

Mr. RYAN. And they can not do it themselves.

Mr. WILLIS. They are not, as the gentlemen from Kansas suggests, in a condition to do it themselves. They are under our control and care. We are the trustees for the execution of this duty. I do hope, therefore, that it will require no argument to enforce upon Congress the high duty of granting this little appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have already made an appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. The Indian appropriation bill carries as it passed the House $15,000 for this purpose. The Senate have increased that amount to $20,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But that is for the industrial school system, not for the general education.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; for the Indian education. This proposition was considered fully in the Appropriations Committee and failed to meet the approval of a majority of that committee.

The white population of the Territory is not large. This amount goes almost exclusively to the payment of teachers, and I admit that it is a very delightful sentiment this talk of rescuing the people from ignorance and barbarism; but the committee did not think that there need be any greater appropriation than that already embraced in the general bill. I ask a vote.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I understood the gentleman from Indiana to state that there has been an appropriation made before for this purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; $20,000 in the Indian bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be adopted. The governor of the Territory of Alaska in his last annual report—and that gentleman, permit me to say, is a distinguished citizen of my own State—Governor Swineford, recommends in that report that $50,000 be appropriated for the purpose of common schools. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has stated that the House has already appropriated $15,000 for education in Alaska and that the Senate has increased that sum to $20,000. If that be the fact, I am very glad of the increase. But that is not for the purpose of general education. It is to carry forward the system of industrial schools in that Territory, which are already in an exceedingly good condition. Governor Swineford says in this report to which I have referred, on page 4:

EDUCATION.

The organic act approved May 17, 1884, provided an appropriation of $25,000 "for the education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska, without reference to race," and by the act of July 4, 1884, a further appropriation of $15,000 is made "for the support and education of Indian children of both sexes at industrial schools in Alaska." By the terms of the first-mentioned act the honorable the Secretary of the Interior is required to make such proper and needful provision as may be necessary to the proper application of the sum appropriated thereby; but nothing was done in that direction until the 3d of March following, when the work of establishing a common-school system in Alaska was committed to the Bureau of Education. The Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar gave early attention to the matter after taking the portfolio of the Interior Department, and in April Rev. Sheldon Jackson was appointed general agent of education for the Territory. The general agent reports that he has, during the past summer, established and placed competent teachers in charge of schools at Juneau, Sitka, Wrangel, Jackson, Boyd (Hoonah), Haines, and Unalaska. A corps of teachers has also been sent to establish schools on the Kuskokvim River, 150 miles above where it empties into the Behring Sea. The schooner on which these teachers sailed arrived at the mouth of the river on the 19th of June, and presumably by this time have their buildings up and their schools in operation. The population of this last-mentioned section is exclusively Eskimo. In addition to these, schools have been authorized, but not established, at Killsnoo, Klawak, Kadiak, Ounga, Belkovsky, Wood Island, Saint Michael's, and Fort Yukon. I am reliably informed that the Aleuts are especially anxious for the establishment of English schools in their midst, and that they need only to be supplied with educational facilities to complete the civilization in which they are already well advanced.

In this connection I desire to say that in my opinion the sum appropriated for the establishment and maintainance of common schools in Alaska is not nearly sufficient. No argument is needed to establish this fact. A glance at a map showing the location of the schools enumerated as having already been and remaining yet to be established ought to be sufficiently convincing. Aside from the cost of their original establishment, the supervision and control involves many thousands of miles of expensive travel annually on the part of the general agent and the teachers. The appropriation should be increased to at least $50,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We have made an appropriation for the industrial school but not for common-school purposes.

Governor Swineford further says (page 5) that in his opinion the appropriation for the industrial Indian school should be considerably increased.

About one thousand Indain children are already in these industrial schools, and making good progress. But outside these schools there must be at least four thousand children, partly native and partly white, for whom no educational provision whatever is made.

In the organic act of 1884 we provided $25,000 "for the education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska without reference to race," and the same year a further appropriation of $15,000 is made "for the support and education of Indian children of both sexes at industrial schools in Alaska."

These Eskimos, as I have said, are not Indians. They are a different race of people, more allied to the Asiatic races than they are to the American Indians.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Have we not already provided for the Indian races in the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. CUTCHEON. For the Indian industrial schools, but not for the common schools for either white or Indian children.

Now, Governor Swineford is on the ground, and this information is from a disinterested source and from an intelligent source; and he has recommended, as will be seen, in addition to the appropriation of $15,000 or $20,000, as the fact may be, for industrial schools, a further appropriation of $50,000 to give a common-school education to all children of school age, without reference to race.

Mr. Chairman, Alaska is a part of the United States, and its people are in a broad sense a part of the American people. It is not an Indian reservation; it is a part of our great domain; and for one I object to leaving any part of our wide territory given over to barbarism without providing for its people common-school education, so that they may in time come out into the light of civilization and be fitted to become citizens of our great Republic.

Governor Swineford has recommended the appropriation of $50,000 for common schools, and I earnestly hope that the amount named in the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], which is but one-half that amount, may be appropriated by this House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the real point involved here will not be overlooked. This subject does not belong to this appropriation bill. It belongs properly to the Indian appropriation bill. On that bill we placed $15,000, the amount which has been given heretofore. The Senate, as I understand—I have spoken to the chairman of the committee about it, and he confirms my recollection—raised the amount to $20,000, and the bill passed in that way.

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman permit me to state that the appropriation in the Indian appropriation bill was for Indian children exclusively?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am aware of that. There are no other children there of any consequence. We have never appropriated any money for education in that Territory except for the education of Indians.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In the organic act it is expressly provided that the money shall be expended without reference to race.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is aware the organic act is one of the loose things we get up when we legislate on matters we know very little about. And the gentleman who sends the document from which the gentleman has quoted knows little more of Alaska than does either he or I. He has spent only a few months there.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I understand $20,000 has been appropriated for this purpose?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; that has been appropriated for the education of Indian children. If gentlemen will offer an amendment to appropriate money for the education of white children the absurdity of the proposition would be manifest. A few officials go up there, remain during the summer, and come back early in the fall. There is no permanent white population in that section of the country.

The appeal for money to educate the Indian children is well founded. But this idea of educating without regard to race does not become this Congress. If you propose to appropriate money to educate white children let it be so stated; but do not let us have any misapprehension about the matter. Have you ever educated in that form before in a Territory? You appropriate money every year, large sums, for the education of Indian children on the various reservations and elsewhere; and there is not a single reservation where there are not more or less white children. But who ever cared to appropriate for them separately?

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman not think a white man is as good as an Indian?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have seen many Indian schools, and I do not remember a single instance where there were not more or less white children being educated along with the Indians—the children of the agents and other employés.

The same holds good in Alaska; and I can not agree to the idea that we should appropriate money to educate Indian children and then make an additional appropriation for white children. I would have been willing that the item in the Indian bill had been larger; but the House thought otherwise. It was fixed, I believe, finally at $20,000. The movement in favor of $50,000 began last fall, and like all such enterprises has been moved on with constant and skillful industry. But, as I have said, the proper place for this would have been in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. With the view I have of the not very remote future, I think this is a more important matter than merely a question of $25,000. The problems with which America has had to deal up to the present time have been in the main Atlantic Ocean problems. The problems with which our children will have to deal will be largely Pacific Ocean problems. Situated as we are, with Central and South America south of us, with the great nations of the Pacific Ocean opposite us, on the Pacific must come the greatest of our advancements and the most glorious of our future triumphs.

In Alaska we have a Territory enormously large. The question at issue is whether we shall give to that Territory at its inception religion and education, or shall we enter into a policy which shall make that Territory and that slope understand that we are niggardly with them; that while we can give millions to educate the Indian children in the interior, we begrudge $25,000 to lay the corner-stone of popular education in this Territory on the Pacific. For if we refuse this appropriation it will be a decision that will probably control future appropriations, and it will put an end to the present system in that Territory.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the gentleman not aware that most of the great religious denominations of this country have entered that field and are having their instrumentalities at work there?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. And that among others the Mennonites have sought to enter on that field. Now, is not the effect of this effort of ours to enter into a field that belongs to the great religious sentiment of this country—is not the effect of it rather to discourage than to encourage them?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman is not asking me a question, but is occupying my time with an argument.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Then I will meet the question and the argument. I am a believer in religious education, but I am also a believer in secular education by the power of the people acting through the organism known as government.

Wherever there is popular education, I am its friend. Now, the Territory of Alaska has no government and we will not give it any. It has no mode of taxing itself. There is no way by which it can legalize taxation for schools except by our act, and we refuse to do that act. Therefore, while I hail all effort made by any religious body out there, I am not willing that they shall occupy the field to the exclusion of the money that we here can appropriate for the purpose of building up those schools, and to the exclusion of governmental supervision and aid. Mr. Chairman, if we do not make this appropriation, we commit a breach of faith against those teachers who have gone out there in good faith, and we surrender those schools in which there are a thousand children to-day, we surrender our influence over those thousand children. But we do more than that. We proclaim that so far as Alaska is concerned, and so far as the Pacific slope and its Territories are concerned, it is a matter about whose future we care very little.

We have already explored Alaska, at considerable expense, under the military arm of the Government. We have already, in the organic act, required that the Secretary of the Interior shall take measures to secure education without regard to race. Why stop? Only yesterday, in one of the Departments, while waiting for a Secretary to be disengaged, I cast my eye over a map, and the thought occurred of the magnificence of territory that we had yielded through ignorance when we gave up the territory between 49° and 54° 40′. Ignorant our ancestors were of the greatness of the Pacific slope and of the power that it would have given us if we had kept that heritage! Eighty-five years ago, or less, similar arguments were used in regard to the acquisition of Louisiana, and the question was asked why should we spend our money to secure control of the Mississippi River and to purchase the territory beyond. Fortunately, we did not let dollars stand in the way of our growth and our glory. Years afterward the same arguments were used when we came to acquire the region that is now California and Oregon and the Territories which are growing up into States. For one, I am an annexationist. I do believe that the spirit of our free institutions, if it is given fair play, has power to turn any territory we can acquire into great and powerful States.

These free institutions are based on intelligence, and must be preserved by means of education. Emigrants are tempted where schools abound, and shun a schoolless country. Great Britain gives law, protection, and schools to her colonists; shall we do less to our citizens resident in a Territory to which we have not given a government? During the past six years we have received nearly three millions and a half of emigrants, and this stream shows no decrease. To the West let us tempt some to go. Let us proclaim that wherever they may go, even if to Alaska, their children shall be given a chance for education. But by the purchase of Alaska we owe duties to all now there as well as to those who may hereafter go. Let us continue the system already founded; let us, day by day, as necessity requires, enlarge it; let us begin with these Alaska children; let us educate them in a knowledge of our institutions; let us remove them from their Russian training; let us see that they are brought up with American ideas, and in due time, by the blessing of Heaven, we shall see in Alaska a manifestation of the power of the common-school system of America which has made New England so potent in our councils. [Applause.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what I have already quoted from Governor Swineford's report in regard to common schools in Alaska, I desire to call attention to what he says about the difference between common-school education and industrial education.

Mr. RANDALL. Can the gentleman tell us whether there are a thousand pupils at school there altogether, outside of the Indian population?

Mr. CUTCHEON. No; there are not so many as that.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] stated the number at school as a thousand.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Nine hundred and ninety-nine.

Mr. RANDALL. That includes the Indians as well as the whites.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In Sheldon Jackson's report on education in Alaska (Executive Document 85, Forty-ninth Congress, first session) I find this statement:

Mr. Ivan Petroff's enumeration of the population of Alaska (page 33 of his special report in the United States census of 1880, volume 8) is as follows:

Divisions.	Total.	White.	Creole.	Eskimo.	Aleut.	Athabaskan.	Thlinget.	Hydah.
Arctic	3,094	.....	.....	3,094	.....	.....	.....	.....
Yukon	6,870	18	19	4,276	.....	2,557	.....	.....
Kuskokwin	8,911	3	111	8,036	255	506	.....	.....
Aleutian	2,451	82	479	.....	1,890	.....	.....	.....
Kodiak	4,352	34	917	2,211	.....	864	326	.....
Southeastern	7,748	293	230	.....	.....	.....	6,437	788
Total	33,426	430	1,756	17,617	2,145	3,927	6,763	788

Mr. LONG. But the population is increasing very rapidly. The governor, who was before us, said that there were four or five thousand.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Undoubtedly. Every new person who goes there is a white person. Now, Governor Swineford, in addition to the appropriation of $50,000 which he recommends for common-school education, speaks as follows of the appropriation for the industrial school:

The industrial school at Sitka, I am pleased to be able to report, is making fair progress and doing excellent work in the education and training of native boys and girls, in the mechanical trades on the one hand, and a knowledge of household work and duties on the other. The appropriations made by Congress for the support of this school could not have been directed to a better purpose, and I respectfully suggest that they should be materially increased, to the end that another and similar institution may be established in the Aleutian Islands in accordance with what I understand to have been the original plan, thus completing for the time being the common-school system of the Territory—the children who manifest more than average aptitude and progress in the common schools to be advanced to the others.

So he not only asks the $50,000 for common-school education, but he asks that the appropriation for industrial education shall at the same time be materially increased. Mr. Chairman, I concur in every word that my eloquent friend from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has said in regard to our duty to provide for this great empire that we have acquired from Russia. It has but just entered upon its career. Every man that goes there now is a white man, and the white population is rapidly increasing. There is said to be large mineral wealth there; we know that great commercial interests have sprung up; we know that the field is broadening every day. I appeal to this House not to be niggardly in this matter of providing education for these people, and not to refuse to give them at least the same educational privileges that they had under the Russian Government.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman tell us how many children there are now outside of the Indian population who go to these schools?

Mr. LONG. Let me answer that. In a letter of the general agent of the Bureau of Education, he says that if Congress fails to make provision for these schools the teachers will be turned adrift and the school furniture and books will go to waste, and he states that in February last there were nine hundred and nineteen children enrolled in the schools. Accompanying this is an extract from the report of the grand jury, who speak of having visited the several schools in Sitka under Government patronage and having been much pleased with their showing. The Indian school is gradually winning its way to the favor of the natives. The white school is largely attended and much interest is manifested by its pupils in their studies. The training-school, under charge of the Presbyterian Mission Board, seems to be well conducted, and all these schools are under zealous management and evidently accomplishing much good. A proper Government building, however, should be provided for the Indian school, as the present (a rented one) is not at all suitable or comfortable. That used for the white children is not conveniently located or sufficiently large. It is desirable that a new building should be erected sufficiently large to accommodate the increase of attendance, and in a locality affording convenient play-ground, which does not exist in the neighborhood of the building now used.

It was said by the gentleman from Indiana a moment ago that we have already appropriated $15,000 or $20,000 for Indian education. That is true, but that is for a specific purpose, not general; that is for an industrial school. That is not enough. That does not cover the children without distinction of race, for whose education we ought to provide until we give the people a Territorial government which will enable them to provide education for themselves.

Mr. Chairman, going back to the organic act passed in 1885, it will be seen that even at that time we recognized that something else was necessary, because in that year we appropriated $15,000 for the Indian industrial school and $25,000 for the education of children without distinction of race, and my appeal is to keep up that appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me ask the gentleman whether there is any appropriation in the current bill for the pay of these teachers.

Mr. LONG. There was no appropriation for education without distinction of race in the last appropriation bill, and that is an additional reason for making one now.

Mr. RANDALL. Then these teachers have been out there twelve months.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts state whether there are not other denominations occupying that same field?

Mr. LONG. I am inclined to think there are. They are occupying every State and Territory in the Union.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has stated that there are a thousand of these children to attend school. Now it would appear from the census and from the evidence of Mr. Elliot, who is as well-informed a man in regard to that Territory as any with whom I have conferred, that the white population is not over 1,000.

Mr. LONG. The census was taken six years ago.

Mr. RANDALL. I know it was. But Mr. Elliot, who is well informed on this subject, who married there, and all of whose interests are there, is to be relied on in a matter of this kind. Yet gentlemen stand up here and say that there are one thousand white children there to be educated, when according to our information the whole white population does not number more than 1,000.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Elliot visits the seal islands, two or three thousand miles away. The governor, who is an officer of the United States, tells us there are four or five thousand white inhabitants there.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like some gentleman who advocates this appropriation to tell us how many white children there are there in need of education.

Mr. LONG. Here are a thousand children whom you propose to abandon.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; I have not abandoned anything or anybody. This feeling in favor of education is a beautiful sentiment; and of course care has been taken by the Educational Bureau to work it up.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would like to inquire whether the Indian children in the industrial schools are not taught from books half the day and trained in industrial occupations the other half?

Mr. LONG. I do not know.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understand that is the case.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is usually so in Indian schools.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, if the Indian children are provided for in the industrial schools so far as books are concerned, why make an additional appropriation——

Mr. LONG. You leave all the other children out.

Mr. TILLMAN. How many other children are there?

Mr. LONG. The agent says there are over a thousand white children, whom gentlemen here propose practically to abandon.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understand there are less than a thousand of all races, and but very few whites; and I contend the parents of white children ought to educate their own progeny as white people in the States have to do.

Mr. RANDALL. Can the gentleman from Massachusetts tell me how many white families there are in Alaska?

Mr. LONG. I can not.

Mr. RANDALL. And nobody else is able to give that information.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. How is it possible for any gentleman to give an accurate answer to a question of that kind, when there has been no census since 1880? We know there are white children there. We think the government of that community important enough to induce us to send there a governor and attorney-general; and you have a grand jury and all that.

Mr. HOLMAN. The officials who go there do not stay.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Whether they stay or not, we send them there. The question here presented is twofold. In the first place, we give a certain amount for the education of Indian children; and why should we not do likewise with respect to the white children, however many or however few there may be? In the second place, we undertake to give to that community a government of law by providing a governor, attorney-general, and grand juries, &c.; and we spend large sums of money in doing this. Should we not let education go along with the law, so that the children who are to be under the law may grow up law-abiding by reason of being educated?

Mr. RANDALL. There is no one here who is able to tell us how many white families there are there.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We know there are a great many more Indians than you have provided for.

Mr. RANDALL. I assert that the great motive power outside of this House in favor of this appropriation comes from the teachers to be employed; and they ought to be able to tell us how many white children there are to be educated.

Mr. WILLIS. In this bill we have appropriated something like a quarter of a million dollars for the propagation of food-fish; does the gentleman know how many fisheries there are?

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, the gentleman can prove anything by simile.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There is a population of 35,000 in Alaska, and upon the usual basis of calculation there must be five thousand or six thousand children of school age.

Mr. RANDALL. That is all on paper.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The industrial school now provides for one thousand, but is no provision to be made for the other four thousand or five thousand?

Mr. RANDALL. We propose to do for the coming year as we have done for the past.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania state how many Indian children there are in Alaska?

Mr. RANDALL. If I recollect rightly, the Indian population is 20,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is not that "all on paper?"

Mr. RANDALL. When I speak of the white population being "on paper," I mean we have no statement from any authoritative source, but merely the ipse dixit of some interested person.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. LONG, there were—ayes 79, noes 65.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RANDALL and Mr. LONG were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 82.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair votes in the negative; and the amendment is rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the protection of sea-otter hunting-grounds and seal-fisheries in Alaska: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to use revenue-steamers for the protection of the interests of the Government on the seal islands and the sea-otter hunting-grounds, and the enforcement of the provisions of law in Alaska, $20,000.

Mr. MORROW. I move to amend by striking out, in line 833, "twenty" and inserting "thirty;" so as to make this appropriation $30,000.

Mr. Chairman, on page 11 of this bill, in the paragraph relating to the revenue-cutter service, the sum of $875,000 is appropriated. The amount estimated for this service by the Secretary of the Treasury was $900,000. The appropriation is a reduction, therefore, on the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury of $25,000.

In addition to that reduction there is in this particular paragraph under consideration a further reduction of $10,000 from the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury. His estimate is $30,000 for the protection of the sea-otter hunting-grounds and seal-fisheries of Alaska, while the appropriation in the bill is $20,000, leaving a total reduction of $35,000 in the revenue-marine service for Alaska.

I understand the reason for this amount estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury, but omitted from the bill, arises out of the fact that there has been transferred from the Navy Department to the Revenue-Marine Service a vessel called the Bear. This vessel has been sent around to the Pacific and is now in the service of the Revenue Marine for the general protection of the Pacific coast and Alaskan interests.

The expense of the Bear is estimated at from forty to fifty thousand dollars per annum. If you adhere to striking out the amount of $25,000 on page 11, and make a reduction of $10,000 in this item, the result will be that the Bear can not go into effective service in protecting the seal-fishery and otter interests in Alaska Territory.

Furthermore, we have just been discussing the educational needs of the Indians of Alaska. I submit a great wrong will be done to these Indians, whom we are in duty bound to protect, if we allow unguarded mercantile traffic in that Territory. There are being shipped into Alaska to-day large quantities of whisky and other kinds of distilled spirits which will serve very soon to destroy and corrupt the Indian children beyond educational redemption, as well as to demoralize the whole population of that country. This will continue to be done unless you provide protection in the way of making the revenue-marine service efficient in those waters. The traffic is contrary to law, and should be stopped.

The Corwin is the only vessel at present in that service. It is said by the Secretary of the Treasury and by others who are well informed that it is impossible to protect Alaska with only that one steamer.

The Corwin has also been engaged in rescuing shipwrecked sailors from the wrecked whaleships in the arctic seas. The vessel has done a splendid service in that direction, and demonstrated the necessity for its continuance and the aid of another vessel in that northern region. So if the Bear, which has been sent to the Pacific coast, is to be retained in the service, if she is to continue there for the protection of our important interests in Alaska, it will be necessary that at least this amount of $10,000 should be retained in this paragraph of the bill, without reduction on the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury. It would be better if the whole amount could be retained, but certainly the $10,000 should be restored.

The amendment I have offered is in accordance with the recommendation of the Treasury Department, and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the report of the Committee on Appropriations is $25,000 larger than for last year and $5,000 larger than the year before. The committee deemed it to be adequate.

I do not know whether the Bear can be supplied from the appropriation or not. If this is not sufficient to run the Bear, then when exhausted they can go to the Revenue-Marine appropriation. The committee did not feel disposed to increase it beyond what is reported in the bill. As I have already stated, it is higher than it was last year.

Mr. FELTON. I know the importance of having the Bear remain where she now is for the protection of all our interests in Alaskan waters. I understood it cost the Government $20,000 to send that vessel for this purpose to the Pacific coast. She is engaged now in protecting the interests of the Government and the people there. I understand she is specially designed for this service, and therefore adequate appropriation should be made, in my judgment, to secure the efficiency of this service.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW].

Mr. RANDALL. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 65.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCCREARY in the chair). Under the rule, the amendment is lost.

Mr. VIELE. I move to insert after the word "dollars," in line 834, page 35, the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

National Board of Health: For salaries and expenses of National Board of Health, including collection and publication of information concerning the development and spread of epidemic diseases, $10,000.

Mr. VIELE. Mr. Chairman, the object of the amendment is to continue the present status of the National Board of Health. The appropriation is a little more than that made during the last year.

This National Board of Health was organized in the year 1879 under the shadow of a widespread pestilence. In 1878 this country was visited by one of the direst calamities that ever befell it. Memphis was desolated; the valley of the Mississippi was in mourning; one hundred thousand citizens had been stricken with disease; twenty-five thousand lives had been sacrificed. It is estimated that the loss to the industries and the commerce of the valley of the Mississippi by the epidemic of yellow fever of that year was upward of $200,000,000. It was under these circumstances that this board was organized and provided with the means to stay the progress of the epidemic in the ensuing year. Its efforts were received with the acclamations of grateful millions, and were approved by the whole country, and blessings followed their successful stay of this curse.

Now, sir, this Board of Health grew out of as intelligent a body of citizens as ever assembled together in this country. I refer to the American Public Health Association, which for nearly twenty-five years held its annual conventions in different portions of the United States, and was welcomed cordially to all of our large cities. It inaugurated a system of sanitation which is simply in keeping with the civilization of the age. That American Health Association grew out of a sanitary convention held in the city of Boston in the year 1860. The State of Massachusetts, alaways forward in intelligence and generosity, welcomed that convention to its capital city with open arms. Its most distinguished men attended its meetings, the governor of the State, the mayors of the principal cities, Edward Everett, the accomplished orator, graced it with his presence and his eloquence; the poet Oliver Wendell Holmes was present, and added the attractiveness of his intellect to the occasion. From that time to this the progress of sanitation in the United States has been very rapid and secure. Nearly every town or principal city and nearly every State has a board of health as the result of these annual conventions.

Now, sir, a National Board of Health was found to be absolutely essential to co-ordinate the work of these local boards of health, to consult with them, to advise with them, to inaugurate a system of original observations. We must remember, Mr. Chairman, that we live in an age when science has come in to aid us in the protection of human life. The development of microscopical research within the last fifteen years has been amazing. Europe has in all her large centers distinguished men laboring with earnest zeal upon these observations on the germs of disease and the theory of its propagation, and the most wonderful results have been arrived at. Huxley and Tyndall in England, Pasteur in France, Tomassi Crudelli in Italy, and Koch in Germany are devoting themselves to the same line of observations as this National Board of Health; and it would be surprising, sir, if the United States Congress at this period in the civilization of the world should allow itself to take a step backward and destroy the usefulness of this board that has accomplished so much and bids fair to accomplish so much more in the future.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BEACH was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. VIELE.

Mr. VIELE. We expend enormous sums of money on our fortifications and for the support of our armies, but, sir, there is a foe always on the alert to destroy more people than all the armies of the world are capable of destroying. We are to-day confronted on three sides of this country with the possibility of the invasion of an epidemic, an epidemic of yellow fever from the South, an epidemic of cholera from the Atlantic coast, and an epidemic of small-pox from the northern frontiers. We all remember what terrible results came from the visitation of Montreal by the small-pox last year.

Now, sir, the whole purpose of this Board of Health is directed toward sanitation, or, in other words, toward cleanliness and toward the instruction of the people in that direction. If we had known in 1832, when the cholera first devastated this country, what were the principles of sanitation, we would have saved tens of thousands of lives. I remember that terrible occasion; and I passed again through a visitation of that dread disease in 1848 in Texas.

I was in New Orleans when it was visited with the dreadful epidemic of yellow fever in 1847, and I was in Vera Cruz when it was visited by the plague of the black vomit. On all occasions I have seen that cleanliness was the surest and only prevention to the spread of disease. This is the basis of sanitation, and to this end and to the adoption of measures of prevention this board, in accord with the local boards everywhere, directs its energies. Surely this is no time to hesitate or retrace our steps. I sincerely trust that the House will recognize the importance of this amendment and decide upon its adoption.

Our people require education on this subject. This board collects all of the data from all parts of the world necessary to give to the people all the information they need as the result of scientific inquiry. This, in fact is as important as any other branch of the service of this Government; and, sir, to leave it without an appropriation is, as I said before, but to go back in the progress of civilization.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this Board of Health originated, I think, in 1879, when it was supposed the yellow fever was threatening to invade the country. Each recurring season, by a strange coincidence, as the time approaches to consider the sundry civil appropriation bill, the cholera starts in on one side of the Republic, yellow fever in another, and the small-pox on still another, and they march en echelon through the country until the sundry civil bill, or rather the item in the bill relating to the Board of Health, is disposed of, and then these several plagues are staid. When the bill is passed the epidemics disappear.

Mr. GALLINGER. The small-pox did not stop last year until this board acted in reference to the matter, and met the disease and stamped it out.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I want to say that we have already provided ample facilities and the means for meeting and dealing with these diseases when they approach and attempt to cross our borders. The Board of Health is as powerless to do anything to prevent the entrance of yellow fever, small-pox, or cholera as I am to guide the course of a comet.

Mr. LONG. But you might guide it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I think I could guide or at least vary the course of some small comets. [Laughter.]

When the small-pox threatened to enter the country in the Northwest a year or two ago it was found necessary to appeal to the Marine-Hospital Service to meet and stop the progress of the disease. They have placed at their disposal when needed the revenue-cutters of the Treasury Department, and have every assistance and appliance necessary to meet and deal with threatened epidemic diseases, co-operating with and aiding the local authorities whenever and wherever such assistance may be needed. I do not see why we should have two separate and distinct organizations to do this work. This thing was very fully considered in the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. BEACH. And in the last Congress by the committee of which I had the honor to be chairman.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I remember in the Forty-seventh Congress this was very fully and carefully considered. And it was the judgment of Congress then that the Marine-Hospital Service is equal to every emergency. It has stations all along our coast, and has had large experience in dealing with epidemic diseases. As stated a moment ago, they co-operate with the local boards of health in every city in this country. These local boards are authorized to appeal at any time to that service, and the President is authorized by law to use in his discretion whatever money may be necessary to successfully do the work, keeping, of course, within the limit of the appropriation, which I think now exceeds $250,000. My colleague on the committee [Mr. RYAN] says $300,000. The President is authorized to utilize that sum for the express purpose of doing the work mentioned by my honorable friend on the left; and I think, in view of the facts I have just stated, no possible advantage can result from rehabilitating the Board of Health.

My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will remember the origin of that board and knows what they have accomplished. It has been described as an association formed for the purpose of writing and considering essays upon the several diseases mentioned. I agree with my honorable friend on the left that we ought to and do encourage the study of art and science in this country; but I insist that the study of the several diseases with which our people may be afflicted should be left to the several medical institutions of the country and of medical men everywhere. The studies of Tyndall and Huxley and others have not been prosecuted by them as pensioners upon the Government. I am unable to see that the advantages which my friend anticipates will result to this country from keeping up the Board of Health. I therefore hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. BEACH. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEACH. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he did not support a bill introduced into this House the other day to send a commission down to South America to discover means of preventing yellow fever by inoculation?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not remember whether I did or not. If I did it was undoubtedly because I thought it a wise thing to do.

Mr. BEACH. Would it not be far wiser to have a national board of health to attend to the whole subject than to create special commissions by special bills?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not recognize the necessity of having special commissions. But it happens in this case, as it always does whenever there is a proposition to create a new health bureau or to limit or enlarge the powers of this one, the services of the doctors throughout the country are invoked, and from all quarters they write to their Representatives to advocate the measure.

Mr. RANDALL. That is what they have been doing.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There is not a Representative who has not been receiving letters urging him to stand by the Board of Health. The point is, that we have a well regulated and splendidly equipped board of health in the Marine-Hospital Service, and it has proved equal to meeting every possible requirement. It has been thoroughly tested in dealing with threatened epidemics, as well as in tracing the source and cause of epidemic diseases. There seems to be no need of two organizations to do the work of one; and I am persuaded that our medical friends when they have been advising their Representatives to vote for the board of health were not advised of the fact that we had already provided the best equipped and most efficient health service in the world.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations left this ont because they did not think there was any necessity for the continuation of this National Board of Health. In the year 1885, if I remember aright, Congress declined to make any appropriation. But, notwithstanding that Congress refused to make appropriations, the gentlemen who control this organization went out without any shadow of law and involved the Government in indebtedness.

In 1886 the House put in a clause abolishing the National Board of Health, but when the bill went to the Senate, the Senate disagreed to that feature of it and put in an appropriation of $5,000. This is an illustration of how these organizations when they get once established hold on. They never let go.

There is no occasion whatever for this organization. The whole thing is being well done through the Marine-Hospital Service. This year the President of the United States has expended from the fund at his command $60,000 up to March 26, 1886.

Mr. SWINBURNE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SWINBURNE. What good has the Marine-Hospital Service done?

Mr. RANDALL. The President of the United States operates through the Marine-Hospital Service, and last year, as I am advised, expended that sum of $60,000 in preventing the introduction of epidemics into the United States from Europe.

Mr. SWINBURNE. Does the report so show?

Mr. RANDALL. I have it here.

Mr. SWINBURNE. I have read it carefully and did not find that stated.

Mr. RANDALL. On the 1st of July, 1885, there was an amount available of $336,000 under the control of the President of the United States, and up to March 25, 1886, he had expended $60,000. The mode of its expenditure is thus indicated:

Epidemic of cholera in Europe guarded against; also, in winter of 1885–'86, quarantine inspections on Canadian frontier against small-pox, which was epidemic in Montreal and Province of Quebec.

It appears, therefore, there is no earthly necessity for the continuation of this organization. There is now available $275,000 that can be had in a moment to be expended by the President of the United States through the Marine-Hospital Service. I ask this House to do away with this dual organization for a work which is being well done by the Marine-Hospital Service. There is no earthly occasion, as I have said, for a duplication of bureaus.

Mr. BEACH. Why, then, not abolish the Board of Health?

Mr. RANDALL. We have tried time and again to get into this bill the abolition of that Board of Health. The House did adopt a provision abolishing this bureau, but the Senate disagreed to it. Meanwhile, leech-like, they held on.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish to say to my friend also (and he will recognize the truth of the statement) that the Marine-Hospital Service have a line of stations all along our border.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; it is the most complete organization in those respects that any country can boast of.

Mr. CALDWELL. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. Under this provision that you have alluded to, has not the President of the United States power, if he wishes, to send a commission to the tropics to investigate in regard to yellow fever?

Mr. RANDALL. He has the widest possible discretion to send anybody anywhere, and, as I understand, the President did send people to Europe to prevent the introduction of cholera last year.

Mr. CALDWELL. And hence there is no need for this additional appropriation?

Mr. RANDALL. None whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has expired.

Mr. SWINBURNE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I claim the floor and yield to the gentleman from New York to ask a question.

Mr. SWINBURNE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] whether each State does not take care of its own quarantine against disease coming from Europe?

Mr. RANDALL. Undoubtedly; and it is better taken care of than it would be by Federal interference.

Mr. SWINBURNE. Has not the State of New York spent thousands and thousands of dollars for that purpose?

Mr. RANDALL. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SWINBURNE. And do they ever get cholera there from Europe?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know about that. Cases may have come in at times.

Mr. SWINBURNE. In 1866 there were several thousand cases of cholera that came to the port of New York, but not one got any farther.

Mr. RANDALL. I maintain, also, that if it is necessary for the Federal Government to interfere at all in the matter of quarantine in co-operation with the States, the President has full power to do it, and he has the money to do it.

Mr. SWINBURNE. Is not our northern border the only place where Federal interference is necessary at all?

Mr. RANDALL. It might be required on the northern frontier, or perhaps upon the Atlantic coast in case of a cholera epidemic.

Mr. SWINBURNE. I want to ask the gentleman another question. Has the Federal Government ever done anything near what it ought to have done to protect the seacoast extending from Boston to New Orleans?

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, I do not think the Federal Government ought to have much to do with the matter of quarantine generally. I think that is better left to the States.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that the Marine-Hospital Service picketed our whole Texas frontier against the yellow fever.

Mr. RANDALL. The Marine-Hospital organization is the best of its kind of which I have any knowledge.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, the Treasury Department has estimated a certain sum of money for this service. From that I judge that the Department deems it a proper subject for an appropriation, and I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. VIELE] that this Board of Health ought to be preserved. It has a wide field apart from that of the Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. RANDALL. The Department did not recommend the appropriation. It was only put in by request.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This question, I believe, was not considered by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. It was.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I never heard of it.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman may have been absent. But I wish to say to the gentleman again that the Department did not recommend the appropriation. They merely inserted the estimate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Did the Appropriations Committee take any action upon this item? I do not think it was before the committee at all. I am in favor of continuing this appropriation. I rather think that the sum provided in the amendment of the gentleman from New York will be sufficient for the purpose, although the Secretary of the Treasury has sent us an estimate recommending, or suggesting, an appropriation of $33,500, while the gentleman from New York asks an appropriation of only $10,000, barely sufficient to keep the board in existence.

Mr. RANDALL. I have the estimate here. The Secretary of the Treasury does not even put this amount into the next column to be added up, showing that the Department does not, in effect, embrace this in the aggregate of the appropriation recommended.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to occupy the time of the committee, but I wish to say a few words on this item. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] says that the Department recommended nothing on this subject. Whether they did or not, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] simply rises and says he thinks the amount of these salaries ought to be appropriated, notwithstanding the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated what is known to members generally, that this service has been in charge of the Marine Hospital and has been entirely satisfactory; and also in face of the fact that the National Board of Health, in its conduct of this business, was extravagant, and that, by reason of the extravagance and mismanagement of that board, Congress has for years refused to make these appropriations. The transfer to the Marine-Hospital Service has been entirely satisfactory in every direction, so far as I have heard. I can not think this Committee of the Whole would be justified in appropriating these salaries when no public necessity is shown; and I can not believe that anything of the kind will be done.

Mr. RANDALL. The figures of the estimate in this instance are not carried into the second column as would be the case if the Treasury Department really wanted the money; but there is the following note:

The foregoing estimates are submitted at the request of the National Board of Health.

Last year we reached some understanding, as we supposed, with this board. We paid all their debts by an appropriation in the deficiency bill; and we begged them to let us go—to free us from any further demand. They have not done so; they have come back upon us.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Prevention of epidemics: The President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera or yellow fever, to use the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated therefor by the act approved March 3, 1885, in aid of State and local boards or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same and for maintaining quarantine and maritime inspections at points of danger.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania how much the unexpended balance referred to in this paragraph is?

Mr. RANDALL. Up to the 16th of March last the amount was $275,000 or thereabouts.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I offer an amendment, which I have no doubt the gentleman from Pennsylvania will accept, to strike out the words "the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated March 3, 1885, in aid of State or local boards or otherwise" and insert "$275,000." I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania will accept this amendment, because he recognizes, as many others of us do, that the reappropriation of unexpended balances is a vicious practice; that it is always best a bill should carry on its face the precise amount of money to be expended under it; that the amount appropriated should not be left in this way indefinite. I hope the gentleman will accept this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman surprises me. I have repeatedly heard him inveigh against this vicious practice, as he characterized it, of reappropriating unexpended balances. I certainly can not understand why the gentleman should object to my amendment.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman is too eminently just to think for one moment of carrying through the work for the next fiscal year upon money which has been appropriated by a previous Congress. He certainly would not wish to do anything of this kind for the mere purpose of keeping down for appearance sake the amount of his bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Last year and the year before this language was incorporated in the bill. It is not fair that an appropriation of this kind should be charged in the aggregate amount of appropriations for the current year, because there may not be a dollar of it expended.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no sort of doubt that the Congress which originally appropriated this money was charged with it. My recollection is it was the Forty-seventh Congress, a Republican Congress; and no doubt it was charged with the expenditure. A great deal was said on the stump about the "extravagant" appropriations of that Congress. Certainly my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania does not care to get any credit for economy by reappropriating in this way money appropriated by a former Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. This is the usual provision.

Mr. HISCOCK. I certainly trust the gentleman will on this point yield.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether he, when in charge of appropriation bills, has never favored the reappropriation of unexpended balances?

Mr. HISCOCK. I think on one occasion I did.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does not the gentleman recollect any other occasion?

Mr. HISCOCK. The case to which I refer arose, I believe, in reference to an appropriation for pensions; and I want to explain it right here. It was insisted that we were making insufficient appropriations for pensions, which I denied; but finally I agreed that the unexpended balance coming over from the previous year should be reappropriated. It turned out that the Government did not use even the amount appropriated, and there was no occasion to have recourse to the unexpended balance. The bill of which I then had charge carried a larger appropriation than was necessary.

In that connection I may say that afterward the Democratic party obtained control of this House and took advantage of all that surplus, amounting, I think, to some $40,000,000 in the aggregate, by charging it as a part of the "extravagance" of the Republican party. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] alluded the other day to the class of statesmen that his party sends to New York to carry on political campaigns. They always send protectionists and economists there. The men who were sent there on that occasion advertised on the stump up and down the State of New York the "extravagance" of the Republican party, charging upon us money which we had not expended and for which we were not responsible.

Mr. RANDALL. That was not a dangerous "epidemic." [Laughter.]

Mr. BEACH. I move to amend by adding "small-pox or other epidemic disease." I trust the gentleman will accept that amendment.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to say a word in reply to the colleague of the gentleman from New York, if he will permit me.

Mr. BEACH. Very well; I will withdraw my amendment for the present.

Mr. HERBERT. I wish to state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], who is now inveighing, as he did the other day, against the practice of reappropriating money as if he never did so when he was occupying the position of chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that I looked up not only the bills and appropriations which were passed here during the Forty-seventh Congress, but the original bills which were introduced by the Committee on Appropriations while he was chairman of that committee, and I say now in the presence of the House that time after time, in bill after bill, this same practice of reappropriation was indulged in by the gentleman from New York at that time in the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Georgia called my attention to the only case in which it ever occurred, to my recollection.

Mr. HERBERT. If the gentleman will turn to my speech on the Navy appropriation bill, he will find there were numerous other instances of the same character which are there cited.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I did not ever expect to reach that height of preferment where I should be cited so continually by the other side of the House as a precedent for their vicious practices.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, you are a good precedent for them.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, if the other side would only pick out precedents of good practice which I set, and follow them, I would be glad of it.

Mr. RANDALL. But there are none. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLS. You are only a precedent for evil practices. [Laughter, and cries of "Vote!"]

The question recurred on Mr. HISCOCK's amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BEACH. I move now the amendment suggested by me heretofore, to insert "small-pox or other epidemic disease," and I trust the chairman of the committee will accept that amendment in order to enlarge the scope of this provision, so that the money can be used, if found necessary, to prevent not only the introduction or spread of yellow fever or cholera, but also the introduction and spread of small-pox or other disease. We are liable to an invasion of small-pox, and I believe the scope should be enlarged, so the President can use this money for that purpose as well as for any other.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH].

Mr. BEACH demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 48.

So the amendment was rejected.

UNDER THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Navy-yard, Mare Island, California: For completion of stone dry-dock, $191,595.

Mr. MCADOO. I move to insert the following after the words just read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Brooklyn, N. Y.: For repair and preservation of stone dry-dock, $125,000.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in the interest of economy, taking into consideration what a private person or firm would do if they owned this particular dock. It is located at Brooklyn, N. Y., the most important naval station in the country, owing to the fact that the largest amount of valuable machinery owned by the Government is located there. This is the only dock they have capable of receiving for repairs the present vessels of the Navy.

Time and the elements have disintegrated the granite work of this dry-dock so that it leaks, and is to-day shored up with timbers to prevent the block from falling.

In this connection let me refer to the estimate of the Bureau of Docks and Yards, and I will read:

For repairs to dry-dock at Brooklyn, N. Y., $125,000.

The bureau also reported it to be advisable, in their judgment, not only to repair the dry-dock, but to lengthen it. That would cost $331,000.

There is a bill pending before the House for building wooden docks at Brooklyn and other navy-yards, but whether built or not this dock should be saved. I think the House will act wisely, and I hope they will agree with me in appropriating sufficient money to prevent this work, which cost $2,000,000 in its construction, from going to ruin. This is simply a question of saving public property. As it is situated to-day a vessel can not safely be put inside that dry-dock, and unless Congress puts it, by proper legislation, into a proper condition of repair the result will be to add eventually to the public expense.

The head of that bureau says in his report about this dock:

A new dry-dock at Brooklyn is essential. The present dock is too short for the largest ships, and the masonry work is in such a shocking condition as to involve the necessity of using timber shores to keep the granite blocks from falling in.

I have also here an engraving from a photograph taken, showing the present condition of that dry-dock. All I have to say, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion is that no private person who had his property in the same condition, and which cost as much as this, and which, in docking its vessels saves to its owner such a sum as this does, would hesitate an instant to appropriate this $125,000 to repair it. And to refrain from doing so is, in my humble judgment, and I say it with all due deference to the Committee on Appropriations, not in the interest of economy.

The matter was brought up in the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I urged as vigorously as I could the approval of it so that it should go into the naval appropriation bill; but it was held, if I may be permitted to say without disclosing the workings of that committee, that it was a matter which belonged to the Appropriations Committee, an estimate which came in under the head of public works, and which was submitted to that committee.

Mr. RANDALL. Why did you put the observatory in your bill then, for they both stand upon the same basis in that respect?

Mr. McADOO. Because it was a new work, I presume. I am judging this item on its own merits.

Mr. RANDALL. The fact is that none of these appropriations belong properly in the sundry civil bill. They all attach to the naval appropriation bill and belong to that branch of the service. Now we put the Mare Island dock in this bill because we had been appropriating for that, and because it was for its completion. But the truth is that all of these appropriations ought to go into the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HERBERT. Upon what principle does the gentleman make that assertion in view of the preparation of these bills in the past years?

Mr. RANDALL. Because they attach to the Navy exclusively.

Mr. HERBERT. Very well; but heretofore this bill contained all of this.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, for a few years back; and it was owing to the practice that sprung up in this way that there have been duplications of these appropriations for the Navy, part of them being in the naval bill and part in the sundry civil bill. But lest there should be any controversy between the two committees, we have inserted what we have in this bill.

This, however, is a matter which should go under the head of "repairs," and properly belongs in the naval bill.

Mr. HERBERT. There is no greater reason why that should go into the naval bill at present than there was in past years.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, yes; all the matters relating to the affairs of the Navy should go there now. The Naval Committee has charge of that bill, and, in fact, I have been trying for a long time to get all matters relating to the Navy to be appropriated for in the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. VIELE. Mr. Chairman, this matter ought not to fall between two stools and be lost altogether. If it is not in the naval bill and you do not put it into this bill, then it will be in neither, and the best interest of the Government with so much at stake will be lost.

I have made a personal examination of this dock, spending nearly a day on the investigation, and I can testify from personal knowledge as to its condition. It is a work of civil engineering, and I know the deplorable condition which it is in to-day. There is a stream of water behind it which in cold weather is constantly tending, through the intervention of frost, to heave it from its foundation, and it is necessary that steps should be taken at once to save it. It is a very elaborate and costly public work, which originally involved an expenditure of $2,000,000. We come here and appropriate for public buildings all over the country. While doing that shall we leave our great public works to go to decay? The Brooklyn yard itself from one end to the other is a disgrace to the country in its present condition of rottenness and decay. It is an example of shiftlessness on the part of the Government which no private owner of property would for a day submit to. No man who had a personal interest in property would leave it in such a condition for a day. I assert that if this dock is allowed to fall in—and it will fall in unless steps are taken to save it, for it is now shored up with timbers to protect it—that it will be a piece of gross negligence on the part of the Government, and we will be at more expense in the docking of our vessels in private yards than the entire cost of these repairs will amount to. If this dock is destroyed, what a humiliating condition it will be for the Government to have to go to private owners and ask leave to dock their vessels! We have been in the habit of tendering the use of our dock to foreign men of war temporarily on this station and in need of repairs; but how mortifying to us it will be when we confess to them we have no dock to offer them! This may fall in at any moment; it can not last until a new one can be built; and I hope the House will vote this appropriation into the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making a suggestion to my colleague. As I understand it, there is no intention of building any navy, and what then is the object of maintaining docks or even keeping our navy-yards open? I do not understand that there is anything to be done to the Navy.

Mr. VIELE. The gentleman is mistaken. It is the intention to do something, and very promptly.

Mr. HISCOCK. I appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs if there is any intention to do anything toward building a navy this or next year?

Mr. HERBERT. There certainly is.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if there is any such purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I have enough to do to take charge of my own bills. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. There is a great deal more weight in that answer, I assure you, than in the answers other gentlemen have given.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. If we are to begin and put in an entering-wedge with the Brooklyn navy-yard, we should with equal propriety deal with other yards in the same way. For the League Island yard there is an estimate here of $900,000. Then there are the Norfolk yard, the Mare Island yard, and so on. And really the Committee on Appropriations thought it was not proper to put into this bill any extraneous matter, or what does not properly belong to it. I hope the amendment will be voted down. If this is to be provided for, let it be in some other way.

Mr. CANNON. In looking at the estimates submitted by the Navy Department I find this heading: "Navy-yards and stations." The estimates under that head in round numbers are about four millions and a half of dollars. For the Government yard at Boston there is an estimate of $145,000; for the navy-yard at Brooklyn, $1,179,000; for the navy-yard at League Island, $932,000; for the navy-yard at Washington, $116,000; Norfolk, $983,000; Mare Island, $396,000; naval station at Port Royal, $4,000; repairs and preservation at navy-yards and stations, $800,000; amounting in the aggregate, as I have said, to four and a half million dollars.

Now, I hardly know what to think of a Department which the first year after a change of administration, in submitting estimates for the consideration of Congress, will throw into the House a lot of undigested estimates of this kind. My own belief is that we ought to have a small effective navy; and my own belief is also that the cheapest, the most economical, and the best way to build it substantially is by contract. That theory was announced so often while our Democratic friends had this House, from the Forty-fourth Congress up to the present time, that it almost made a convert of me; especially since I have given it some investigation, I believe that is the better way to build a navy when we do build it.

It may be true, and I suppose is true, that we ought to have a navy-yard at Mare Island, and probably a navy-yard at Brooklyn. But with those exceptions I believe there is no necessity whatever for navy-yards. I am ready to vote proper appropriations for the navy-yard at Brooklyn so far as its repairs are concerned when the matter has been thoroughly investigated; I mean such repairs as will enable it to repair the vessels there; but there I propose to stop.

Let the Department investigate the matter, digest these estimates, bring in an intelligent estimate, and I am willing to vote for it. But if I am asked to turn a double somersault on an estimate of four and a half million dollars and spend more on these yards than on a navy I am not ready to do it.

Mr. McADOO. This navy-yard and dock are the property of the people of the United States. It is in a shockingly bad condition. The only objection raised to its repair is that one committee should have appropriated for it, instead of leaving it to another to do so. While the doctors differ the patient dies.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations have not the naval bill before them. They have not had the opportunity of reviewing anything in connection with the naval estimate or the naval appropriations. And it naturally occurs they should not be called upon in this way to judge what is necessary for the Brooklyn navy-yard, or for League Island, or for Norfolk, or for Mare Island, or for Portsmouth, and we have not done so.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I can not hear distinctly what is passing on the other side of the House, but I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] whether this $125,000 appropriation for the Brooklyn navy-yard is needed in some appropriation bill?

Mr. RANDALL. We have never inquired into it.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. What is your belief about it?

Mr. RANDALL. I have not any.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I understood about this: That it was said this appropriation should have appeared in another bill which has gone beyond our reach, and that the gentleman from Pennsylvania would not put it in this bill because it was not in that. Is there any business in that way of doing things?

Mr. McADOO. I will endeavor to answer the gentleman's question. The Committee on Appropriations had before them public estimates under the heading "Public works." In those estimates was included the estimate for this dock and this extension. It is the same estimate that comes to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. RANDALL. And the same estimates contained the observatory.

Mr. McADOO. The estimate of the amount needed was just as accessible to the Committee on Appropriations as to the Naval Committee. The report of the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks was before them, setting forth it would cost $125,000 to save the property and $331,000 to put the dock in proper condition.

The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania says if the Committee on Appropriations will put this item in their bill they will have established a precedent which will warrant every other navy-yard in demanding to have its dock repaired. I selected this item because after carefully reading the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks and after investigation of the subject it was clearly seen that this dock stood alone. Its repair was a crying necessity. It was simply a question of abandoning the public property or repairing a dock. There is no other dock in any other navy-yard of the United States Government that is in the same condition as this. Slight repairs are required at Norfolk, a new dock is asked for at Philadelphia, and some repairs to the dock at the Boston navy-yard; but this navy-yard par excellence, as I said before, by reason of the fact of the elaborate plant and the good condition of the shop, is the great navy-yard of the country with its only granite dock. And to leave it in this condition is enough almost to make one abandon the idea of having a navy.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do we understand then that the Committee on Naval Affairs think we ought to make this appropriation?

Mr. MCADOO. So far as the question of repairing this dock is concerned I think they do.

Mr. HISCOCK. The chairman of the committee is here and can answer.

Mr. MCADOO. I think the distinguished chairman of the committee will agree with me that this is a meritorious public work, which should have been appropriated for. Now, sir, the people of the United States are looking to the merits of the question. They want their public property preserved, and I venture to assert that the mass of the intelligent voters of this country will not stop to ask which committee should have made the appropriation. They will discuss the case on its merits, and on the merits of the case as shown by the official testimony it is beyond all doubt that an appropriation should be made for this dock.

Mr. RANDALL. If such extreme necessity exists for this appropriation, why in the world did not the gentleman take advantage of his knowledge in the Committee on Naval Affairs, of which he is a member, and have the appropriation inserted in the naval bill?

Mr. MCADOO. I tried all I could to have it done, but the distinguished chairman of the committee did not agree with me.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I was very much surprised to hear the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations say a moment ago that he had not investigated this matter, and that therefore he was unable to answer the question whether the appropriation was necessary or not. The Committee on Naval Affairs did not investigate this question except in a general way. This estimate was not sent to us; it was sent to the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee alone had jurisdiction of the matter under the rules. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that the Committee on Naval Affairs had just as much jurisdiction of this as it had of the Naval Observatory. I admit that that is true, and it was stated when the naval appropriation bill was considered on this floor that the point of order would lie against that appropriation if it were made.

Mr. RANDALL. It would lie in either bill.

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir, it would not lie in this bill; because, as I understand, it was ruled the other day, when the point was expressly made, that the jurisdiction of these several committees is to be determined by the practice that existed at the time when the present rules were framed. Under that practice, the Committee on Appropriations had jurisdiction and sole jurisdiction of this matter, and, in accordance with that construction of the rules, the Speaker of the House sent this estimate to the Committee on Appropriations. In what I said at first I had no intention of supporting this appropriation. I expected to follow in this matter, as I have been following all along, the lead of the Committee on Appropriations, because I supposed that all the estimates had been examined, and that the action of that committee in refusing an appropriation in this case was entitled to the weight which it would naturally have in regard to any matter which it had duly considered. For this reason, sir, it was my intention to follow the lead of that committee, but if they have not examined the question, then it is for the House to consider as a new question the propriety of making this appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. Naturally, when the naval appropriation bill was taken from the Committee on Appropriations, the duty of reviewing these naval matters properly passed from that committee.

Mr. HERBERT. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania think that the Committee on Naval Affairs and not the Committee on Appropriations had jurisdiction of this matter under the rule?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think the Committee on Appropriations, under the rules of this House, has anything to do with appropriating for the maintenance of the Navy.

Mr. HERBERT. Or with this particular item?

Mr. RANDALL. Or with this particular item.

Mr. HERBERT. That precise point was decided the other day after argument. You can not ascertain what the rule means which sends to the Committee on Naval Affairs the naval appropriation bill, and to the Committee on Appropriations the sundry civil bill, unless you look at the practice which existed prior to the adoption of that rule, and looking at that practice there is no sort of doubt that the Committee on Appropriations has this jurisdiction; and certainly nobody on this floor has had more to do with shaping these bills in the past than the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. When the Committee on Appropriations had the preparation of both the naval bill and the sundry civil bill, they had before them a view of the matters to be appropriated for in both; but when the transfer was made of the naval appropriation bill, the consideration of all matters relating to the support of the Navy went with it. That seems to me to be a common-sense construction of the rule.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not see how you draw the line.

Mr. RANDALL. I would draw the line by not allowing the Committee on Appropriations to touch any matter relating to the Navy.

Mr. HERBERT. Then that committee would have no jurisdiction of matters pertaining to any of the departments.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, from what I can gather, the situation is about this: An important public work which has cost $2,000,000 is about to go to waste and ruin for want of appropriation for its repair and preservation. The Secretary of the Navy, knowing of what he speaks, having information of the necessity of this work, urges an appropriation. No member of any Committee on Appropriations has denied that the work is necessary for the best interests of the Government. The only question remaining is, shall the appropriation go into this bill? The contention here is that it might properly have been put into some other bill. Possibly it might have been; I do not know but that it might have been more appropriate on some other bill. But the bill on which it might have been placed has gone from this House and is beyond our control.

Here is something absolutely needed to be done; and we stop and higgle as to whether it shall be done now, though the present is the only time when it can be done with proper regard to the interests of the Government. The propriety of this appropriation being granted, we ought not to be so childish as to stand here and say that it ought to have been made in some other form. Let the appropriation be made now, if it is an appropriation which ought to be made at all.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the committee I will state that there was reported nearly two months ago a bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs providing for the construction of three wooden dry-docks at such places as the Secretary of the Navy might determine to be most suitable after having considered the relative advantages of the different yards.

It seems to me that, owing to the accumulation of business and the lateness of the session, it will be scarcely possible for the House to consider and pass that bill.

Mr. HERBERT. My colleague on the committee ought to state that the committee was not unanimously in favor of the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. With pleasure. I was in favor of the bill, and will cheerfully bear my share of whatever responsibility may be attached to the bill and to the report which accompanies it.

Mr. Chairman, the statement made by my colleague on the Naval Committee [Mr. MCADOO] is fully supported by the testimony that was before the committee in reference to the Brooklyn navy-yard. The Government has not a single dock within which the ships just completed and soon to be completed can be conveniently repaired. It occurs to me, therefore, that it would be wise and economical for Congress not only to maintain the dry-dock at Brooklyn in good repair, but also to increase it to the necessary size, so as to accommodate our largest vessels.

At present we are dependent on the private yards of the country for the docking of our largest and heaviest ships, and this of course entails a large and unnecessary expenditure. The Government should be independent of private establishments for such purposes.

If the Brooklyn dry-dock is permitted to go to pieces for the want of the necessary repairs, then the next thing in order will be an appropriation of several millions to construct a new one. A stitch in time very often saves nine, and the amendment should be adopted. It is not economy to refuse repairs when they are so much needed as confessedly here. If there was the slightest doubt as to the correctness of the statement of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] in reference to the present condition of this dry-dock, there might be some reason for withholding the appropriation; but there is none.

I hope that in the interest of economy and the navy-yard efficiency the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I apprehend that the reason for the failure of the Naval Committee to report upon these estimates for repairs of dry-docks is to be found in the fact that the bill to which reference has been made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] was reported in the nature of a substitute. There was considerable discussion in the committee as to the needs of the Government in regard to the docking of our vessels; and incontrovertible evidence was furnished to us that at the present time the Government has no dry-dock in which the Chicago or the Tennessee can be taken out of water for repairs. Consequently for the larger class of vessels the Government is obliged to depend entirely upon the dry-docks in private yards.

The propriety and the importance of the Government having dry-dock facilities is appreciated of course by everybody. But the question how those facilities can be best obtained is an open one, on which authorities very widely differ. This proposition which has been presented here for the construction of three wooden dry-docks is one concerning the propriety and expediency of which I have very serious doubts. I am very strongly prejudiced in favor of the construction of stone docks. I have obtained some facts and statistics in reference to that matter which I deem of importance and which I shall present to the House whenever that subject may come up.

Mr. BEACH. The gentleman will permit me to say that this dry-dock at Brooklyn is a granite dock.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have visited the Brooklyn dry-dock many times, and I know exactly what I am talking about. The gentleman will permit me to say that the application of my remarks is this: I am entirely in favor of constructing or repairing stone dry-docks at some of the navy-yards, so that they will be available for all classes of our ships; but it is a question in my mind whether it is desirable now to spend $125,000 in repairs of an indefinite character upon this dock at Brooklyn, rather than make an appropriation upon some definite and well-understood basis for the enlargement of the dock there so that it will answer the purposes of our largest vessels. I believe that New York is the proper place for one of the principal dry-docks of this country; that I think can not well be disputed; but if we are to expend a large sum of money at the Brooklyn navy-yard, sound judgment would certainly dictate we should make the expenditure upon some well-digested plan, so that the result may give us the facilities we desire. I do not know exactly upon what information or plan the amendment proposed by my colleague on the Naval Committee is based; but I understand it to be an indefinite appropriation of a given amount simply to repair the existing dry-dock; so that after the expenditure of this sum of $125,000, if it should be deemed expedient to enlarge this stone dry-dock at Brooklyn so as to make it available for our largest ships, we might have to tear down all the work for which this $125,000 would have been expended and do it all over again. I repeat, that any considerable appropriation for a purpose of this kind should be made upon some well-digested, systematic, thoroughly understood plan, which will secure the facilities we desire.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask by unanimous consent that the debate on this matter be closed.

Mr. MCADOO. I hope that will not be done, as I would like to reply to the remarks which have just been made.

Mr. RANDALL. You have spoken twice.

Mr. MCADOO. The gentleman has made some statements I would like to reply to.

The question recurred on Mr. MCADOO's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 75.

Mr. MCADOO made the point of no quorum, but subsequently withdrew it.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. SMALLS. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 850, after the word "dollars," insert the following:
"For the completion of the coal-shed, boat-house, artesian well, and for flagstaff at the coaling dock, Port Royal, S. C., $4,812.20."

Mr. SMALLS. In support of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read a communication addressed to me by the Secretary of the Navy.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, June 24, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22d instant, requesting to be informed if any award of contract has been made for the erection of a store-house at the naval station at Paris Island, South Carolina.

In reply you are informed that the contract for erecting the store-house at Port Royal has not been awarded owing to the want of sufficient funds.

An estimate for $4,000 additional was submitted for the erection of buildings, which amount would complete the store-house and provide for a small building for the commanding officer.

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. ROBERT SMALLS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SMALLS. The contract has been awarded and the dock is now completed. This money asked for in my amendment would complete the entire work. It is strictly in accordance with economy that this amount should be placed in the bill.

Proposals were made and bids opened in the Navy Department in reference to the work at this station, and with a great deal of pleasure I state that a native South Carolinian underbid all others by $2,000. This work could not be done by any one outside of South Carolina for the amount appropriated.

The amount appropriated for this work was $20,000; that is, for the building of this dock. Five thousand dollars was for the purchase of land. Ten acres of land have been purchased and $4,000 devoted to that end.

The money asked for in my amendment is needed, and the Secretary of the Treasury recommends this appropriation. It is to be found in the estimates, and the same cause prevented it being included in the naval appropriation bill, because the Committee of Naval Affairs were informed, and correctly I believe, the whole subject had been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. In order that this work may be completed and in order that the dock may be put to use this amount is needed.

It is to be borne in mind, Mr. Chairman, that ever since the war we have had at Port Royal a line-of-battle ship to supply coal to our cruisers on that coast. The New Hampshire lay there as a storeship until she had to be towed away, and the Pawnee lay there also as a storeship until the ravages of the worms caused her to be towed away. By the establishment of this dock it will supply coal without having storeships constantly changed because of the ravages of worms.

This is one of the greatest harbors along the Southern coast. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations consented some years ago to an appropriation on the score of economy, because it would relieve these ships from being constantly there to supply our cruisers with coal. Our naval vessels come into that port of Port Royal without difficulty. There is no digging of bars there to make a channel. We have a bar which gives 21 feet of water every time at low water, and 28 feet every time at high water. There is no necessity, as I have said, of digging to make a channel, and no necessity of providing large appropriations in the river and harbor bill for that purpose. We have plenty of water there to get in and get out of the harbor.

If the amount be appropriated it will be all that will be necessary to complete the work at this station, and in my judgment it is economy to grant it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. In order to act consistently in this matter the amendment should not be agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, our coast line is divided into two sections. North of Hatteras there are Portsmouth navy-yard, Boston navy-yard, Brooklyn navy-yard, League Island navy-yard, and the Washington navy-yard. We have south of Hatteras the naval station at Port Royal. The object of that naval station is to provide a convenient harbor for a relief and coaling station. It was intended to protect the supplies of coal necessary to be stored there for our cruisers on that coast. How you are going to have a naval station without having a coal-shed and store-house as a part of it I can not imagine. It requires this, therefore, to make it complete. It is but a small appropriation, some $4,000. I find on page 161 of the estimates of supplies required for the present year that this appropriation is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, and I would ask, Mr. Chairman, that the committee adopt this amendment, the amount being so small and it being absolutely necessary to make the station, on which a large sum has already been expended, fully answer the purpose for which it was designed.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not care to add anything more in reply to what the gentleman states about this subject. I maintain that the proposition does not belong here, and hope the committee will not adopt it.

Mr. SMALLS. Let me state further that there is not money enough to hoist the American flag on the naval station there. There is not money enough to erect a flagstaff to hoist the flag on; and I do not think the chairman of the committee should object to having the American flag hoisted on one of our naval stations.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 61, noes 66.

Mr. SMALLS. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. SMALLS and Mr. RANDALL were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; but before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. SMALLS (one of the tellers) said: I withdraw the point of order; evidently gentlemen do not want to hoist the flag on the naval station at Port Royal.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman must not say that.

Mr. SMALLS. It is a fact, nevertheless.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

No purchases shall be made on contracts executed in pursuance of appropriations made for the Navy Department or hereafter authorized by Congress, nor shall any property belonging to the Government be sold, until after publication of an advertisement calling attention in the briefest practicable form to the facts in each case, and stating where detailed information may be had; such advertisement to be inserted in a daily newspaper published in the city of Washington, D. C., to be designated annually by the President.

Mr. MORROW. We have apparently reached that part of the bill on which the general debate was to be had.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will yield to me, I wish to make a motion.

Mr. MORROW. I will give way to the gentleman if he proposes an an amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. This was subject before I made the amendment, I take it, to the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object if the gentleman desires to make it now.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to make it. It may be a wise amendment, but it escaped my attention when the bill was being considered in the committee.

As I understand it this provides that no purchase shall be made on contracts without advertisement, which I should think was a wise proposition. But it also provides:

Nor shall any property belonging to the Government be sold, until after publication of an advertisement calling attention in the briefest practicable form to the facts in each case, and stating where detailed information may be had.

And then goes on to say that such advertisements shall be published here.

Now, I fear that that will be a better thing for the newspapers than for the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. No; just the reverse.

Mr. CANNON. If you have five, ten, or fifty dollars' worth of property to sell and it is to be sold at auction or otherwise, I apprehend that it will cost as much to sell it under that provision as it is worth.

I would suggest the propriety of amending by adding, "in all cases except where the appraised value is less than $100."

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will see that if the property is to be sold here the advertisement should be here. Now this clause is intended to save a large sum of money annually expended in the way of long advertisements. This proposes that such shall be in the briefest form, that is to abridge the advertisement as much as possible. The language of the bill at this point was given to the committee by the Secretary of the Navy himself with the avowed purpose of saving money.

Mr. CANNON. But suppose the property is of less value than $50. It costs as much as it is worth to advertise it. The gentleman knows that there are many small and insignificant sales of furniture and other matters of the kind from time to time which might be sold without this expense.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no apprehension that anything but what is exactly right will be done under this clause, because it is prepared by the Secretary of the Navy himself and given to me; the object being stated at the time, which was to make these advertisements of a moderate length and cost rather than permit the long advertisements which have been heretofore made with excessive expenditures.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; I shall not insist upon the amendment.

Mr. MORROW. I desire to state that we have now reached that point where general debate may properly be participated in; and as the subject-matter of my remarks does not pertain to the public lands, I think it would be proper for me to yield to some gentleman who wishes to address the committee on that subject.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to go into the general debate until we come to the public lands section.

Mr. MORROW. We have reached the Interior Department, under which the public land clause will be found.

Mr. RANDALL. I would prefer to wait until we reach that particular part of the bill.

Mr. MORROW. Very well.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Pension building: For completing the Pension Office building for occupancy by the Pension Office, the General Land Office, Indian Office, Bureau of Education, Office of the Commissioner of Railroads, Bureau of Labor, the office of the agent for the payment of pensions in the District of Columbia, and office of the Geological Survey, namely: For extending the fourth floor around the whole building, to extend the wrought-iron gallery, and to provide light, heat, and ventilation for the new fourth-story rooms, for record-rooms, and for clerical work, $61,000; renewing roof covering injured during construction of superstructure and painting inside and out, plastering and decorating walls of hall and office rooms, wood flooring in office rooms, tiling and other pavements, vault lights, hall and cellars, skylights, ventilating towers, entrance gate and gateways, supervision, foremen, superintendent, office expenses, and contingencies, $89,000; in all, $150,000. And as soon as completed as herein provided for, the Secretary of the Interior shall, within the fiscal year 1887, cause to be removed to the said building the General Land Office, Indian Office, Bureau of Education, office of Commissioner of Railroads, Bureau of Labor, and the office of the agent for the payment of pensions in the District of Columbia, and office of the Geological Survey, and vacate the buildings rented for and now occupied by said offices and bureaus, or portions thereof; and the said Pension Office building shall be under the control of the Secretary of the Interior and subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. SPRINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "building," in line 890, the following:
"For reconstructing the central portion of the building and improving the architectural appearance thereof."

Mr. DUNHAM. It is impossible to improve the architecture of that monstrosity.

Mr. SPRINGER. I quite agree with my colleague that that would be a very difficult job to perform. I desire, however, to call attention to the fact that this Pension building in its present shape is certainly what my colleague denominates it, an architectural monstrosity. I never pass within the vicinity of that building and look in the direction of it that my eyes are not pained at beholding what is so offensive to the sight and so repugnant to any one who has any regard to the appearance of public buildings.

How it happened that this building ever got into this shape, how the ingenuity of man was ever brought to a condition to contrive such an unsightly architectural structure, is a mystery to me.

A MEMBER. What is his name?

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope that fact will not come out so as to go down in history. I hope that obscurity will envelop his name, and that it will never be known to mankind.

I have been in my time so fortunate, or unfortunate, as to have traveled a little through this country and Europe; but of all the public and private buildings I have beheld that have been reconstructed and patched up from the past ages I have never seen anything to equal this in irregularity and offensiveness to the vision.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Many of us would like to know what is the style of architecture of that building.

Mr. SPRINGER. It must be entirely modern. It is, as my friend from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] remarks to me just now, a cross between a horse-car stable and an elevator.

Mr. ROGERS. Or a beer manufactory.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. It looks like a tobacco factory.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want something done if possible to correct this matter, and I have introduced an amendment, which does not increase the appropriation at all, but which provides that one purpose of this appropriation shall be to remedy that defect, if it is possible to do it—I do not say it can be done. But I hope the Architect in the Treasury Department or some other architect can do something in the way of remedy.

Mr. McMILLIN. Can it be remedied without razing the foundations?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know whether it will be improved if the foundations are raised, or if the top be taken off. I would suggest, to begin with, that the center be knocked out of it; that all the inside ornamentation, or what is called ornamentation, shall be blown up with dynamite, and that it shall be tried again upon a new plan. But my amendment does not contemplate dynamite. It only inserts what I hope may be an effectual appeal to the architect to ascertain if anything can be done for the purpose of remedying this evil. I ask the Clerk to read my amendment again; and I hope every one in the House will vote for it at once, so as to indicate a desire on the part of the House to do all we can to remedy that deformity.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. RANDALL. It is very indefinite.

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not increase the appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. I am somewhat surprised at my esthetic colleague attacking this public building. Now, what are the facts about it? This public building will have cost on its completion, in round numbers, about $800,000. It has 170,000 square feet of office space.

Mr. RANDALL. One hundred and eighty-eight thousand.

Mr. CANNON. One hundred and eighty-eight thousand feet of office space. It is the best ventilated and most commodious public building and most secure fire-proof building in the District of Columbia.

Now, then, let us look at the War, State, and Navy Department for a minute. Take the north wing or the south wing. Let us take the south wing. The south wing, as I now recollect, has 70,000 feet of office space in it, a little over one-third of the amount of office space that this Pension building has. It cost over $4,000,000; nearly five times as much for a little over one-third of the office space of the Pension building, and it is not so well ventilated. I will grant that when my colleague with his esthetic taste rides about the city and lets his eye rest upon the State, War, and Navy Department it is better pleased than when it rests upon the Pension building. But I will submit to my colleague that the Pension building perhaps would do him pretty well out in Springfield, Ill., or me out in Danville.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will my colleague tell me how this splendid building is ventilated?

Mr. CANNON. It is splendid in its room inside; in its capacity to hold the records of the Government; in its capacity to accommodate the clerks and officers therein placed, having three times the room of the magnificent wing of the State, War, and Navy Department, which has cost five times as much. It is a kind of public building I wish we had more of.

Mr. DUNHAM. You said it was splendidly ventilated. How is it ventilated except by dropping a window down or putting it up?

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman would go and examine it he would see for himself how it is.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask him to give the information.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman's colleague [Mr. SPRINGER] has just ventilated it.

Mr. CANNON. It is ventilated by bringing the air in from the outside and changing it in the inside, which is the best ventilation I know of. I wish we had a little of that ventilation in this Capitol, that cost fifteen or seventeen millions of dollars.

Now, I want to say one thing about the public buildings. As I understand, there is no government in the world, old or young, that is spending so much on the outside of public buildings and so much uselessly. I do not mean to play the demagogue about this matter. What we want is substantial fire-proof buildings, at a reasonable cost, that will hold the records of the Government and its employés.

Mr. STRUBLE. And we want them without a veto.

Mr. CANNON. So that I am against my colleague's amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. One word in reply to my colleague. I concede what he says, that this building has been honestly constructed, that there has been no job in it and no extravagance; but I do contend that utility and beauty are not incompatible. I do contend that if this building had been constructed upon another plan it might have been as well ventilated and as useful to the Government as it is now, while at the same time it would not have been, as it is, a standing offense to every eye that rests upon it. Therefore I hope something will be done to improve its appearance. There ought to be added another story, so as to fence in the enormous structure in the center, or in some other way its appearance ought to be improved.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I concur in the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois that that building is not in architectural beauty all that it might be. It is also subject to the criticism which the gentleman did not make, that the architect, forgetting that good horsemanship requires the rider to hold the bridle in his left hand, has made his cavalcade with their bridles in their right hands. That is true.

But the question here is as to the method of spending money that is to be appropriated, and I think that before we make any appropriation for the purpose of changing the architectural appearance of this building we ought to have some plan before us, some proposition as to how the money is to be expended. It is true that in this case, as in the case of some other public buildings, it would not be easy to make a change for the worse, but that is no reason for appropriating money without knowing what we are doing. The building is commodious, it probably answers the purpose for which it was constructed, and, to say the least of it, it has been honestly constructed.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to say that there is room there for twenty-eight hundred clerks, allowing more than 60 square feet to each clerk. There is no other public building that provides such accommodation.

Mr. McMILLIN. In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, I undertake to say that in no other public building in the United States has there been the same amount of space provided at the same cost. Take the new State or Navy building, with enough beauty on the inside for a hundred palaces and enough ornament on the outside for a hundred cottages; it does not compare, as to convenience and utility, with the Pension building. Now, if the gentleman from Illinois is in earnest about changing that building, let us know what change he proposes. Until he does that, I can not regard his proposition as practical.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I will not detain the House very long, but I want to say that while there are nearly seven thousand men who carried muskets in defense of the Union in the poor-houses of the country and more than fifteen thousand of their orphans in the asylums of the country I will not vote to decorate, improve, or enlarge the Pension Office in Washington.

Mr. RANDALL. But you would vote enough money to finish it, would you not?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. That is all that is proposed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think, however, that it is well enough for its purpose. I do not think it is very handsome, but if it will transact the business and get the soldiers out of the poor-houses I will waive the question of beauty, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] can come to the Capitol up Pennsylvania avenue, where his sensitive eyes will not be offended by this "architectural monstrosity."

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be informed, if I can, what further improvement can be put upon this building. I did not suppose there was any architect in this country or any other that would not have exhausted all his ingenuity by the time he had done what has been done upon that building. I agree with my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that if the ornamentation of the building is to be improved it must be done as the Indian was going to have his gun repaired. He said that it needed a new lock, a new barrel, and a new stock, and then it would be a very good gun. I do not believe that the ingenuity of the man who constructed that building can make anything sightly out of it, or anything that ought to be tolerated anywhere within the limits of civilization, until he tears it down to the foundation stones and builds it up in a form suggested by some other person. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. The building answers its purpose very well, and it was not a bad building for the Democratic inauguration ball. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following proviso:

"Provided, That all the floors in said Pension building which shall or may be constructed of other materials than wood shall be constructed of encaustic tile manufactured in the United States."

Mr. ROGERS. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BYNUM. I would like to hear what the point of order is.

Mr. ROGERS. The point is that it is new legislation.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that it is new legislation when you are appropriating for the construction or improvement of a building to say what kind of material shall be used.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that this is not a provision for work contemplated by existing law, but is a change of law.

Mr. BYNUM. There is no change of law proposed. The amendment is simply a direction as to the material which shall be used.

Mr. STEELE. Where is this material manufactured?

Mr. BYNUM. There are three manufactories of it in the United States—one in Ohio, one in New Jersey, and one in Indiana.

Mr. STEELE. The best material of this kind is manufactured in Indianapolis?

Mr. BYNUM. Yes, the best by far.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Why do you not specify that tile of Indiana manufacture shall be used?

Mr. DUNHAM. I suggest that the gentleman add to his amendment a provision that tile manufactured at Indianapolis shall be employed.

Mr. BYNUM. We are satisfied we can get the contract without such a provision.

Mr. STEELE. Competition will give it to us.

The CHAIRMAN. If the existing law permits the construction of these floors from the material mentioned in the amendment, then application for that purpose should be made to the Department. If legislation is needed to secure that result, then of course the amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BYNUM. I do not understand that the existing law gives any specific directions; we propose simply to give those now. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to have the ear of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and of the Committee of the Whole for a moment in reference to the provision in this bill which contemplates the removal of the General Land Office and other offices from the Interior Department building to the Pension building. The effect of this transfer would be to leave in the present Interior building simply the Patent Office and the office of the Secretary of the Interior. It is here proposed that there shall be transferred to the Pension building the General Land Office, the Indian Office, the Bureau of Education, the office of Commissioner of Railroads, and the Bureau of Labor. This transfer seems entirely practicable except as to the General Land Office, in regard to which I ask attention for a moment.

While this subject was being discussed in the committee I saw no reason for doubting that all these different bureaus might be removed into one building; and if it could be done the result seemed desirable. Since this provision was adopted by the Committee on Appropriations the fact has been pointed out upon conference with gentlemen connected with the Land Office that a transfer of that office from the Interior Department building to the Pension building would result in great embarrassment and inconvenience, and probably serious loss to this important bureau of the Government.

The records of that bureau extend back through some three-quarters of a century. There is there an accumulation of public records and documents far exceeding in value those of any other bureau of the Government. The removal of this vast accumulation of records to another building can not fail to be embarrassing in the last degree. These documents have been arranged from time to time in the various rooms during the long series of years since the Interior Department building was erected; have been regularly labeled and placed in proper order. The rooms where they have been placed are adapted to the purpose; and it is insisted by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and other gentlemen connected with the bureau that the proposed transfer can not be made without serious inconvenience and probably loss to the Government.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest, in addition to the reasons he has given, that the Interior Department is a safer building, at least from water, than the new Pension building?

Mr. RANDALL. The Pension building is fire-proof.

Mr. McMILLIN. But it is not water-proof.

Mr. RANDALL. It will be when the roof is completed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the Land Office is by all odds the most important bureau of the Government; its records are more important than those of any other bureau. The Interior Department building is large enough for the accommodation of the Patent Office, the General Land Office, and the office proper of the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, these being the circumstances, I submit this question to my friend the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations: If the Interior Department building is, as asserted, sufficient for the two great bureaus, the General Land Office and the Patent Office (the latter being of far less importance than the former), and the offices of the Secretary of the Interior, why should the Land Office be removed? Why should this great mass of public records be destroyed when there will be ample room in the Interior Department building after the Indian Bureau and these other less important bureaus have been removed to the Pension building?

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the Pension Office accommodates now fourteen hundred and four clerks. There is room enough for fourteen hundred more. That is the first point. The Interior Department building is now occupied by the General Land Office, the Interior Department proper, the Patent Office, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who occupies a few rooms. We propose to provide that the Land Office, with three hundred and seventy-seven clerks, shall be transferred to the Pension building, already under the control of the Secretary of the Interior. It is notorious that the Patent Office is at present so overcrowded as to be injurious to the health of those engaged there.

The bill the gentleman introduced himself and reported to the House adds sixty clerks the coming year in the Patent Office. We take out the Land Office, giving space for the Patent Office properly to conduct its business. And what do we do with the Land Office? Instead of giving 80 feet to each employé, as they now have, we provide for giving nearly 100 feet in the Pension building.

It has been proved by experience and careful investigation that it is in the line of better policy to have all these departments of the Government discharge the duties connected with their offices in their own buildings. At present there are outside rents paid, when we have plenty of room in the Government's own property to accommodate all those officials. The amount saved by this provision aggregates in rents paid to outside parties $37,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, as to all those matters there is no disagreement. We all agree space in the Pension building should be granted. It is a building admirably adapted to the purpose for which it was constructed. It seems to me the many merits of that building, and especially when the grounds around it have been properly planted with trees, will become apparent. The distinguished services in the past of the architect of that building have been of great value to the country, and it seems to me they ought to have saved that structure from at least some of the criticisms which have been made upon it. I do not sympathize for one with any criticism of a public edifice that answers the purpose admirably for which it was built. It is not deficient in point of beauty when you consider the vast magnitude of the structure.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; I will hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask him if the building would not have been as convenient for the purpose for which it was constructed if it had been built up handsomely, with a proper roof, so as to look as well as a New England cotton factory, instead of being constructed as it is with Noah's ark swung across the top for a cover? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Not having a cultured taste in architecture I am not able to discover anything wrong in a building which so admirably answers the purpose for which it was erected by the Government. I am anxious to call the attention of the House to this fact. I am afraid gentlemen are not attaching to this subject the importance it is entitled to. I say that any gentleman familiar with the Land Office, a great bureau of the Government, on account of the accumulation of land records there—any one familiar with the subject must necessarily see the great risk the Government would run by the removal of these records. It is a work of great magnitude to perform, involving much care and still greater liability to derange the records of the Government in this most important bureau.

I insist if any bureau should go out of that building, so well adapted to the purpose, it should be the Patent Office. It could be removed without embarrassment or trouble. Then there would be ample space for the Land Office in that building, and there would be no risks run of the destruction or derangement of the records of the Government which have accumulated in the Land Office during all these years. I submit, therefore, for the present, with the Indian Office removed, the building is large enough to accommodate the Patent Office, the Land Office, and the Secretary's office.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I wish only to say that the Land Office pays rent for an outside building of $1,800 a year. Unless this relief is given to the Interior Department for these sixty clerks of the Patent Office in addition to the six hundred and sixty now there we will have to rent another building. There is Government room plenty without going outside to pay rent for other buildings.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not remove the Patent Office?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Why the Patent Office owns the whole building, and paid for it in its own money.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the Patent Office ought not to be removed, then the Land Office ought not to be removed for a much stronger reason.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no partiality for either.

Mr. HOLMAN. I felt it my duty to submit this amendment. However, in view of the opposition that I discover in reference to it, I do not know but that I shall withdraw it. But I know that a mistake is being made.

Mr. RANDALL. I know the Commissioner of Pensions objects to anybody going in there; but I never heard that the Commissioner of the General Land Office objected to anybody going there.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe, inasmuch as there seems to be a general belief that you could move that great mass of records with perfect safety, that I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Is the amendment withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Capitol: For work on the Capitol, and for general repairs thereof, including wages of mechanics, workmen, and fresco-painter, $38,000.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 915:

"And in making designs for the unfinished frescoing of the Rotunda of the Capitol the following events in our national history shall be commemorated, to wit: The emancipation of the slaves, the restoration of the Union at the close of the war, the receipt of the Bartholdi statue, the completion of the transcontinental railroad lines, the dedication of the Washington Monument, and such other national events as may be chosen by the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the general of the Army."

Mr. RANDALL. I raise the question of order against that. There is no law for it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to say a few words upon the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I will reserve it so that the gentleman can be heard.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I know of no just construction of the rules of this House which can operate to limit the power of Congress to appropriate money and say how it shall be expended. The item in the bill just preceding this one has given me an authority by virtue of which it seems to me I may successfully defend my position on this question. The honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has placed in the appropriation bill a provision enacting that certain bureaus of the Government, to wit, the General Land Office, Indian Office, Bureau of Education, office of the Commissioner of Railroads, Bureau of Labor, the office of the agent for the payment of pensions in the District of Columbia, and the office of the Geological Survey, all of which are now located at various points in the city of Washington pursuant to existing law, shall be located hereafter, upon the completion of the Pension building, in that structure. It is a provision to remove these bureaus of the Government from one part of the capital city, or several parts of the capital city, to another part, and to terminate the leases of the various buildings now occupied by these several bureaus.

But, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to say a word upon another subject, and I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not try to prevent me from so doing, inasmuch as it will take me but two or three minutes. I selected, in drafting this amendment, certain great national events to be commemorated in the beautiful frescoes upon the rotunda of the Capitol because I thought they were events of such importance and significance that they were worthy to be thus commemorated. These events have ceased to be sectional, if they ever were. They can not now fan the smoldering embers of sectional discord, and far be it from me to wish to do so. They are great national non-partisan events. They are special and magnificent events in American history.

The liberation of the slaves. Who can estimate the grandeur of that act? The restoration of the Union at the close of the war, the rehabilitation of the old Union, or the reorganization of a new Union, as you may see fit to call it. It was a Union based upon the Constitution and the laws. Then the other great events which I have named. They do not suggest sectionalism, and there is not anything sectional or partisan in that sense about me; and that brings me, Mr. Chairman, with the acquiescence of the House, to say this: It went far and wide all over the United States through the agency of the Associated Press the other night that I had said in a speech at Charlestown, in West Virginia, that the people of my State of Ohio had some sort of prejudice or bitterness against the people of New England, and other words of denunciation of New England were put into my mouth in that report. When I came back here to my seat in the House my colleagues from Ohio, jocularly, it is true, warned me that my friends from the New England States were feeling something of unpleasantness in regard to what I should have said.

I do not want to spend but a brief moment of the time of the House, but I desire to say that in the speech I made at Charlestown I uttered no language that by any fair interpretation could be tortured to mean that the people of Ohio had any ill-feeling toward the people of New England. I could not have done that, for there is no State in the Union whose early history and later grand development is more interwoven with the men and women and material things of New England than is the State of Ohio. Our land titles, "the Ohio Company's purchase" in the South, the fire lands in the North, and the Western reserve, almost a New England within the borders of the State of Ohio, were all great purchases of land by the pioneers of Ohio who came from New England and landed at the good town of Marietta in the Congressional district which I hope to represent in the next Congress. And there, out of their stores of patriotism, of learning, of religion and morality, upon the confines of the great Northwestern Territory, laid deep and strong the foundation of the beautiful structure upon which to-day rests the grand State from which I have the honor to come.

The ties of kindredship, the ties of common interest, the graves of ancestors, the common purposes of the future, all entwine the States of New England to the great State of Ohio, and he would be a recreant son of the latter who should say aught to sow discord with the former. But I was myself born in New England in the good State of Connecticut. My ancestors from away back in 1670 until 1838 have lived in Connecticut, and many of my relatives and dearest friends live there to-day, and my association with them forbids the possibility that I could have used the language attributed to me.

But, Mr. Chairman, at Charleston, standing upon the banks of the beautiful Great Kanahwa looking at the splendid Government improvement of that beautiful river and reflecting upon the opposition everywhere made in the Eastern portion of the country to the improvement of the Western water ways, I did say that I regretted to state that the opposition to the improvement of the ways of Western water transportation came from the Eastern section of the country, that section, I said, which clamored for the largest appropriations and yet refused to aid their Western brethren in their necessities. Was I right, Mr. Chairman? I point to the fact that of the twenty-six members of Congress from the New England States on the 6th day of last May, when the river and harbor bill was upon its passage in this House, but one member voted for the bill, and that, too, notwithstanding that the Eastern portion of the country had large and generous appropriations therein. I said the opposition to these improvements had taken a form as intensely sectional as were any of the controversies in this country prior to the war, and the record bears me out.

Again, in speaking upon the subject of the tariff, I did say that there was less danger to the industrial interests of the country from the ignorant men of the West, to which reference had been made by another, than there was from the action of the over-educated provincialists of the East. I need not here stop to elaborate this idea. I had said the same thing in substance without rebuke in the city of Bangor before a great audience, and at other points in the State of Maine. It had been said in substance a hundred times upon the stump in the campaign of 1880, and its reference was to the teachers of free trade in the New England colleges. I said this, and if this be treason to one section of the country, make the most of it.

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few more words upon this question of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. The gentleman's ability and versatility is nowhere doubted, and by no one less than myself. He has genius enough here to propose to legislate in this bill nearly a complete reorganization of the locations of the Government offices in this city, and yet he declares by his objection that the attempt to prescribe the form in which the frescoing shall be done for which the appropriation is made is legislation obnoxious to the rule of the House, which forbids legislation upon a general appropriation bill "changing existing law." In this case, Mr. Chairman, what existing law does it change? What law of Congress regulates the form in which the frescoing of the Capitol shall be done? Here, now, is a plain proposition. The subject-matter of the appropriation is the frescoes in the Rotunda. The subject-matter of the amendment is to prescribe what the picture or image shall be.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the subjects which I have named, the emancipation of the slaves, &c., will not affect the judgment of the committee upon this question of order. My point in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there is no law authorizing this, is that this is not a law of a permanent character. It is an appropriation of money, and it is specifically appropriated to be used in a specific way for this purpose and no other, and no lawyer will say, and in my judgment no fair-minded man will say, that the amendment changes existing law. It is an appropriation of money to complete an unfinished building.

The law authorized the building of the Capitol and the right and authority to continue it was an incident of the authority to build, and who will say that all this does not carry with it ample authority in each recurring appropriation to say what form of decoration shall be adopted. The Committee on Appropriations have put it into the bill that the frescoing shall be done. I go but a little farther and prescribe how the frescoing shall be done. Is it possible that the chairman of this committee, himself a lawyer, will draw the line of distinction between these two propositions, the one an appropriation for doing a piece of frescoing, and the other a proposition to describe how the frescoing shall be done.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order will be overruled, and that we may have here the authority of Congress to place upon the walls of the Rotunda pictures in fresco that shall forever commemorate to coming generations the glories of the period through which we have passed, forgetting the sectionalism, the hatred, the bloodshed, and the temporary dismemberment of the country, and remember only the great achievements of that day, the purification of the Constitution and the country by the liberation of the slaves, the restoration of the Union our fathers founded, upon a better basis, a broader basis, the basis of human liberty and equal and exact justice to all men. And the improvements which we have lived to witness, I would add to the list which I so hastily prepared the grand developments in science, art, and mechanics, the triumph of education, the glories of the Christian civilization of the day, the progress of the people toward morality and virtue, and the prouder position which America has assumed among the nations of the earth.

The CHAIRMAN. If the text of this clause were subject to the point of order on account of its directing the removal of a bureau from one building to another, to have made that available some one should have made the point of order. According to the practice of the House, as the present occupant of the chair understands it, it is not the duty of the Chair to make points of order. No point of order having been made, the clause can not now be ruled out.

The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is new legislation, and is undoubtedly subject to the point of order.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

That the unexpended balance of the appropriation for continuing the construction of the terrace and grand stairways of the Capitol made in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," is hereby reappropriated or rendered available for the continuation of that work during the fiscal year 1887.

Mr. HISCOCK. How much money is reappropriated?

Mr. RANDALL. About $20,000. The work is still going on, and all we ask is to have this amount reappropriated so as to be available for the next fiscal year.

Mr. HISCOCK. Would it not be just as well to appropriate that sum?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. And not work on our Capitol?

Mr. RANDALL. It is the old story.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

HOT SPRINGS IMPROVEMENT:

For continuation of improvement of Hot Springs Creek, $20,000.

Mr. BEACH. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read. We have already spent a very considerable sum of money in trying to improve this creek. I think the time has come when we should stop.

There are some members on this floor who will remember that about three years ago very ugly rumors as to the general management of affairs at these Hot Springs were afloat, and this House deemed them of sufficient importance to send a committee down there to investigate them. The committee took considerable evidence, which was reported back at the first session of the last Congress.

